Mr. Chairman, I earnestly pray that before this Congress ends we will take favorable action touching the relief that the Philippine Scouts are entitled to. They are a splendid lot of officers, and they have rendered excellent service. There is no justification for denying to them that which this amendment would grant. I shall continue my efforts as best I can to secure its enactment into law, and I hope that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House will grant to it the earliest possible favorable consideration and thus aid me and other Members who are working for this small measure of justice and right for the officers of the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here is an item—

Additional pay to officers for length of service, $4,506,933.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what estimates were submitted to justify that expenditure?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman wish me to go through the details?

Mr. WINGO. No; I want the gentleman to state whether there was any estimate furnished.

Mr. DENT. The information that the committee had was that it was based upon the law.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the committee took the estimate of the Department, without checking it up to see whether this was a sufficient amount. They simply took the estimate of the department.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. While I have the floor, so as to save time in the future, can the gentleman explain why he includes in the transportation section of this bill authority to purchase certain articles in unlimited quantities?

Mr. DENT. I do not know what the gentleman is talking about when he says we give authority to purchase articles in unlimited quantities.

Mr. WINGO. Under the item for the purchase of animals they may purchase, under this bill, not to exceed in value $449,000,000 worth of animals.

Mr. DENT. This is just the language that has been carried in the bill for years.

Mr. WINGO. That is the trouble. The military appropriation bills have always been, and this one is, like the ways of God, past all understanding. If there ever was a mockery it is the effort of the House of Representatives to consider military appropriation bills as they have been framed for years past. The pending item shows it, and the explanation of the chairman of the committee shows it. No particular criticism should be made of this committee, because they are but pursuing the custom that has existed for years. So far as Members of Congress are concerned, and the information that they have, and taking the phrases that are in this bill, you might as well save a lot of stationery and a lot of time by simply sitting down and writing—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $1,100,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

[Applause.]

Because that is what you do by this and every Army bill that I have been able to get hold of during my short term of service in this House.

Now, gentlemen, the war is over. There is not a man within the sound of my voice who can explain one-fifth of this more than $1,000,000,000 that you authorize to be expended during the fiscal year, which will be the peace year of 1920. We are all familiar with the fact that for weeks we asked, "Where is the Army appropriation bill?" The members of the committee are not to blame, because the War Department did not bring it down here until just a short time ago.

How much seed can be purchased under this bill? It may interest some gentlemen, who come in here like horses out of a burning barn when appropriation for seed is made for the American farmers, to know that it is possible for the War Department to purchase $100,000,000 worth of seeds under provisions of this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. How will they be distributed?

Mr. WINGO. If they were to be distributed by Members of Congress you would hear a howl go up.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in this bill you have an authorization for the erection of electric light plants that may run into the millions. In this bill you will find an authorization and if this bill passes a plant costing $2,000,000 may be erected and one plant which the Government already has will be discarded and put in the scrap heap and salvaged. I challenge you to search through this bill and find where there is any well-defined——

Mr. BARKLEY. Where is the seed provision that the gentleman alludes to?

Mr. WINGO. Let the gentleman read the bill. It is so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, can not err therein. What else do you find? Here is an Army post that has been trying for years to get authority to build an expensive water plant costing millions where the post ought to be abolished. And yet under this bill they can erect a water system at that post costing not exceeding $5,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman state the name of that post?

Mr. WINGO. Let gentlemen stay on the floor all the time. I challenge any man to match me in the attendance on the House and the attention given to items. Let some of these gentlemen ask for information and consideration, and men who are seldom seen on the floor, self-constituted battle-ax guardians of the Treasury, rush in here and talk about guarding the Treasury, talk about contracts without authorization. Where are these guardians of the Treasury when you want information about these items? They are as silent as the tombs of the Cæsars. Where are they? I do not see any on the floor. They have gone "where the woodbine twineth and the doolittle mourns." [Laughter.] But when we pull them in here in their dress suits from the clubs, they come in and say, "Who in the hell did this?" [Laughter.] Ah, gentlemen, you can not camouflage the American people. You are not discharging your duties if you do not say to the Military Affairs Committee the time has come to call a halt. Make the committee go back and say to the War Department, "Bring in estimates by classification and by items. Do not provide for buying typewriters, ice machines, and electric plants in one paragraph." Why, they can purchase, and I have heard it said here by gentlemen who investigated it, that they contemplate purchasing, $1,000,000 worth of automobiles, and God only knows what they want to do with them. Men howl about the expenditure for seeds for the farmers, and yet one gentleman yesterday on the floor called attention to the fact that you are burning up $250 worth of gasoline each day to provide for automobiles for these officers in the city. Where are these guardians of the Treasury? You have got gentlemen on this floor who open their mouths like a nest full of young jaybirds and swallow any worm that the War Department sticks down their throats. [Laughter.]

I for one am sick and tired of it, and I am going to say to you that you are not going to pass this bill by my vote unless the committee tells us something about the estimates, tells us what the War Department expects to do with this billion dollars—facing, as we are, another liberty loan, facing a fixed annual interest charge of nearly $2,000,000,000 in the future, with men advocating a commodity tax, so that whenever a little child goes to buy a book to go to school it will have to pay a tax on it—men advocating that the man who toils and who earns not more than $500 a year ought to be made to pay an income tax; and I talked with a man the other day who advocated that. You are going to tax the life out of the American people, to have the money squandered in bills that are not itemized, and not even the committee can tell you anything about it. It is a disgrace to the American Congress to do any such thing. Oh, but gentlemen say we are tired; we do not want to hear you; we want to go home; and we do not like to hear you talk. Well, you do not have to sit here and hear me talk. I do not have to get this floor by the condescension of any man. I know more about the rules of this House than these little whippersnappers who complain about my taking up time, who want to know how much time I want whenever I do want to get time, and there is not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs who knows enough about the rules to prevent my getting the floor. They do not know any more about the rules of the House than they do about the bill they have brought in here. What are we going to do about it? We are going to vote to accept a lot of it, with no estimates, but just proceed upon the theory that the War Department says this is what they want, and we will give it to them.

If you do not call a halt on this thing, you may just as well bring in a bill and say, "Here is the key to the United States Treasury," and turn it over to the War Department. This bill is for the first year after peace, for 1920, and it carries more than the total annual appropriation for the support of the entire Government prior to the war. It is time to call a halt. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I have read the very clear and concise report of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have heard the speeches of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], and others, and I have tried to find out from the hearings and from their speeches how many men are going to be used in this standing Army of 500,000 men over here and how many of the 500,000 men will be over there. And of the men in the Army over there, I would like to know how many are going to be used as "crusaders" and how many are going to be used for police duty in Germany. If they are going to be used as policemen in Germany, does the United States or Germany foot the bill? It seems to me that a committee representing the American Congress should be able to tell us, as American Congressmen, and tell the American people where these men are going to be. But I see from the temporary headquarters of the American people over in Paris, in the Washington Post this morning, that we are going to use them over there, because, the Post said this morning, the United States, under the society-of-nations plan as it now has been amended, will maintain an army of not less than 500,000 men, which, after authorization by the United States Senate, shall be used whenever necessary.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I will not. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] said they expect to get those men over there. You are not going to get many men over there, because the average man over there does not figure that he is fighting for democracy.

I had a letter from a friend of mine—a volunteer in two wars—that tells of what some of the boys are thinking over there:

I am afraid that there is a storm brewing, and that you fellows in Congress will have some very hard problems to settle from now on. To say that the boys are dissatisfied is putting it mildly. Some things could not be helped, but there is a lot that could be avoided—one thing is certain, the sooner you get some of the boys home the better, especially those who have been over here for the last 12 to 18 months. We are losing too much money, now that the war is over. I would like to say more, but guess it will keep. But there is one thing I want to impress on you, and that is that the American Army will have a hard time living down the feeling created against it. Talk about "fighting for democracy," why we are the most autocratic army in the world—don't think the Germans have anything on us. I have said more than I intended, but you will find more to it than you fellows over there realize. Your friend and comrade.

Had another letter the other day from one of my friends inclosing a letter from one who had been across. He complained of conditions at the United States Naval Station at Pelham Bay, N. Y.

I wrote to the Navy Department that it had been reported to me that men at the camp were "roped in," and that the men could not even "go to the Y. M. C. A." I stated that it was further reported that in case they wanted paper and stamps they had to get men "that pass by from other camps" to get it for them. I also stated that it was reported "they sure are sore at the overseas boys."

I told the department that I could not believe that these reports could be true and asked him to investigate, as I did not and could not believe that men from overseas were treated like men "in a prison camp."

Was informed that the matter would be investigated at once, and yesterday I received a letter from the Navy Department inclosing one from W. B. Franklin, commander, United States Naval Reserve Force. It reads as follows:

NAVAL TRAINING CAMP,
PELHAM BAY PARK,
New York, N. Y., February 7, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Statements contained in the letter inclosed in yours of the 4th instant from Hon. W. FRANK JAMES are due to the fact that some of the men who have returned from overseas have either sold or lost certain portions of their uniforms and can not therefore appear in the designated uniform of the day. Pending their release, such men are placed in the Second Regiment and are not allowed to wander at large about the camp between colors in the morning and colors in the evening. During most of this time the Y. M. C. A. is closed, as during the drill period we allow no man except those on the sick list admittance to the building.

The report that the men at this camp are sore at the overseas boys is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, untrue. Some few of our men consider that the giving of preference in releases to the men who have been overseas is unjust, but they are not "sore at the overseas boys."

Every effort is being made here to maintain discipline at its highest standard as consistent with conditions prevailing after the armistice, and to some who have had but little military discipline conditions may seem irksome.

Very truly, yours, W. B. FRANKLIN,
Commander, United States Naval Reserve Force.

Now, let us see what Chaplain Mark has to say in the "Weekly Bulletin of Activities at all Y. M. C. A. Huts," week beginning January 19, 1919:

[Naval training camp, Pelham Bay Park, N. Y. William B. Franklin, commander the disciplinary regiment.]

"He that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person." (Proverbs xxiv, 8.)

Emphasis needs to be placed on the misfortune of transfer to the disciplinary regiment. This regiment needs no introduction. It is known among the men as the hades or gehenna of the camp, and those who constitute it, although wearing no stripes on the back or ball or chain around the ankle, are known as and are called mischievous persons.

Hence you are asked to avoid this disciplinary regiment as you would a plague, for entrance into its gates brings sorrow and unhappiness. Instead of the joyful task which fills the heart with cheer, the unfortunate one shall shovel coal on the proverbial coal pile; when the call of the jitney comes to this wearied one at 1 on Saturday he shall feel like a bird in an ungilded cage; the job, full of prospect and romance, which awaits the unlucky one on the outside shall wait in vain, for his cries for release shall only find an echo on the walls of his prison house.

To sum up in a few words the misfortunes of the unlucky members of this regiment, they would be: "No liberty," "no release," and "all the dirty work to do." Now, when a sensible man realizes what the penalties are for breaking the rules and regulations he is going to be mighty careful about getting into trouble.

Remember, men, you are not at Eastleigh, of Killingholme, or Brest, or Pauillac, whatever these places may mean to a man in the matter of discipline. You are stationed at Pelham, which has been noted for its strict adherence to discipline, which has efficiently trained thousands of seamen, which has been one of the biggest and best naval training stations in our country.

That bridle on the tongue, that finish to the uniform, that strict observance of salute and of orders in general, will keep you on the straight path, will prevent you from falling into error's ways, will keep you from entrance into the disciplinary regiment, which to know is to avoid.

This is a little bit of friendly advice, which I hope you will take in a friendly way.

The same day I wrote this man and asked him to send full particulars of their discharge. Here is what he sends me from the chaplain of that post.

Upon looking over the next page, I find that the gentleman is Chaplain John N. Mark, United States Naval Reserve Force.

On the same page we find:

Camp motto for the week: A test of character is patience under trial.

This is by Camp Pastor Bowers.

On the next page, under the heading of Chaplain's notices, we find the following:

You are urged to take particular notice of the front page editorial. Read it carefully and let it be a guiding word to keep you from an undesirable experience.

After reading the above, one can hardly believe that the Second Regiment is used entirely for men who have lost or sold part of their uniform.

On the next page we read:

YOUR CASE AND MY CASE.

Camp Pastor Bowers has provided our motto for this week, and it is a good one. "A test of character is patience under trial." Patience is a much-needed virtue among release seekers who are expecting the Government to do in a few weeks what can only be accomplished in months. From a mathematical standpoint it is impossible to release all members of the Naval Reserve in a short time; yet there are thousands at Pelham and elsewhere who expect to get out of the service simply by waving a fairy wand. It just can't be done, and it would be well for all of us to remember that.

Patience is a good thing to practice right now, and the man who waits with a smile is the man known to have character.

(Signed) CHAPLAIN MARK.

I presume when he says "your case and mine," he means that the boys are anxious to go home, and his case is he is anxious to have them stay in, so that he can hang onto his job.

If all the Y. M. C. A. huts print such piffle as that and such reflections on the boys, it is not strange that they are not very popular with the soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Now, let us see what the enlisted man says. He is now out of the service:

I received your welcome letter last week and was glad to see I still had a few friends. I would have written to you sooner, but as I received your letter Thursday afternoon and was mustered out on Friday, my time has been well taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I want to read this soldier's letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of enlisted men of the line, $137,861,770.72.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been considerable reference ever since the bill was under consideration as to the number of men that this bill in its appropriations sought to provide for. Here we are appropriating a lump-sum amount of $137,000,000 for pay of enlisted men. Will the gentleman give us an estimate of the number of men that will pay?

Mr. DENT. That would pay the number of men, 509,000 men.

Mr. STAFFORD. So if there is a larger number than that on the average during the year there would necessarily have to be a deficiency appropriation to pay them?

Mr. DENT. Well, I can not say that; the average pay would be for 905,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; my question was, if there was a larger number during the fiscal year than the average number of 509,000, it would necessarily require an additional appropriation?

Mr. DENT. Oh, I did not understand the gentleman; that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to read a letter if the gentleman from Georgia will consent.

Mr. LARSEN. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his remarks and putting any paper in the RECORD, but I do object to his speaking on a matter not related to the paragraph.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I have moved to strike out the last word. On the same date——

Mr. LARSEN. I make the point of order, if the Chairman pleases, that the gentleman's remarks are not confined to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman has not made any remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is made, the gentleman must speak to the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman moves to strike out the last word, he must speak to the last word, and the last word in this case is "a hundred and thirty-seven million and odd dollars."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole item. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, any part of this money should be used for pay of men about whom I am going to talk. "I received your welcome letter last week"——

Mr. LARSEN. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman moved to strike out the whole item.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if part of this money is going to be used for the pay of these people about whom I desire to say a few words——

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the gentleman can speak to his motion, but he must speak in a parliamentary way.

Mr. JAMES. "You ask me to give conditions at Pelham Bay"——

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks are out of order.

Mr. JAMES. I was just going to get to the part of the letter where this man says that this camp is a real hell hole for the men who are there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must proceed in order and speak to his motion.

Mr. JAMES. I will get it later.

You asked me to give full conditions of Pelham Bay. That which I will say is not about the whole camp but of the Second Regiment, which was a real hell hole while we were there.

Well, we landed in New York the 16th of December and were taken to Pelham Bay camp and placed in this Second Regiment.

You will note that they were placed there immediately upon landing, while the genial chaplain would give us to understand it was for "mischievous persons."

He then states further:

Part of the boys were placed in the isolation camp, and the same night they were made to fill out requests for releases. They were worked on at once. We had to wait a week before they would let us put in a request. We all were about to turn them in when they said we would have to have two affidavits signed by our notary public. That put it off for another week and a half. When we turned them in they would put them in a drawer and say they were "no good," but we would have to wait and be mustered out automatically. We were there a week when they gave us a chance for a furlough, with the understanding and signing of papers that we would not go near Washington, D. C., or talk with any naval officers. The only thing we could see for that was they were crooked and were afraid we would report them. One of the boys lives in Washington, D. C., and he had to swear his head off and sign three or four papers that he wouldn't go near the place before they would let him go. As soon as most of us had in our requests they made our regiment into a disciplinary one. We had done all they gave us to do, and did guard duty, worked on the coal pile, and all that was to be done. So we couldn't see why our regiment should be treated that way.

They put ropes all around the places and would not let us go to the Y. M. C. A. for even paper or stamps to write a letter home. We had to get a chief petty officer to go out and get it.

We went to headquarters to see what we had done, and they would kick us out. They tried every way they could to get a few of us in trouble. When they couldn't get any of us they brought boys from other regiments that were caught out of the uniform of the day so it would not look so bad to us. They were giving us food not fit for a dog to eat, and when six of the boys showed it to the officers they put them on restriction and extra duty for two weeks. They were after us every day to try and catch us in something, so they could put us on report, that it almost set us crazy, and there were many nights that the bunch would sit in the hammocks and ask one another which were willing to stick it out another day.

We had a few of those "overnight" ensigns, and the way it looked to us was that if they mustered us out they would lose their good jobs. I can give you the addresses of a dozen boys, and they will tell you the same story and even more. There are a thousand and one things I could tell you about those fellows. They were sure sore at the overseas boys, and they got their revenge. I am sending you a bulletin, which has a little of the chaplain's idea of us. I thank you for writing to me and being willing to see what you could do for me. I hope if any more of the Michigan boys get in that camp they won't be treated like I was. Thanking you again for your kindness.

Mr. KEARNS and Mr. KEATING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. KEATING. For the purpose of pouring oil on the troubled waters. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I request that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] be allowed five minutes to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan shall be allowed to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, if the purpose is to permit the gentleman from Michigan to read to the House letters which he has received and which can do nothing but bring criticism on our Government, then I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has the floor in his own right, and moved to strike out the last word. As I understand, he has a letter there that he wishes to read and show to the House why we ought not to appropriate $137,861,770.72 to pay men who are in a camp of that kind to which he refers.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not making a parliamentary inquiry. If that is the object of the gentleman from Michigan, as he says, I think he could better argue it and be in order than to make a speech of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will just state this, that no one who occupies the chair is more disposed to see that Members obtain freedom in the matter of debate than the present occupant. Of course, gentlemen understand the rules of the House. The motion is to strike out this paragraph: "For pay of enlisted men of the line, $137,861,000." Anything that may be fairly considered as an argument in support of that motion the Chair is certainly not going to interfere with.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, we all want to get through with this bill as soon as possible, and very few have taken up the time of this House. In the interest of economy of time I move that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] be given five minutes in which to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. That was done just three days ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. That was in respect to an entirely different situation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the Chair, for my benefit, as I am very anxious to obey the rules, explain the difference in the situation?

The CHAIRMAN. At that time there was no other business before the House.

Mr. MANN. And that was in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in the House; and the Chair stated then that he was not so sure that even that was permissible, but the Chair put the motion, because evidently the House wanted that to be done for a short time in arriving at the matter.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed to proceed for five minutes. I trust the committee will help us expedite the reading of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY. Reserving the right to object, let me say that we have been here worrying a long time. It was suggested that the gentleman from Michigan might put this in the RECORD. We have heard so many letters read. Would it not answer every purpose, and can not the gentleman yield that much to the comfort and feelings of the House?

Mr. JAMES. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that when they ask for discharge papers the soldiers have to make an affidavit to the fact that they will not see the Members of Congress and any officers. And these men had to attach affidavits of that kind before they could get discharged. One had to make out three or four affidavits in order to have his application come here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I presume almost every Member of Congress has a lot of letters similar to the ones the gentleman wants to read to the House, and if he will insert his in the RECORD under an extension of remarks we will all have time to read them before the House meets to-morrow morning or at such hour as may be agreed upon.

Now, I submit that it is not fair to the Military Establishment of this country for letters to be read here in the House——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining his remarks to the pending question.

Mr. LARSEN. The gentleman from Arkansas has spent a good deal of the time to-day in making speeches himself.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman has already taken up more time than would have been taken by the reading of the letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia object?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes; I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman who has the floor [Mr. JAMES] moves to strike out the last word of the item covering the pay of enlisted men. He has some letters in regard to enlisted men. He has the right to read what he has there on the proposition, on an item providing for enlistment. A mere tyro in parliamentary law would not deny that he could do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is just in the interest of saving time.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make that point of order. When I was up I knew that my proposition was out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-five gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENT. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. DENT and Mr. DARROW to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 67.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to rise. A quorum is not present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Almon	Borland	Caldwell	Classon
Ashbrook	Britten	Cantrill	Claypool

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 15835, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 247 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assigns the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to preside for the rest of the evening, and assigns the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to preside to-morrow morning until I can get back from the State Department. The committee will resume its session.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan had the floor at the time the point of no quorum was made. If he does not desire to resume the floor the Clerk will read.

For pay of enlisted men of the Staff Corps and departments, $61,534,421.28.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I do not recall that any prior appropriation bill appropriated for enlisted men in departments. I know there are a great many men who are being used in the departments for clerical services, and it has been the effort of the legislative subcommittee to correct that.

Mr. DENT. I can settle the gentleman's trouble by moving to strike out the words "and departments." I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENT: Page 16, line 14, strike out the words "and departments."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the number of enlisted men who are detailed for service with the Staff Corps? Here we are providing over $61,000,000 for the enlisted men of the Staff Corps.

Mr. DENT. Yes; I can give the gentleman that, but I do not recall the figures right now. They were given in the hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. What corps are included in the designation "Staff Corps"?

Mr. DENT. The Corps of Engineers, the Medical Corps, the Signal Corps, the Adjutant General's office, the Quartermaster Corps——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not give the amount of appropriation that was carried prior to our entrance into the war for these respective services?

Mr. DENT. The clerk of the committee has the bill here. I can give the gentleman the figures by looking it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service to enlisted men, $5,055,126: Provided, That the provisions of section 10 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, in so far as it increases the pay of the enlisted men of the Army, be, and the same hereby are, continued in force and effect from and after the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph and wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the interpretation under the conscription act about the wording that this increased salary, which was carried by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], of $15 additional to the regular pay should continue in effect until the termination of the emergency. Will the gentleman inform the House as to what the hearings disclose as to how long this increased pay to our enlisted and inducted force will continue under that phraseology?

Mr. DENT. I really do not understand the gentleman. I will have to ask him to repeat that, because there is so much confusion.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have here a paragraph providing for making permanent the temporary provision to increase the pay of the enlisted men, which under the draft act was to continue only until the termination of the emergency. I am asking the gentleman whether he can inform us as to when it will be considered that the emergency is terminated and this bonus of $15 will end?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is asking me a legal proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know whether it means until the treaty of peace is signed or whether it means a certain time after that.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is asking me a legal question which he or any other good lawyer can answer as well as I can.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought perhaps the hearings had disclosed the answer when it was presented for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman knows that in no hearings would they settle a legal proposition like that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Judge Advocate of the Army might construe it in making a request for the continuance of this increase of pay.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman does not expect me to answer a legal question. It is not a question of fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that perhaps there should be some increase of pay as was originally provided to continue while the temporary force is in existence, but I do not think we are in a position to burden the Government with an annual expense of $50,000,000 or $75,000,000 before we know what the conditions are really going to be.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that the War Department has been construing the end of the existing emergency as happening four months after the definitive terms of the treaty of peace are proclaimed.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the information I desired. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it is a proper time, under the present conditions of the Treasury, to raise the pay of the soldier force as was provided merely for the duration of the war. This will cast a burden on the Government of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 annually. We are getting men in the Navy at the rate of 1,600 a week, and everybody recognizes that there is a business depression throughout the country. Men are seeking employment and can not find it. I think it a good time to postpone the raising of pay until we know more about the conditions, and I make the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. DENT. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 17, at the top of the page insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, immediately upon the approval of this act, to discharge from the military service any soldier or enlisted man who was drafted or enlisted for the duration of the war with Germany upon the application of such drafted or enlisted man supported by his own affidavit upon any one or more of the following grounds:

"1. Dependents at home wholly dependent upon his labor or assistance.

"2. In all cases where the United States is now paying dependents a family allowance.

"3. To those soldiers who at the time of entering the military service were engaged exclusively in agriculture for a livelihood."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the point of order is going to be made, I do not care to argue it unless we can have a vote on it.

Mr. DENT. I make the point of order. I think that we have taken care of that by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. If this amendment is germane to the bill and in order, it would be so under the subdivision 2 of Rule XXI, under what is commonly known as the Holman rule. That rule is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling made by the present occupant of the chair, on page 507 of the Manual:

There are a few general principles heretofore announced for the interpretation of the Holman rule proper to be stated in this connection. I quote again from Mr. Chairman Wilson, concurring with Speaker Kerr.

The purpose of the rule (the Holman rule) is most beneficent and proper, and it should have a liberal construction in the interest of retrenchment.

The Chair will further say that it is not enough for the Chair to think that an amendment may reduce expenses, or that it is likely to reduce expenditures.

The precedents say in this connection that the amendment, being in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate ex proprio vigore to effect a reduction of expenditures. The reduction must appear as a necessary result—that is, it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment would operate of its own force to effect a reduction. But it is not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established by the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. The result must be a necessary result—not a conjectural result or a problematical result.

In the spirit of that decision, it seems to me—construing it liberally for the purpose of securing retrenchment in expenditures—that the Chair would take notice of the fact that there are hundreds and thousands of men in the Army still in the service, seeking to be discharged by this amendment, who have dependents at home, though I do not know whether it is the rule here that the Chair takes judicial notice of parliamentary situations or of existing law. It must be apparent to the Chair, however, that there are thousands of men in the Army now seeking to be covered by this amendment who are the beneficiaries of family allowances, and that a number of them were engaged in agriculture at the time of their enlistment in the service. In view of the liberal spirit which the Chair said on a former occasion should be invoked, it seems to me that under these decisions, and under the two precedents with reference to striking men from the pension rolls and reducing the number of Cavalry regiments in the Army, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, all that I would like to say on this proposition is to ask the gentleman to what section this is germane?

Mr. BANKHEAD. To the section just read, respecting the pay of enlisted men.

Mr. DENT. But that has been stricken out on a point of order. That is the whole proposition. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it is germane as the general paragraph of the bill, because the Chair will remember that in the construction of the Holman rule it is said that it relates to any item of the bill, wherever it may be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recollects very well the ruling cited by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. It was a ruling made in connection with the Army appropriation bill about eight years ago, and the Chair thinks the principles announced in that ruling are sound.

Referring to the ruling, it will be noted that it announces that the operation of the amendment must necessarily reduce expenses, not theoretically reduce them, not make it highly probable or likely that they will be reduced, but that sufficiently and necessarily by its own force it will operate a reduction of expenditures. It is not necessary, however, to show that that reduction would be $1,000, or $5,000, or any particular indicated amount. The amendment under consideration gives discretion to certain officials. It does not effect an automatic or certain reduction of the Army. The cases cited by the gentleman, to wit, of the Cavalry regiments, and the pension cases, were cases where a definite elimination was effected. No power of discretion was given to any official in the Pension Bureau, but certain names were stricken from the pension rolls. That was true, too, in the case of the Cavalry regiments. They were eliminated, and while one might not be able to figure to the last dollar what the reduction would be, of necessity the elimination of several Cavalry regiments would effect a reduction in the general cost of the Army. On this case discretion is given to certain officials.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I direct the Secretary of War shall do certain things.

The CHAIRMAN. If this amendment means that when a soldier files the affidavits referred to there is no discretion left in the superior officers, but that automatically the soldier filing the affidavits must be discharged——

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the purpose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand the amendment. The Chair does not understand that the superior officers are to be left without discretion and that the filing of the affidavits will effect an automatic discharge. If the gentleman will so word his amendment as to give it that effect, namely, that when a soldier files his affidavits thereupon, ipso facto he will be discharged, the Chair would have no difficulty in finding that the amendment in that form would effect a reduction in expenses and therefore would be in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not desire to offer the amendment in the attitude suggested, but I thought the language made it a mandatory duty to the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand the amendment. As he understands the amendment, it leaves discretion in the official with whom the papers shall be filed. If the Chair properly interprets the amendment, then these applications for discharge will be passed on by officials having authority to approve or deny the leave. It is not possible for the Chair to forecast how that discretion will be exercised, and therefore there is too much of the problematical about the results of the amendment to justify the Chair in saying that of necessity this amendment will necessarily operate to reduce expenses.

The Chair considers that a ruling sustaining the point of order comes within the principles announced in the ruling cited and is in conformity therewith. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seventeen clerks, at $1,200 each per annum, $20,400.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It appears that this clerical force is being increased apparently over what was provided during the emergency. Is that so?

Mr. DENT. No; on the contrary, the clerical force, or rather the committee agreed to the clerical force as of the appropriation bill of 1917 with one exception, that during the war we did increase; no, not even that; it is the same.

Mr. WALSH. As prewar?

Mr. DENT. We continued the provisions of the appropriation act of 1917.

Mr. WALSH. They are the same practically as they carried before?

Mr. DENT. Yes; in the appropriation act of 1917. That is what the committee agreed to.

Eleven clerks, at $1,800 each per annum, $19,800.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how he expects to demobilize the Army with 170 Army field clerks, when The Adjutant General asked for 1,200, based on an Army of 500,000 men?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that I think we will have to offer an amendment to that. I have a letter from the Chief of Staff.

Mr. SIEGEL. We have reached that point now. I suggest that we pass over the section, or at least pass line 17 to line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. DENT. I will ask consent that it be temporarily passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York was speaking of Army field clerks. A little while ago I had a very distressing case of an Army field clerk, I think located up here at Hoboken or New York or some seaport town, who was asking for his discharge, and The Adjutant General informed me that they could not discharge him; that they had to have somebody to do that work, and that an order had been issued of some sort forbidding them to put anybody in his place. Does the gentleman know anything about such an order as that?

Mr. DENT. I do not.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that an order was issued at the port of debarkation, which is Hoboken, to the effect that no man should be discharged there until some orders came from Washington in each particular case. I have seen the order. I have read it, and the reason for it was that Gen. Pershing had cabled over several weeks ago asking for additional Army field clerks; that he needed them on the other side, and they had declined to return any Army field clerks from Europe, regardless of their condition, because they needed them badly.

Mr. MANN. Well, the case I had occurred, I think, in December—more than two or three weeks ago—and I might add that I could not find anyone around the War Department who would defend the order that had been issued. Yet there it stood; nobody defended it; everybody said it was a wicked proposition.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not. I do not want the gentleman to understand I am defending the order.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the gentleman from New York, but I am talking about the War Department.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will say this, however, in justice to the men at the port of debarkation, that they are handling at that place one of the biggest jobs that has ever confronted any man. Men are coming back to that port in thousands, and they have not a sufficient number of the Army field clerks to check up the men and their belongings. They can not do the work there properly, because they can not get more field clerks; because under the law you can not employ any more than you have at the present time. I say this in justice to Gen. David C. Shanks, Col. Watts, Maj. Robbins, Capt. Townsend, and the other officers and men at Hoboken, who are working untiringly to facilitate the landing and movement of the returning troops. They deserve credit and should receive it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay while on foreign service, $8,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to know of the committee why this item is increased over the same item for last year, during the war, providing for the same number of clerks and employees that you had in the appropriation bill for 1918? What is the necessity for the increase?

Mr. DENT. I did not understand the query exactly. Does the gentleman wish to know why it is increased over the appropriation of last year?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I have just asked that the item be passed for the present in order to look into a letter which I have just received from the General Staff on the subject.

Mr. WINGO. I thought that was the paragraph at the bottom of page 18. I understood you had the question of numbers passed. You have the same number that you had for 1918.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman refer to additional pay for those on foreign duty?

Mr. WINGO. Additional pay and additional commutation.

Mr. DENT. It is a pure guess. That is all it is. If the gentleman wants to strike it out, he can do so. We can not tell exactly.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the men who have been on the other side have been increased.

Mr. WINGO. Why the increase in the other item in commutation of quarters?

Mr. FIELDS. The statute provides for pay for foreign service.

Mr. WINGO. You have items for the same number of men and the same item and the same amount as in war times.

Mr. FIELDS. The men are still there.

Mr. WINGO. There is no doubt that the same number of men are still there. Why increase this item? Are their quarters enlarged?

Mr. FIELDS. There are more men than at the time the appropriation was made.

Mr. WINGO. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Identically the same number is carried. I have both bills before me. The appropriation of 1918 and the present bill have the same item. Of course, if the gentlemen have no information, I will withdraw my pro forma amendment and pass on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and eight for field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, $76,800: Provided, That said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve: Provided fur- ther, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and direct the attention of the gentleman to the word "eight" in line 4.

Mr. DENT. I was just about to offer an amendment on line 4, page 18, to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "light."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 4, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "light."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, what is this last proviso? What is the purpose of it? It says:

That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of tactical divisions, military departments, brigades, service schools, and office of the Chief of Staff shall be assigned to duty in any bureau of the War Department.

Mr. DENT. This was in the law for some time, and the purpose of it is plainly expressed in the language itself. It is to keep these bureau chiefs from assigning the men to work for them.

Mr. WALSH. That means that a clerk that is assigned to the office of the Chief of Staff can not be assigned to the office of The Adjutant General or of the Assistant Secretary of War?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. If the gentleman will allow me, the clerks in The Adjutant General's office and the other offices are provided in the legislative appropriation bill. The Army appropriation bill provides for the clerks in the tactical divisions or the various divisions, and also the clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff. The purpose of this is to prevent such clerks from being transferred into other branches of the War Department and paid out of this fund.

Mr. WALSH. Uniformed clerks are not provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, are they?

Mr. KAHN. No. Uniformed clerks are not provided. Civilian clerks are provided.

Mr. WALSH. This only applies to the field clerks?

Mr. KAHN. No; this applies to the clerks, say, at department headquarters in Chicago, department headquarters in San Francisco, or department headquarters in New York, or clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff here in Washington. They are the only clerks that this committee appropriates for. And the purpose is that the clerks from other branches of the War Department shall not be transferred to these places or the clerks in these places should not be transferred to the various branches of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. It is the gentleman's opinion that such transfers have been made?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly; and this is to prevent them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, retiring boards, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending same, and expenses of taking depositions and securing other evidence for use before the same, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in this item for courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, retiring boards, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending same there is a substantial increase. Now, is that because these courts-martial have become so busily involved and engaged in sentencing men to 20 or 25 years in prison for forgetting to salute a superior officer or some other minor offense that they have got to have a large increase in the appropriation?

Mr. DENT. No. That was another guess, merely on account of the increased size of the Army. You can not tell how much it should be increased.

Mr. WALSH. In case there have been a lot of additional cases to try, as the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] suggests, it would seem to me that, now that the war is over, to give the men who will compose these courts of inquiry and military commissions and courts-martial such a substantial increase as that will rather encourage the holding of courts-martial for these minor offenses.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They do not get any money out of it.

Mr. WALSH. As the gentleman from Vermont says, they do not get any money out of it, but it will keep them occupied in spending the money. I think these minor infractions might be taken care of otherwise.

Mr. WINGO. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it also includes military commissions, and the words "military commissions" as used in the Army do not always mean inquiries and courts-martial.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, the amount of money set opposite that item must necessarily be a guess; but that item is predicated upon a condition of affairs that may be expected to exist at the end of the war, involving several millions of soldiers and involving many activities on both sides of the ocean. Nobody can know what the normal expenditure will be, but it is known that many cases have not as yet been forwarded for review. They must go through that process of review, and the completion of the records and the assembling of the papers generally will take a great amount of labor.

Now, so far as its being an inducement to Army officers to hold courts-martial, I do not think any officer ever solicits the job, and nobody who has ever sat on a court-martial wants to do it again.

Mr. WALSH. Why is that?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Because it is a disagreeable and onerous duty, apart from the natural functions of a military officer. It is a disagreeable task, and the officer does not like to perform it. I do not think there is any inducement in the Army itself to call men to try to get service on courts-martial.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state how they set this machinery in motion whereby a man is sentenced for 20 or 25 years for some minor infraction of the military regulations? How is that set in motion? Is it not set in motion by some officer who will have something to do with the court-martial?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It can be set in motion by any responsible officer who makes complaint.

Mr. CRAGO. But he can not be a part of the court-martial.

Mr. WALSH. He can not be a part of the court-martial, but he becomes a part of the machinery that prosecutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There is an analogy in that to cases in civil life. Every man who makes a sufficient complaint in civil life starts a case in the courts, and it is the same way in the Army, and that is a matter that no law can prevent.

Mr. WALSH. After that machinery is started is there any way that the proceedings can be terminated, where the man against whom the complaint is made can be simply reprimanded or be deprived of his liberty for a little time, or has that to be gone through with and wind up with these unusual and unjust punishments?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It all depends upon the character of the offense, and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], sitting near me, says it is like any other machinery in court in civil life; it has to go through to some determination. If the respondent is found guilty——

Mr. WALSH. He may be compelled to plead guilty.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentlemen will give the House the benefit of the colloquy that is going on over there.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If he is found guilty and sentenced, and the sentence is above a certain grade, it has to be reviewed. It is not a question of appeal so much, but certain things have to go up to appeal, and a death sentence in particular has to go up to the Commander in Chief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion some time ago to make a little investigation in regard to the work that is being done in the office of the Judge Advocate General, reviewing these court-martial proceedings. I learned privately some of the things which were narrated before a Senate committee the other day by Gen. Ansell, though I did not talk with Gen. Ansell himself. I did talk with him years ago, before he was in this responsible position, and he is one of the brightest men I ever met.

From what I learned I gathered that some legislation by Congress on the subject of these courts-martial is very much needed. No one can believe, unless he gets it in the most accredited form, what idiotic judgments some of the courts-martial have been guilty of. It is beyond belief, if we did not know the sentences that have been imposed in some cases. Here will be two cases, as nearly alike as two peas in the same pod, arising in different places. One man may receive a reprimand and another man a sentence of 20 or 40 years in the penitentiary. And in many cases it is entirely beyond the power of the Judge Advocate General's office to change the sentence without getting action by the President. And it is ridiculous to impose upon the President, or even on the Secretary of War, action in a great many of these cases. I hope that the Committee on Military Affairs in the next House will take up the subject and give us the necessary legislation to do away with the present anachronism, which is clear out of date. When were the articles of war enacted?

Mr. WALSH. About two years ago.

Mr. CRAGO. On an appropriation bill.

Mr. KAHN. They were put on by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. That means that the present articles of war were enacted then, but that they are a heritage from the seventeenth century.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, right in line with what the gentleman from Illinois has said, I do not believe anybody will approve for a moment some of the very inconsistent things that have been done through the proceedings known in the Army as courts-martial during the last two years. But apart from the abuses which have certainly arisen there, and apart from some of the instances which might very properly and with moderation be called outrages, there is a reason for a part of the trouble which ought not to be charged against the Regular Army Establishment. I do not think these cases of injustice were so common by any means during the long term of peace in which the Regular Army in its garrison routine administered justice much as it did everything else, after a code which was generally as well understood in one part of the service as in another. There were not the same opportunities for differences of judgment about the same offense in different parts of the country when the offenses themselves were tried by the officers of the Regular Establishment, more experienced in such matters, and who had learned by observation and by their professional experience about what the accepted standard was in the way of punishment for such offenses in the service. They held to some pretty generally recognized code. But when the Army was suddenly enlarged by the taking in of civilians, who outnumbered its original proportions thirty or forty times, men who had had no previous professional experience as soldiers, and who knew little or nothing of the code and the standards that had been established, were called upon to try these cases. It is very easy to see how all the discrepancies that can now be pointed out and how all the differentiations and all the very unjust practices could arise.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. What is the minimum penalty in the Army for desertion?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not give the gentleman the precise law.

Mr. CRAGO. It depends on conditions. Desertion in the presence of the enemy is punished by death.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], my most admired mentor, desertion in the presence of an enemy is punished by death. Desertion under other circumstances becomes largely technical and is punished according to the facts in the particular case.

Mr. RAYBURN. I mean under any circumstances. I do not mean desertion in extreme cases, but I mean the minimum in any case.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know what that minimum is.

Mr. CRAGO. If the gentleman will yield, I will explain partially the system in vogue. When a man is absent for a few days they usually prefer a charge of absence without leave—A. W. O. L. After so many days this becomes desertion. Now, at first they treated these cases of absence without leave with great leniency, but when they were trying to give the men their intensive training they found they did not have the men there. They would comb every passenger train and every freight train, they would watch every avenue by which men could leave the camps, but they could not keep them in the camps, and in these camps containing generally the best young men of the country it was very discouraging to see how men would forget themselves, would desert their posts, and make it absolutely impossible for an organization to become efficient.

And these officers, National Guard officers, I have talked with were frantic about the absence-without-leave men. They wanted to use more drastic measures than the law would allow. They had to, in order to curb this abuse. In regard to the men around their own home towns, while the organizations were being mobilized, if these men were absent a day or two without leave there was little thought about it. The captain would reprimand the man and try to tell him that he was not a good soldier; but when it got to the intensive training it was a different proposition; and when it got to the embarkation port, if men were absent, then they adopted drastic measures. I think you will find few cases where the officers exceeded their authority.

Mr. MANN. I think if the gentleman will get somebody from The Adjutant General's office to talk confidentially with him he will change his mind.

Mr. CRAGO. I have talked with men who were responsible for the training of these men, and they were training men who were to stand up against the enemy and win the war. I know there are cases where I would probably have acted in a different way from what the court-martial did, but there had to be examples set and it saved the lives of many men in the end.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Did the gentleman read the statement of Gen. Ansell in this morning's paper?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is that true? If it is true, it is an enormity that no Hun would perpetrate on his own people.

Mr. CRAGO. There may have been cases of that kind. These men composing the courts-martial generally were taken from the body of our citizenship and were not Regular Army officers. They were taken from civil life, and you know that sometimes a man with a little authority goes too far.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think, with the process of demobilization of the Army about to be initiated, that as we reduce our forces we ought to increase the amount available for courts-martial?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know that the increase in appropriations is to apply in any likelihood to new cases. My impression is that this is like settling up any row—there is a good deal of work to be done to clean up and complete the records and put them in shape to be put into the archives.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentlemen who have imposed these unjust penalties on soldiers ought to be court-martialed themselves.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say just this: We are getting into a period of reaction. We have been so liberal in appropriations during the period of stress of the war. We have done it unquestioningly at the instance of the military authorities. But now that we are relieved by the present situation so that we can let down a little the result is, I am afraid, that we may, in a measure, permit the pendulum to swing too far the other way, and that we will be as extreme against the Army as we have been liberal for it.

I suggest in this connection, when talking about the court-martial system, that the experience of the country with that business during the last year and a half has been largely created by men, however honest and faithful in doing their duty as soldiers as they understood it, who were not professional soldiers instructed in the standards of the Regular Army for many, many years.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 22, after the "$500,000," insert:

"Provided, That article 11 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 11. Appointment of judge advocates.—For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a judge advocate. No person shall be appointed judge advocate for a general court-martial unless at the time of his appointment he is an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department, except that where an officer of that department is not available the authority appointing the court shall appoint an officer of the Army recommended by the Judge Advocate General as specially qualified, by reason of legal learning and experience, to act as judge advocate. The officer appointed as judge advocate for a general court-martial shall not be a member of the court, but shall sit with it at all times in open session and shall fairly, impartially, and in a judicial manner perform the following duties and such others not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the President in virtue of article 38 of the Articles of War:

"'(a) Rule upon all questions of law properly arising in the proceedings;

"'(b) Advise the court and the convening authority of any legal deficiency in the constitution and composition of the court or in the charge before it for trial;

"'(c) At the conclusion of the case and before the court proceeds to deliberate upon the finding sum up the evidence in the case and discuss the law applicable to it, unless both he and the court consider it unnecessary;

"'(d) Take care, equally with the court, that the accused does not suffer any disadvantage in consequenc of his position as such, or of his ignorance or incapacity to present his own case, and for that purpose the judge advocate, with the permission of the court, may call and examine such witnesses as may appear to him necessary or desirable to elicit the truth.

"'His rulings and advice, given in the performance of his duties and made of record, shall govern the court-martial.

"'If the judge advocate dies, or from illness or any cause whatever is unable to attend, the court shall adjourn and another judge advocate shall be appointed by the proper authority, who shall act as judge advocate for the residue of the trial or until the judge advocate returns.'

"SEC. 2. That article 17 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 17. Appointment of prosecutors.—For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a prosecutor, and for each general court-martial one or more assistant prosecutors when necessary. The prosecutor of a general or special court-martial shall prosecute in the name of the United States and shall, under the direction of the court, prepare the record of its proceedings. Such prosecutor may be an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department. In all court-martial proceedings the accused shall have the assistance of and be represented by counsel of his own selection. Such counsel may be either a civilian lawyer or an officer of the Army. If military counsel be not selected by the accused, the court shall assign military counsel to assist in his defense if such counsel be reasonably available.'"

"SEC. 3. That articles 22, 30, 33, and 116 of the Articles of War are hereby amended by substituting the word 'prosecutor' for the words 'judge advocate' wherever they appear in the said articles, and by substituting the words 'prosecutor or any assistant prosecutor of a general special court-martial' for the words 'the judge advocate or any assistant judge advocate of a general or special court-martial' wherever they appear in the said articles.

"SEC. 4. That if the authority authorized to appoint general courts-martial has an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department present for duty on his staff, he shall not refer any charge to a general court-martial for trial unless the said officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department shall indorse in writing upon the charge that in his opinion an offense made punishable by the Articles of War is charged with legal sufficiency against the accused, and that it has been made to appear to him that there is prima facie proof that the accused is guilty of the offense charged.

"SEC. 5. That article 18 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 18. Challenges.—Members of a general or special court-martial may be challenged by the accused, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity thereof, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time: Provided, That if the accused at any time before the arraignment shall file in the proceedings an affidavit of prejudice alleging specific grounds to show that the court by reason of matters touching its constitution or composition can not do justice, the court shall proceed no further in the case, but shall report the matter to the appointing authority for his decision.'

"SEC. 6. That when a court-martial shall find the accused not guilty upon all charges and specifications it shall not reconsider, nor shall the appointing authority direct it to reconsider, its findings; but the president of the court or the summary court shall immediately inform the accused and the officer by whose authority he may be in custody of his acquittal, and such officer shall thereupon immediately release the accused from custody, unless he is in custody for reasons other than the pendency of the charges of which he has been acquitted.

"SEC. 7. That section 1199, Revised Statutes of the United States, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1199. The Judge Advocate General shall receive, revise, and cause to be recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions, and perform such other duties as have been performed heretofore by the Judge Advocate General of the Army. The power to revise the proceedings of courts-martial conferred upon the Judge Advocate General by this section shall be exercised only for the correction of errors of law which have injuriously affected the substantial rights of an accused, and shall include—

"'(a) Power to disapprove a finding of guilty and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when the record requires such finding;

"'(b) Power to disapprove the whole or any part of a sentence;

"'(c) Power, upon the disapproval of the whole of a sentence, to advise the proper convening or confirming authority of the further proceedings that may and should be had, if any. If upon revision, under this section, all the findings and the sentence be disapproved because of error of law in the proceedings, the convening or confirming authority may lawfully order a new trial by another court-martial.

"'Sentences involving death, dismissal, or dishonorable discharge from the service shall not be executed pending revision. If in any case a sentence though valid shall appear upon revision to be unduly severe, the Judge Advocate General shall make a report and recommendation for clemency, with the reasons therefor, to the President or the military authority having power to remit or mitigate the punishment.'

"SEC. 8. That the Judge Advocate General of the Army shall prepare and submit to Congress, at the earliest practical date, a revision of the Articles of War consistent with the provisions of this act, and shall also prepare and submit to Congress a draft of regulations providing for the procedure of general courts-martial.

"SEC. 9. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. DENT (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon this amendment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. DENT. I do not object to the gentleman having this in the RECORD, but I make the point of order. We will never get through with this bill if everybody tries to amend the articles of war.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order. This is a bill that was offered in January. It is the same bill that has been offered in the Senate, and is a bill prepared by a number of lawyers, and some of the gentlemen connected with the Judge Advocate General's office know its contents. It is not a new bill.

Mr. DENT. Then what is the use of reading it?

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. DENT. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD as though read, and I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order, so that I can discuss it for five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not ask me to do that. I have been very liberal here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by him, partially read, may appear in the RECORD as though read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order against the amendment. Has the gentleman from New York anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is in order. It is germane to the appropriation of $500,000 for courts-martial. This puts limitations upon the expenditure of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On January 23, 1919, I discussed on the floor of this House the question of courts-martial, and at that time stated that there had been 22,000 courts-martial and about 370,000 summary cases tried. I called attention to House bill 14883, which I had introduced and which would remedy the conditions of which the country was complaining.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill before the House. This has already been ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio does not know what is before the House. This appropriation is for half a million dollars for courts-martial. The gentleman is discussing the subject covered by the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I said at that time that there had been 22,000 cases tried by courts-martial and about 370,000 summary cases since the war had commenced. Many gentlemen doubted that we had had such a large number. I also said that in the cases tried in Texas there had been executions held before there had been any review of the cases, and yesterday before a committee of another body the gentleman in command of the Judge Advocate General's office testified to the truth of both those statements. What are the facts? How is a court-martial proceeding started, and how does it work out? The general in command of a division selects the men to make up the court-martial, and the officer making the complaint appears before it. The defendant is usually represented—as occurred in France, where two men were permitted to plead guilty to having slept on their post, a death sentence—by a second or a first lieutenant.

Then what happens? After the testimony has been taken the soldier defendant is not informed whether he has been found guilty or what the judgment of the court is. He is kept in the dark and weeks and months will elapse before the defendant, who is a soldier, will know exactly what took place. We know very well what occurs when an officer is under a general in a division and he happens to be one of the court-martial. They usually are. If the general in command of the division desires a conviction to be had you will find that there is a conviction, and then who reviews it? The general selects the officers composing the court-martial, and if he is not satisfied with the findings or sentence he directs the court-martial to reconvene, and then, usually, the court follows exactly what he wants.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, surely the gentleman does not mean to say that the officers who compose the Army that has just been in France, and who are still there, after trying a man vote conviction because the superior officer wants them to convict an innocent man?

Mr. SIEGEL. Let me say to the gentleman that the records tell their own tale—that there have been cases which have been brought to public attention lately where the President himself had to interfere, where men were allowed to plead guilty and the death sentence was even imposed; but I am not discussing theories now, I am discussing facts.

Mr. RAGSDALE. No; but if the gentleman will pardon me, he has been charging here that where commanding officers selected officers under him to have a court-martial that if a superior officer wanted a conviction that these officers would give it to him.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say right now to my friend from South Carolina that I am not discussing theories; I am discussing facts. Gen. Ansell testified before the committee, and the records down at the Mills Building in Washington tell their own tale. No matter how it may have happened, these things did happen.

The most humiliating part of the story of this war is that 22,000 men were convicted, and the impression I have stated exists. I do not pretend or claim that they were all innocent, but there was a sufficient number of innocent men to warrant a change of procedure. Gen. Ansell himself understood the injustice of these courts-martial. I want to say to the gentleman further if he wants a series of cases all he has to do is to read the testimony that has been taken here only yesterday. I regret exceedingly that under a point of order my amendment to relieve conditions can not be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this quetsion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIEGEL. I hope that the Members of the House will read very carefully the following, from one of our daily newspapers:

Brig. Gen. Ansell's office has passed on some 18,000 or 20,000 cases. The charge of extreme harshness resulting in cruel and unjustifiable sentences was based on a sufficient number of cases, he said, to justify the general indictment. His plea to the committee carried conviction. He declared that the method of administering justice is the greatest weakness in the Army system and endangers the success and efficiency of the establishment. The American method of administering justice is more severe and less judicial than that of European armies, and is fundamentally wrong, he declared.

The witness asserted that the continuation of the system would bring into disrepute the sacred functions of justice and law administration. * * * *

As outlined by the Judge Advocate, the following is a brief summary of the mode of procedure and the status of the courts through which thousands of American soldiers have received sentences so harsh that Congress is called upon to see to it that a great many of them are revised in the interest of mere justice, if not for humane reasons.

Any military commander can order a court-martial. He selects the officers who sit on it. The accused is given a counsel, who may be a second lieutenant who has no knowledge of the fundamentals of the common law or judicial procedure. A sentence of guilty is handed down on the finding of the court. The soldier has no appeal. The Judge Advocate General has no power whatever to revise. He may advise the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff, but neither of these is bound to accept his advice, even when he and every lawyer of his staff are sure that there has been a grave miscarriage of justice.

Apparently the views of Brig. Gen. Ansell were not favorably received by the War Department, but the brief he submitted to the committee was absolutely convincing in fact and in logic. The War Department takes it for granted and acts on the assumption that courts-martial are "executive agencies" to carry out Army orders. The contention of the Judge Advocate was that if these courts are mere executive agencies, the men tried in them are convicted under these orders applied by professional soldiers and not by men who understand the fundamental principles of the common law.

The committee was urged to have Congress remedy a grave evil in the national system. If a court, he said, can try a man for life and limb, then the trial should be conducted along lines which guarantee to the accused every protection and eliminate the personal element and the caprice of a military commander. It is a travesty on justice, he declared, that the Chief of Staff or the President should be called upon to reverse a judgment or lessen the penalty when that sentence or penalty in the first instance was not based on law and reason. In the latter case, he said, it should never have been imposed. In too many instances the court, he said, merely registers the wishes of the commander who convened it.

The witness agreed with members of the committee that the final tribunal to dispose of and revise all cases where the lives of soldiers should be put in jeopardy is not a Chief of Staff or a Secretary of War, but a tribunal independent of these officials, and with full discretionary powers for the administration of justice. This could be secured by giving the Judge Advocate's office not merely power to advise some military chief ignorant of legal procedure and evidence, but power to carry out its decisions. This is precisely what the Chamberlain bill proposes to do.

Cases were submitted to the committee which appeared almost unbelievable to the members if it were not for the fact the Judge Advocate had examined them. Sentences of 40 years, 30 years, 20 years with hard labor and a dishonorable discharge were frequently imposed in cases where the penalty in peace time never went beyond months. Often these sentences were cut down, but the very fact that they should be imposed here in the United States for offenses which were not heinous in view of all the circumstances illustrated, the Judge Advocate said, the weakness of the system under which it was possible.

A special case in which the soldier was dishonorably discharged, forfeited all pay, and received a sentence of 30 years in the penitentiary (a sentence afterwards reduced), revealed the following facts composing the human equation: A raw country boy, the only son of parents in humble circumstances, absented himself without leave, staying away for several months. He returned to his command, was court-martialed, and punished severely for desertion.

Heavy sentences for trivial offenses, dishonorable discharges, which meant a yellow sheet for life, occurred with such frequency that the judge advocate said the very value of a dishonorable discharge as an instrument of discipline had been impaired. The penalty for sleeping on duty is the firing squad, but, as Brig. Gen. Ansell pointed out, there is a difference between sleeping while guarding Government canvas in Texas and guarding a line of trenches 30 yards from the enemy.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] has stated the facts, and Gen. Ansell, when he made the statement credited to him in the Washington Post to-day, showed that he himself was a party to the crime. Any man who would sit by as an Assistant Judge Advocate General and see men convicted under the circumstances that Gen. Ansell detailed must either be a coward or an incompetent weakling. [Applause.] Now, there is no use talking about it. I think he stated facts about it, and there have been committed the enormities and atrocities by men on courts-martial which have been winked at by Crowder, and perhaps by the Secretary of War himself. These outrages are only equaled by the atrocities that the Huns themselves committed. It is infamous. The statement of Ansell shows the wickedness in the War Department among these petty officers, some of whom no doubt were men from civil life who never made $50 or $100 a month, and who tried men and sent them to Leavenworth Penitentiary for years, and yet the men higher up of this department are the ones who are responsible and ought either to be impeached or court-martialed themselves.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I do.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not believe for a shadow of a moment the gentleman means to do Gen. Ansell an injustice. I understand that Gen. Ansell discovered these outrageous things that the gentleman discusses, and which we all believe were outrageous, and that Gen. Ansell is entitled to the thanks of the people of this country instead of condemnation. He is the man who brought this thing out in the open.

Mr. BURNETT. When did he do it?

Mr. GALLIVAN. He did it when the cases came to the department.

Mr. BURNETT. Why did he not appeal to the President——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Perhaps he could not get a passport to get to the President. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Why did he not appeal to Gen. Crowder, why did he not appeal to the President to vindicate him, why did he go on here until he was called before a committee of the Senate to do it? Now, if he had been a brave man and an honest man, he never would have held the place that he held with these atrocities and wickedness being perpetrated by men in high life. You can not get around it, gentlemen. He is a party to the crime; there is no doubt about it.

You can not dodge it. Only within the last few days I received a letter from a constituent in my own district stating that his son had been sent to Leavenworth for 20 years because he was absent for eight days to be at the bedside of his dying mother. Those things are done, gentlemen. But who has done it? Gen. Ansell is responsible; Crowder and the whole bunch of them; Crowder, no doubt, more than any of them. Do not try to throw it on one man, but hold the whole lot of them responsible. Let the responsibility fall where it ought to fall, gentlemen, and not upon any one man.

My son was a "buck private" at Camp Pike, and he said that he would rather risk his chances with West Point officers than with the insignificant little lieutenant, captain, or major that had not made $50 a month in civil life, in order to make a show and hold his position as a petty officer in the ranks.

There is where the responsibility lies, gentlemen, and these little tyrants ought to be dismissed. They ought to get rid of these captains and these colonels and these majors, and these men like the ones my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] talked of the other day, who felt it was beneath the dignity of an officer to allow a private to ride by their side in an automobile.

Let us place this responsibility on the men in high life. Pershing, on the other side, is responsible. You Republicans talk about running him for President [laughter] when he is primarily responsible for the infamies that are being committed in France by those martinets over there. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has talked about the mails not being delivered to the soldiers. Pershing could have seen that they were delivered. He is responsible at last, and let the blame fall where it ought to fall. He could have had fair treatment to our brave boys over there if he had wanted to.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to deliver myself of this little speech that has been in my system for several days. The Huns never treated their soldiers as brutally as some of our Army officers have treated some of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is recognized.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. DENT. How much time does the gentleman from Ohio desire?

Mr. KEARNS. Five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Then, after the expiration of five minutes I ask that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall be terminated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Alabama has unjustly attacked Gen. Ansell. It is my advice that Gen. Ansell is responsible in a great part for the amendment that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] has introduced here as a part of this bill. Gen. Ansell is in a position to recognize that the ordinary court-martial is worse than a travesty upon justice, and for that reason he was instrumental in preparing this or assisting in the preparation of this amendment. And it seems to me that if anybody should be censured we ought not to go farther than the floor of this House, but censure the man who makes the point of order against this, when all men who have made any investigation of the courts-martial that have been carried on during this war know that they are an absolute disgrace to the Army.

I had occasion to read the testimony in a court-martial the other day. There was only one witness who took the stand. He was a major. A young officer was appointed to defend. After the major testified for the prosecution the defense rested its case. I read the speech that he made in defense of his client. In substance, it was like this: "When I undertook the defense of this man I thought I would be able to prove his innocence. I was told by the defendant a story that, if true, would have shown that this boy was absolutely innocent of the charge against him, but when the major testified I would not insult an officer of this Army by putting in testimony the word of a private soldier that would dispute the testimony of that officer, and for that reason I did not allow the defendant to testify, or his three or four companions, who would have testified to his innocence."

That case is on file in the Judge Advocate General's office in this city. That young officer who undertook the defense of this man was seeking a promotion, and he was wanting it through the recommendation of this major, and within a very few days after this memorable speech he got the desired promotion.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Would the gentleman mind giving the name of this man who made this defense?

Mr. KEARNS. I have the name in my pocket. I will furnish it to the gentleman.

Mr. FIELDS. Put it in the RECORD.

Mr. KEARNS. I may later.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman state whether or not that major is still a member of the Regular Army?

Mr. KEARNS. I do not know anything about the major.

Mr. BURNETT. He has been promoted, has he not?

Mr. KEARNS. I am talking about the young officer who defended this man in the able manner I have just indicated.

Mr. RUCKER. Who betrayed him.

Mr. DOWELL. And he was promoted?

Mr. KEARNS. Within a week after the defense.

That is only one instance in many. I have another case in mind where a young officer was defending a man charged with some military crime, and the evidence as he was bringing it out in the trial of the case was pointing to the guilt of some officer. He was asked not to pursue that line of questioning any longer. This young officer refused. He said, "I am defending this man, and I have nothing to do with the officer whose reputation is being brought in question."

And that young officer, because of his refusal to protect the other officer, because he insisted upon defending his client, was taken out of the case during its progress and another officer substituted who would not bring out the facts, but allowed his client to be convicted.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman those names?

Mr. KEARNS. I have.

Mr. RUCKER. I think they ought to be put in the RECORD to show the whole world what was done.

Mr. KEARNS. I will not give the name of the officer, but I will say to my friend from Missouri that that young officer, although he is one of the best medical men in the Army—I do not care where he comes from—has never gotten higher than first lieutenant, and he volunteered at the beginning of this war, and is in France now. He has never been able to get a promotion, simply because he insisted upon defending his client. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not make the point of order and will allow this House to rewrite the law pertaining to courts-martial.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. MANN. The debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is concluded, under the unanimous-consent agreement. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters and of heat and light to commissioned officers, warrant officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men on duty at places where no public quarters are available, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, $4,821,150.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to attempt to defend here any of the irregularities or injustices that have been done to men in the service by officers, but I will not permit to go unchallenged here the statement made on the floor by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] that the highest officers in our Army, who had charge of the men, who had charge of the handling of the men, who had the right to put them in the places of danger and to see that they were taken care of abroad, and who had commanded confidence from younger officers all down the line—I can not permit it to go unchallenged here, when it is charged against these high officers, graduates of West Point, men who have grown up in the service and who, as they have lived their lives, have shown a proper respect for that flag and the institutions that they were sent over to defend, that they would select young officers, inexperienced men, and tell them to adjudge guilty the men brought before them, without regard to their innocence or guilt.

Injustices were done. The record shows it. Mistakes were made, but it is incomprehensible, to my mind, that these high officers, with this tremendous responsibility, would select these men and pack the jury against innocent privates who were under their control.

Whatever mistakes may have been made, whatever injustices may have been done, Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that the high officers of the American Army whom I have been taught to respect were so unmindful of their duty to the flag, to the Constitution, and to our people that they would under any conditions have inflicted this tremendous outrage, infamy, and injustice on the men under their command.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But they did it just the same.

Mr. KEARNS. Yes; they did it.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I have heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE]——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, how much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SIEGEL. I would like to occupy about five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes' debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall terminate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I have heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] speak here, and I was just thinking whether, if the gentleman from South Carolina had read the record of some of these cases he would have spoken as he has. I admire the wonderful deeds performed by our men as much as he does. I just wonder whether he believes that there should have been an execution of those young men in Texas within a few hours after they were found guilty, without a review? I wonder whether he believes that men should be condemned to death, as they were in Leavenworth, and not be informed for months which of the 12 were to die and which one of the 11 was to live? I just wondered whether in South Carolina they do not try and defend men before an impartial tribunal when they are charged with crime?

I just wondered whether in South Carolina an excuse would be offered for the outrages that have been perpetrated in the 22,000 cases tried, and the thousands of whom have been sentenced to 10 or 20 years for the most minor offenses. One of the cases which has been mentioned was on account of a package of cigarettes, and the man was sentenced to 40 years. That is the evidence adduced before a committee of the other body at the other end of the Capitol.

Now, I know that the gentleman from South Carolina, and the other gentlemen here who seem to take offense when the true facts of these cases are told, do not desire to be unfair, because they are all fair-minded men who are dazed at what is being exposed to their view.

Mr. BURNETT. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. If these higher officers assent to these sentences, are they not just as guilty as the subordinate officers whom they themselves appointed?

Mr. SIEGEL. Some people would designate it as a system—the same as a police system which existed in certain cities for a long time.

Now, just a word about Gen. Ansell. Great credit is due to Gen. Ansell. He had a number of disputes about these cases, and he was the man of all the men who had the pluck and the nerve and the courage to come out and say that the grossest kind of injustice was being done. All he could do was to protest in the department, and I will say that it is due to Gen. Ansell's intervention in certain cases as the result of reviews by him that certain young boys 18 or 19 years of age are now alive. That does not relieve him or any other officer of the great responsibility of judging men and judging them rightly.

Mr. BURNETT. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. If Gen. Ansell knew that these Hunlike atrocities were being permitted, and kept quiet about it, is he not just as guilty as the men who committed them?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not think Gen. Ansell kept quiet. I think he did all he could do under the circumstances.

Mr. BURNETT. When did anyone ever hear from him?

Mr. SIEGEL. He has protested for months.

Mr. BURNETT. To whom has he protested?

Mr. SIEGEL. He has protested publicly. The attention of the American Bar Association was called to these serious cases months ago.

Mr. BURNETT. Did he call attention to what the War Department was doing with these cases and criticize those men who were responsible for them?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; he did criticize certain men pretty strongly.

Mr. BURNETT. Why did he not resign from that crowd of Huns there who were doing these things?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not think I would have resigned.

Mr. BURNETT. I would.

Mr. SIEGEL. I would have stuck it out and have seen that justice was being given to the soldier boys.

Mr. BURNETT. But he did not do it.

Mr. SIEGEL. That is what he did against the greatest odds.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is it not a fact that Gen. Ansell went to the President and interceded in behalf of some of these boys?

Mr. SIEGEL. He did. He saved the two boys who were ordered to be executed who had pleaded guilty of sleeping on post, one of whom had just come out of a hospital. If you find the time, I suggest that some of you go down and spend a couple of hours in reading some of these cases.

Mr. FLOOD. I have always given Gen. Crowder credit for saving those two boys.

Mr. SIEGEL. If I am correctly informed, Gen. Ansell was the man who did it.

Mr. GORDON. That is right.

Mr. BURNETT. What was Gen. Crowder doing all that time? He has just been confirmed.

Mr. SIEGEL. Gen. Crowder was busy with draft matters, and he handled them pretty successfully.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, why did he not resign as Judge Advocate and let somebody else handle those cases?

Mr. SIEGEL. I can not state what actuated another man's actions. All I can say is that if any of you believe that the truth has not been told in the other body, before their committee, in the newspapers, and here, all you have got to do is to go down to the Mills Building and spend a couple of hours reading some of those cases. They will satisfy you that all we are asking for as men, as citizens, and as Members of Congress is that a fair deal be obtained for these thousands and thousands of men who have been unjustly convicted and are now unjustly confined. The American people will be satisfied with nothing less. It is the duty of the press of the country to continue to arouse the Nation to see that justice is obtained.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, just a moment on a motion to strike out the last word. I do not think this House ought to undertake to try any Army officer on an appropriation bill, and that is exactly what we have been doing, trying this man and that man here. The House ought not to try them by that sort of procedure, and I hope gentlemen will proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. DOWELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to know if it is not true that when a court-martial is organized a Regular Army officer is usually at the head of the court-martial?

Mr. DENT. That is my information, in a general way.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the statement of the gentleman from Vermont that these cases were all tried by inexperienced men is not correct?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit a brief answer? In the first place, I did not make any such statement as the gentleman says I did. I object to the words being put into my mouth.

Mr. DOWELL. The statement was made that they were principally, or in many instances, all men of inexperience.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Which was true.

Mr. DOWELL. I am inquiring whether the courts-martial were headed by a Regular Army officer?

Mr. DENT. As far as that was possible, that is my general information.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Vermont, while it may, perhaps, be technically correct, there is a Regular Army officer at the head who has general observation and knows all that is going on. He is at the head of the court-martial.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know where the gentleman from Alabama gets the basis for his statement. I do know that under the court-martial law that I used to be familiar with that would not be the case at all. It was one of the provisions of the old court-martial law that an officer should be tried by officers taken from his own service. A volunteer officer was not tried by a court-martial of Regular officers, but by Volunteers. I think my friend from Mississippi, who served 20 years ago, knows that that was the law. Not only that, but the president of the court-martial does not have any more power in the decision than does any other member of the court.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to challenge the statement or apology offered by the gentleman from Vermont for these officers—that these courts-martial were composed of inexperienced men who were not accustomed to the Army regulations. The chairman of the committee has disclosed that these courts, or practically all of them, were headed by a Regular Army officer, and this puts a different phase upon the situation. These, I take it, were not inexperienced men, and the inexperienced men referred to were not entirely responsible for the punishment. If these boys were tried, convicted, and punished by courts-martial headed by officers of the Regular Army, who know these regulations, these officers at least consented to all that was done by way of punishment.

I have taken just a few moments of time because of the apparent apology that was offered for the outrageous punishments referred to in this debate and which it was intimated were inflicted by inexperienced officers. But the chairman of the Military Committee has revealed the fact that a Regular Army officer has usually sat in judgment.

I want to say that no officer can excuse himself that any of the lesser officers have been derelict or unfaithful to duty if he has sat quietly by and suffered these boys to be punished unjustly. I am not ready to excuse the officers even if they did put inexperienced men on the courts-martial to try these cases, because when these boys have given their services to their country they at least should have a fair and impartial trial before conviction and punishment.

Mr. FIELDS. You have inexperienced men on the juries in civil courts.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. But they do not inflict any such penalties as we see here.

Mr. DOWELL. No. And it is the proud boast of this country that every man, whether he be guilty or innocent, shall have a fair and impartial trial, and I submit that we at least ought to have given these boys the same privilege and opportunity that we ask for every American citizen everywhere. I believe, and it is the belief of the American people, that these boys should have had a fair and impartial trial.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. These men that have sat on the courts-martial have had the highest indorsement probably from you and from others.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not care what their indorsements may have been, the Army officers who sat with them and above them knew what they were doing. I care nothing about their indorsements. They have failed to perform their duty, and it was the duty of the officer above them to see that the duty was performed, especially when it came to punishing the boys who had given their services to their country to win this great world war.

Mr. LOBECK. And these men who sat on these juries were men that got their positions through the influence of the gentleman and men of his kind, and they are citizens of this country.

Mr. DOWELL. No; under the Army Regulations no man could get a place there unless he came within the regulations.

Mr. LOBECK. How did he get into the training school?

Mr. DOWELL. By reason of the law enacted here.

Mr. LOBECK. And by indorsements of men of the gentleman's high character?

Mr. DOWELL. The Congress adopted a law by which they were admitted to the service. That is the way they came in; but what I am trying to get at is to show that some one, at least, in the service was responsible for seeing that a fair and impartial trial was given, and the blame should not rest on these so-called inexperienced officers.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one computer for Artillery Board, $3,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What services are performed by this so-called computer?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have been asked that question a great many times and have asked it myself so many times that I ought to remember it by heart, but I must confess that I have forgotten the answer.

Mr. STAFFORD. So have I, or I would not have burdened the gentleman for a further explanation.

Mr. DENT. It has been in the bill for some time. He is an experienced map maker and topographer in connection with the Coast Artillery work, but it has been in the bill for years.

Mr. STAFFORD. You have increased the salary $500 this year?

Mr. DENT. No; I do not think so. The salary is the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it was not the intention of the committee to increase the salary?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the salary paid to this computer was $2,500 last year As it was not the intention of the committee to increase the salary, I make the point of order against the increased salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that salary fixed by law?

Mr. DENT. I understand that it is. I move to amend the bill by striking out the "$3,000" and inserting "$2,500."

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 21, line 8, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payments of $100 to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 22, after line 4, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That the estate of the late Capt. Belvedere Brooks, of Company B, Three hundred and eighth Infantry, be, and it hereby is, relieved from accountability or responsibility for the sum of $173.26 lost or destroyed by an act of the enemy when the said Capt. Belvedere Brooks, in whose possession it was, was killed in action on or about the 21st day of August, 1918; and that Capt. Samuel I. Zeidner, assistant division quartermaster, Capt. C. W. Gaylord, and Lieut. John V. D. Bebell, Three hundred and eighth Infantry, his agents in the transmission of said money to said Capt. Belvedere Brooks, be, and they hereby are, likewise relieved."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which was sent to the House by the Secretary of War and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs on February 3. Doubtless that committee has not had a chance to examine it. The Committee on Military Affairs would not have authority to report such a bill anyway, as it is a private claim. I am not interested in the case. I merely picked this up. The Secretary of War Says:

From evidence on file in the department it appears that Capt. Brooks had on his person when he was killed in action $173.26 belonging to the United States, and that the money was destroyed in the explosion that killed him. This money was paid over to him for the pay of the members of his company for the month of May, 1918. Some of his men were away from the company, and he was killed before he could get the money delivered to them. The officers mentioned in the bill are responsible or accountable for the funds, and legislation is necessary to relieve them therefrom.

I think the estate ought to get immediate relief.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the War Department submitted a great many private claims, perhaps some of them not as meritorious as that.

Mr. MANN. As private claims, that is true, but here is a case transmitted with a bill requesting that it be enacted. I think the others ought to be enacted, but this is not in the list.

Mr. DENT. I will make the point of order for the present, as I would like to look into it.

Mr. MANN. I shall not renew the amendment. I do not think the gentleman ought to make the point of order against relieving the estate of a man who had some money, which was blown up when he was blown up in battle.

Mr. DENT. We do not know how many cases there are——

Mr. MANN. What difference does that make? We know of this case. This case stands on its own bottom. I do not know the people.

Mr. DENT. Very well, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. It is subject to the point of order, but I hope the gentleman from Texas will not make it.

Mr. DIES. Oh, I do not see the reason why some particular person's claim should be picked out to go on the military appropriation bill. There are probably thousands of private claims equally meritorious. It is a bad way to legislate.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. This claim was sent in the form of a bill to the Secretary of War and should have been referred, of course, to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DIES. Precisely. There are doubtless hundreds of thousands equally as meritorious claims that probably ought to go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. MANN. But it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, after all, there is no question about the facts.

Mr. RUCKER. It merely releases the estate from liability?

Mr. MANN. It does not pay out money, but it is the same thing. The money was blown up when the man was blown up.

Mr. DIES. As I say, there are thousands of cases equally as meritorious as this case. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois would not want to lumber up this bill, an appropriation bill, in this way with a private claim——

Mr. MANN. I put the amendment here where we have already proposed to pay various other people in accordance with the law a certain amount of money. Let the gentleman's heart relent; I do not know the people——

Mr. DIES. I am sure I do not see why this claim should be picked out to go into this appropriation bill in contradistinction with other claims, and I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. If it created a precedent, it would create a very good one. If there are a lot of other claims like this, they ought to be disposed of.

Mr. DIES. There may be 100,000 meritorious cases that do not happen to have the ear of the gentleman from Illinois or some other Member of Congress, and there is no good reason why this particular claim should go in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will say that this claim does not have the ear of the gentleman from Illinois. This is a letter transmitting it from the Secretary of War, which I picked up in the ordinary course of business, without knowing any of the people at all, and it is the only one of the kind I have seen. I aim to look at all of them, maybe not very carefully. It may be that there are thousands of others, but I do not know of any other claim like this——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I am not the guardian of the Committee on Military Affairs, and if the chairman of that committee and the members of it want this sort of legislation on their bill I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DENT. I will not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage to commissioned officers, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 22, at the end of line 11 insert:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall promulgate or cause to be promulgated any order prohibiting social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of the United States Army while not on military duty or that will in any way establish or attempt to establish social or class distinction between officers and men or between officers of different ranks while not on military duty: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to officers whose only connection herewith is in obedience to an order of a superior officer."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is subject to the point of order, I hope that the gentleman from Alabama will decide not to make the point of order.

Now, we have heard and are hearing a great deal of complaint from the boys who are coming from France and from the camps throughout this country. In fact it is a lamentable fact that there is as much complaint as there is, because these complaints are, unfortunately, bringing the Army of the United States into disrepute before the people of the country. The people resent these orders, and unless the Congress begins to take action to show its disapproval of such action on the part of officers the people of the country will hold the Congress responsible, and properly so.

An order was read in the RECORD a few days ago that was issued at Camp MacArthur, Tex., which prohibited officers from associating with men while not on military duty. That order was not authorized by military regulations, as is shown by the statement of the Secretary of War contained in Senate Document No. 154, which I hold in my hand. But yet Maj. Woolworth, major of Infantry in the United States Army, and Maj. E. E. Lambert took it upon themselves to issue an order which even made it impossible for an enlisted man to attend a theater where one of those gentlemen happened to be sitting, and caused criticism to go out all over this country against Gen. Buck, who was in command of that camp.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I inquire of the gentleman if that order was not amended immediately after it was brought to the attention of Gen. Buck?

Mr. FIELDS. It was; but that does not excuse the gentlemen who issued it. And I have an amendment that I will offer after this amendment is disposed of that will deal with those gentlemen.

There have been complaints on both sides of this Chamber against the irregularities, injustices, and even outrages that have been perpetrated by Army officers. Now, gentlemen, the time has come for Congress to begin to act as well as to talk. Do you approve this social distinction between the young men of this country who come from the best homes of the country and their officers while not on military duty? If you do, of course you will oppose this amendment; but if you believe that the boys from the homes all over this country, though they may be privates, are as good socially as their commanding officers, you will favor this amendment. Those orders have no place in any institution in a democratic Government or among a democratic people.

I would not interfere with discipline. I would not offer an amendment that would limit the authority of a commissioned officer in dealing with his men while on military duty. But when they are off military duty, when they get out in social circles, I say it is repugnant to the very spirit of our institutions to subject men to such orders as the one referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand we wish to make headway this evening. We are going to be kept in session until 10 o'clock perhaps. Does the gentleman think it fair to continue this argument with a point of order pending?

Mr. FIELDS. I am hoping the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] will not press the point of order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If he does not, somebody else may.

Mr. FIELDS. If he is going to do it I will not discuss the amendment further.

But to the point of order. The amendment provides for a limitation upon the appropriation, and I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that it is not subject to a point of order. It does not, it is true, fix a specific limitation; it does not attempt to; but if an order is promulgated by an Army officer in violation of military regulations or without authority, as this order was, or as any orders of that character have been promulgated, it does then limit the appropriation by providing that no part of the fund shall apply in payment of the salary of the officer responsible for it. And I hope that the Chair will hold that the amendment is in order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and ask the Chairman to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama state the ground on which he thinks this amendment is not in order?

Mr. DENT. I think it is new legislation and not germane.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, if that is all he intends to say, including the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, this is not a limitation on the appropriation. This is prescribing a penalty for the commission of an act, and that is general legislation, just as though he put a penal code in here. This does not say the appropriation shall be limited in any manner whatsoever. It simply says if a man performs an act which in his judgment he thinks he should not perform, he shall not receive any pay. It is creating an offense and prescribing the punishment therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what offense is created by this amendment, or what punishment is fixed. A limitation, as has been often stated, deals negatively with the application of money which the House may, or may not, appropriate at its pleasure. It matters not how meritorious the subject matter may be, the House can decline to appropriate for the same. It can put a negative restriction upon the use of the money which is appropriated. We can not prescribe that money shall be used in some particular fashion, but we can provide how it may not be used. A few days ago an amendment was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole which on appeal was held to be a limitation. This amendment was as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein shall be used unless all former ex-employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions, provided they have received an honorable discharge.

A point of order to this amendment was fully argued, and on appeal it was decided as stated above that the amendment was a limitation, although apparently it was more affirmative than negative in its character.

The amendment under consideration deals entirely with money. One of the most interesting illustrations of a limitation, pure and simple, is found in the canteen case. The language used in that amendment was as follows:

No part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers which contains a canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold.

The amendment did not undertake to say that the trustees should abolish the canteen before they secured the benefit of the appropriation. The amendment did not require the trustees to do anything affirmatively, but simply contented itself with saying that in those homes where the canteen was found, the appropriation should not be expended.

What are the provisions of this amendment? It does not impose any duty upon the officers referred to. It merely declares that when an officer has done any one of the things mentioned, no part of the money appropriated shall be paid to that officer. It may or may not be a wise act on the part of the committee to agree to this amendment, but the Chair is not concerned with that phase of the situation. This amendment is simply a negative inhibition upon the use of the money appropriated. It provides that it shall not be applied under certain indicated conditions.

It does not deal with anything but money. If it is not a pure limitation, the Chair is unable to apprehend what a limitation is. Certainly if this amendment does not come within the canteen case, not to speak of the case that was decided a few days ago, the Chair would be at a loss to prepare a limitation that would be in order. In the judgment of the Chair this is a limitation, conforming to the requirements of the precedents, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, if the point of order is overruled, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the merits of the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the Chair to rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the point of order and held the amendment to be a limitation.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky and all amendments thereto be concluded in 15 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I wanted five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama in this connection how the time is to be apportioned.

Mr. BAER. I would like to have a couple of minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that 15 minutes to be apportioned?

Mr. DENT. I will ask the Chair to distribute it.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does that include the five minutes which the gentleman from Kentucky is to occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. It includes it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We can not have two requests for unanimous consent pending at the same time, can we?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if objection is made. The Chair thought the reading of the amendment would facilitate the agreement as to time, but the Chair will submit the first request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] will be read.

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 22, at the end of line 11, insert:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall promulgate or cause to be promulgated any order prohibiting social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of the United States Army while not on military duty, or that will in any way establish or attempt to establish social or class distinction between officers and men or between officers of different ranks while not on military duty: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to officers whose only connection herewith is in obedience to an order of a superior officer."

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FIELDS. Please make it very brief. I have only five minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask my colleague if he is acquainted with any other order of this sort excepting that issued by the general at Camp MacArthur?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; I heard of a case last summer over at Boston, where a private had come home on a furlough, and a dance was given in honor to him by his friends. An officer happened to be present, and the officer soon called him to one side and said, "Do you know who I am?" He said, "Yes." "Well," said the officer, "you evidently know what to do." And he said yes. He spoke to the young lady that he was with—and, by the way, to whom he was engaged—and told her he would have to absent himself from the hall because this officer was there, and he could not remain. He was getting ready to leave the floor when some one asked, "What is the trouble?" He told what the trouble was. Fortunately, one of the gentlemen in charge went to this officer and said, "Are you here by invitation?" "Yes, sir," replied the officer. "Well, your invitation is revoked," said the gentleman; and that is the spirit of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman has not answered my question as to whether any other order of this kind was ever promulgated?

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, yes; this same question caused the Senate to pass a resolution in the second session of this Congress inquiring of the Secretary of War whether Army regulations authorized the promulgation of such an order. I have not the time to read the reply of the Secretary of War; but I will say to my colleague that there is nothing in the regulations that authorizes an order of the character to which I have referred, and men who promulgate orders of that kind do it without authority from the War Department. They do it without any authority except their own authority.

Now, gentlemen of the Committee, this proposition is before you. You have got to vote on it. Every home in this country will indorse this amendment. Every home in this country, unless it is the home of a commissioned officer, will condemn the order that was issued at Fort MacArthur, Tex. This amendment inflicts no penalty on Army officers. It only says to every Army officer, "The private, while not on duty, is as good as you so long as he behaves as well as you behave." It only says to the officer, "The private, like you, is an American citizen." It only says to the officer, "The private, like you, is a citizen of a democratic Government, and there shall be no class distinction between you, by executive order, while you are not on military duty."

Now, some gentlemen will attempt to argue the point, I have no doubt, that this will interfere with discipline. I am told that in France—and can we criticize her army?—the most cordial relations exist between the officers and men while not on duty, although discipline is enforced while they are on duty.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask my colleague what he proposes to do? Does he propose to keep the officer in the Army, even after we have decided not to pay him, under this proposition?

Mr. FIELDS. That will be taken care of. He will be out of the Army if he does not get his pay, just as you and I would be out of Congress if we did not get ours. [Laughter.] I will say to my colleague that he need not worry about that. If the amendment is written into the bill, the officers will all receive their pay, but there will be no further orders of this character. The privates and officers will get together at the church; they will get together at the theater; they will get together at political conventions if they desire to do so; and will find that the world will continue to move on.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman inform me who will enforce this against the officers?

Mr. FIELDS. Does the gentleman suppose that the Comptroller of the Treasury would pay contrary to this provision?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not know.

Mr. FIELDS. That will be cared for, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio. If this amendment is written into this bill, we will not have any more orders of this character issued by Army officers. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair understands that the time is to be divided among three gentlemen, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Vermont for three minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] invites a discussion of the whole social code. From the beginning in the Garden of Eden to the present time that code has been in process of development by the experience of mankind, and yet no one has given to the world a satisfactory definition of the word "gentleman." When you have undertaken to write into the law that you will withhold a man's pay if away from professional duties he undertakes to make class distinctions which another man can charge against him, you have opened up an opportunity for blackmail that will knock the oppressions of former days under the so-called Mann law sky high. [Laughter.] Any private soldier or enlisted man who thinks he has a grievance against an officer—for, mind you, you have not limited this to written orders—in the exercise of authority——

Mr. FIELDS. This does not apply to military authority.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the officer has sought to draw a distinction in social life between a man and another soldier, a complaint can be lodged formally against the officer, and until it is settled through some court or tribunal he does not get his pay. You can see in this the handy club for blackmail. Then you come back to the old fundamental question that the world, through ages of experience, has never settled—what does constitute class distinction and what does constitute the conduct of a gentleman in social life? You are leaving it for an amendment to an appropriation bill for the first time in the history of civilization to determine that world-wide, age-old question. It is perfectly ridiculous and outrageous and the effect it will have upon the aggrieved, insolent, and defiant soldier will be to put a club in his hand that will make no end of mischief. It is going back to the same principle as is that which happened in the Russian Army as soon as they had a little liberty. The first proposition was to say that no man thereafter should salute an officer. [Applause.] That is what you propose to do now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, should this be written into law in my judgment you might as well disband your Army. Every effort that has ever been made to regulate social affairs and groups of individuals has usually resulted in failure. But as one I have observed the Army—both men and officers—to some degree, and I think it is true and safe to say that the social station in our Army is magnificent and splendid. Now, the gentleman has cited two instances that are abhorent, and upon them he seeks to base an argument.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not yield, though I would if I had the time. Nobody indorsed the conduct of those officers. The Army itself did not indorse it. The Army itself immediately rectified the error, and what more do you want to ask? Let the officers of the Army who are gentlemen regulate the conduct of their fellow officers as they will and as they have done. I have seen privates many times at social functions and in social gatherings where officers were present, and I have had them say to me—and they would talk to me because I was not an officer—"I wish to hell I was out of here; I want to go where I can have a good time with my own crowd!" They were there—properly there—but those things regulate themselves. Let us not monkey with it here on an appropriation bill. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] pointed out the real vice in this amendment. It will destroy the organization and the discipline of the Army instantly, for it is an invitation to every man who either has or has not a grouch or who thinks he has to file a complaint; and what officer for a moment will know whether he is going to draw his next month's pay or not? Listen to the language and see how exceedingly difficult it is to understand, and ask yourself what you would do if you were called upon to construe it: "or that will in any way establish, or attempt to establish, social or class distinction between officers and men, or between officers of different rank."

Class distinction between officers and men! The fact that one man is an officer and the other is a private makes a class distinction, but one that does not and should not interfere in the least with their proper relations one with the other. If the officer performs the function he is appointed to perform and which he is commended for in the law, he would have to violate the very terms of this amendment which we seek to put into the law.

"Or between officers of different rank."

I suppose if Gen. Pershing, or Gen. Liggett, or Gen. March were to meet a second lieutenant, he must sit down with them, for it would not be proper for the second lieutenant to remain standing while the general is seated, and they would have to bob and bow and it would be another case of "After you Gaston. No, you first, Alphonse." [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to differ with my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], but I do not think his amendment ought to have any place on an Army appropriation bill. I do not think the bill should be handicapped with legislative provisions of this kind. Without going into the merits of the proposition, we all know as a matter of fact there has been a distinction in caste between officers and enlisted men, but I am sure that the House at this time, with all of the trouble that we have trying to write legislation in this bill, is not willing to state what an officer shall do as to the particular caste between his grade and rank and what he shall do as to the particular caste between him and the enlisted man. It seems to me that this has no place on the bill. That is the way it strikes me, and I hope it will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FIELDS) there were—ayes 17, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied to the payment of the salary of W. H. Woolworth, major, Infantry, United States Army, and E. E. Lambert, major, Adjutant General's department, United States Army."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, these are the gentlemen who issued the order that has been so much discussed upon the floor of the House. I do not approve of the order that was issued. If a gentleman in my employ issued an order of that sort, I would discharge him, and I believe that the people of the United States, if it were up to their individual will, would do the same thing.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. No; the gentleman declined to yield to me.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I had only 3 minutes, and the gentleman had 10.

Mr. FIELDS. Therefore, representing the people and my own feeling, I am anxious to fire these gentlemen who issued this order, not by virtue of any higher authority, but upon their own volition. The order, it is true, was revoked by Gen. Buck two days later, but that does not excuse the gentlemen who issued it; that does not relieve the humiliation of the men who were discriminated against in social affairs because of the order. I would, therefore, discharge these men from the Army by refusing to pay their salaries, and that is the purpose of the amendment, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Could not my friend include also the names of those officers who have been refusing to use any statements with reference to conditions which were presented in support of discharges, if he does not think that would be a good thing? If he would, I would be glad.

Mr. FIELDS. I thank the gentleman from Iowa, and I want to say this to the committee: That I think it is time for this House to quit making charges at random. I think we should lay the blame where it belongs. We should lay the responsibility where it belongs. A few men should not be permitted to bring the Army of the United States into disrepute, and when they, without authority, commit some act that causes the people of the country to look upon the Army of the United States as a band of crooks, why men responsible should be dealt with individually, and that is what I am trying to do by this amendment. A majority of this committee have said by their votes on my former amendment that they approve of caste in the Army——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. FIELDS. And if I can get recognition to offer a motion to recommit, I will give you a chance to go on record on it, because it is my intention to make a motion to recommit, with instructions that this amendment be incorporated, and that will give the Members a chance to record their votes and their sentiments before the people upon this question of social distinction which the people condemn and which you condemn in private.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I favored the first amendment because I believed there is some social distinction, but I do not favor this amendment because I do not believe we should single out isolated cases and legislate to cover those particular cases. The condition is more general, and it is unwise to pick out two men in the Army and chastise them. It would be worse than court-martialing.

Mr. FIELDS. You would convict a whole community——

Mr. BAER. I can not yield. I favored the gentleman's first amendment because I believe the good old document stated that all men are created free and equal, but I do not believe in singling out two men in the Army and passing legislation only to cover them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Especially when their action pertains to a pink tea and when there is some substantial complaint to be dealt with——

Mr. BAER. I agree with the gentleman. I want to recite an instance that occurred recently at Camp Humphreys, where I spoke at Liberty Hut, and the first 10 rows of seats were reserved for the officers. The men could not sit with the officers, and the boys boycotted the theater the night after it was opened. I think that kind of a thing encourages junkerism and bolshevism, the very things that we are trying to destroy in this country.

I believe that this discrimination should be eliminated in our Army as far as practicable, and I believe if the gentleman will bring in the right kind of legislation into this House it will pass. We want to do away with Prussianism in our Army.

Mr. SHERWOOD. They ought to cashier some of these officers and make an example of them.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 11 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto shall close in 11 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire whether those who are to have these 11 minutes are to be for or against the amendment or whether the time is to be equally divided?

Mr. RUCKER. Both.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If it is to be equally divided, it is all right.

Mr. DIES. I will give the gentleman my views when I get my five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think it is only fair to inquire.

Mr. DIES. There will not be any doubt as to what my views are.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think it would be only fair——

Mr. DIES. I do not propose to have the gentleman censor my speech.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have not any desire to do that. I expect to listen to it with the utmost delight, and I am willing that the gentleman should have 10 minutes, if he desires it, but I am not willing to have the debate all on one side of the question and then have the debate close. I think the gentleman will appreciate the justice and fairness of that. I do not want any time. I am not going to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised that gentlemen should complain that there is class distinction in the Army, as if any intelligent man ever lived in the world who did not know that the spirit of democracy and equality and fraternity never could live in a military atmosphere. [Applause.] I am not surprised that the nephew of the Member of Congress was not allowed to sip cocoa with his uncle in the presence of a military officer, because that spirit is the history of the world from the very dawn of time. I do not care who wrote upon it in the days that are dead and gone, they have said that this spirit, that love of the spirit of democracy, the eternal equality and fraternity of mankind, could never live and has never lived in the military atmosphere, in the spirit of military caste.

But that is not the thing, the big thing. in this bill. You have a bill here, and there is not a man in Congress, in either branch of it, that can read and understand what it means. The big thing before the American people to-day, and every man who speaks should measure his words in the full responsibility of this tremendous hour, the big thing is that you have 750,000 men under arms in peaceful United States three months after the war is over, and you can not get the boys back to the farm to till the untilled acres that lie fallow in this country. Another big thing is that you have got 2,000,000 men under arms in France three months after the Germans have abjectly surrendered their arms, laid down their weapons. You have got 2,000,000 American soldiers in France and you can not get them back home.

Mr. BLACK. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. DIES. I have only five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I measure my words when I say that I believe that the President of the United States is about to make an agreement with France and Great Britain to the effect that 400,000 American soldiers shall be left in France as a police against possible invasion by some other power. The Associated Press some days ago carried the statement that the agreement had been made that France was to keep 800,000 men, Great Britain 200,000 men, and the United States 400,000 men.

If I live, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this bill, unless amended so as to cut out this standing Army of 500,000 men. In the first place, the chairman of the committee and every member of the committee knows not what it means. But to me it means not the entering wedge but the consummation of a great standing Army of 500,000 men in this Republic. In 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916 the General Staff of the Army recommended a standing Army of 500,000 men. Just a few weeks ago they went before this committee and demanded a standing Army of 500,000 men, and they wrote this camouflaged language which still gives them 500,000 men.

Mr. Chairman, the word "armistice" means a truce, but the President of the United States and Marshal Foch and every military critic in the world has said that the surrender on the 11th day of November was an unconditional surrender of the German armies. And to all intents and purposes, both in truth and in fact, this war is over. And if you have got to leave 400,000 American soldiers in France to-day, in the condition that Germany is in, you will have to leave more than that number next year and a still greater proportion in the year following. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, if I live I am going to vote against this bill?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Did the gentleman vote for the conscript law?

Mr. DIES. I voted for the conscript law, and I voted to place the American Flag in defiance of the German Empire. But when the German Empire strikes her flag and lays down her arms in unconditional surrender, I am not willing to foist upon the American people a great Military Establishment in time of peace. [Applause.]

Instead of members of this committee quibbling over the fact that some Army officer thinks himself better than some private, they had better go and take the bill brought to the Committee on Military Affairs and strike from it the standing Army of 500,000 men. They neglect to state that we have 750,000 soldiers in the United States in the Army who can not get out. Let me tell you something: The American people are going to have something to say about this. You have in the Army to-day nearly 3,000,000 men. Out in my neighborhood the farms lie fallow, and the farmers demand that their boys shall be permitted to come home to make a living for their fathers and their mothers. The American people have the right to say a word, and if Army officers dominate the Committee on Military Affairs, then this Congress should take charge of this bill and demand that this thing should stop. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, it is rather refreshing to sit here and hear all the delightful things that have been told us in the last few minutes with reference to subordinate officers of the Army. One Member tells that after having taken a commissioned officer out for a drive, he took him to a leading hotel in this city and invited him to take a cup or glass of something with himself and his nephew, and the officer became indignant and refused to sit at the table with his nephew, and then that Member of Congress closed his speech without assuring us that he had the nerve to tell that soldier to go to hades in plain old-fashioned language. [Laughter.] Another gentleman tells us that at some time, at some place, commissioned officers held that private soldiers could not go to the theater that night, "because we commissioned officers are going."

I do not know whether all we have heard is true or not true, but I do know this—at least I think I know it—that some subordinate military officers in this Nation to-day, after only about 18 months of war, have become arrogant, dictatorial, bigheaded, and so puffed up that if something is not done they are going to swell up and bust—and I wish they would! [Laughter and applause.]

I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] ought to include in his amendment a provision or a proposition forbidding subordinate officers who receive pay from the Federal Treasury, in bold defiance of orders issued by the War Department, to arbitrarily refuse to perform the duties devolving upon them. I think that all these little misfits who wear straps on their shoulders ought to be reprimanded and disciplined until they cease the ungentlemanly and contemptible practice of tearing up letters that Members of Congress write to them in behalf of their constituents.

I have been told that they do that. I have a letter received to-day from a patriotic citizen, a prominent physician in my district, inclosing a letter from his son now in a military camp in the United States, in which the soldier asked his father—the father sent me the letter—to request me, his Representative in Congress, to go in person to the War Department in Washington and appeal to some one in authority in his behalf in an effort to secure his discharge from camp, where, as he says, he is doing absolutely nothing, and allow him to return to his farm. "But," he says, "tell Mr. RUCKER for the Lord's sake not to write a letter to any officer at this camp, because if he does it will make the officers here sore at me." Lord, if I had my way I would tie each and every officer of that kind to the business end of a Missouri mule and make the mule kick him into kingdom come. [Laughter and applause.]

I know another case of a soldier boy who, when he enlisted in the Army, left his father's farm consisting of 600 or 800 acres of good productive land, a farm which the boy, prior to enlistment, had managed and operated for his father, because the father was not physically able to manage the farm himself; he was the only son in the family and was badly needed at home.

For months he has been down at Camp MacArthur, Tex., doing nothing most of the while but killing time. With the approach of spring this young man became anxious to return to his home on that beautiful Missouri farm and to again follow the plow and raise corn and wheat and cattle to help feed the world. Orders were issued requiring applications for discharge to be accompanied by affidavits showing applicant's connection with agriculture and the necessity for his return to his home. This soldier obtained affidavits from respectable and honorable men, including members of the local draft board, proving that his father owns 600 or 800 acres of land; that he, the father, could not do the farm work required; and that he, the son, is the only young man on the farm, and that reliable hired help could not be obtained. He submitted his application and affidavits to one of these little puffed-up officers, and he had the arrogance, impudence, and insolence to reply, "Oh, if your father has got 600 or 800 acres of land, let him sell his land and retire. He does not need you to run the farm." There has been some discussion here of universal military training; but I have got enough of it. We want no large standing Army; we want no compulsory universal military training; we have whipped the Germans; the war is over, and the people now want their boys sent home and the great efforts of President Wilson to secure an enduring peace to become an accomplished fact. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, there may be a great many isolated instances in which some Army officers have not acted in exact accord with the way that we would want them to act; but to try any particular officers in a debate on an appropriation bill without any hearing and without any opportunity for them to be heard, it seems to me would be an outrage. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps while on active duty, and enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended for supplying meals or furnishing commutation of rations to enlisted men of the Regular Army and the National Guard who may be competitors in the national rifle match: Provided further, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress shall be incurred. For payments: Of commutation of rations to the cadets of the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration, at the rate of 68 cents per ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in departments and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leave of absence, applicants for enlistment, and general prisoners while traveling under orders. For payment of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, civilian employees who are entitled to subsistence at public expense, and general prisoners sick therein, to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army, $120,000,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on the word "advertising," in line 7 on page 24. That is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. DENT. I concede the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I would not object to a reasonable sum for advertising, but under that particular section he might spend $120,000,000 for advertising.

Mr. DENT. I agree that the point of order ought to be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 24, line 14, after the figures "$120,000,000," add the following: "Provided, That the purchase of subsistence supplies shall not be made except after advertisement in accordance with existing law."

Mr. DENT. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he has stricken out the word "advertising" in the bill, and I should like to know where there would be any money to pay for the advertising?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, this item is for $120,000,000 for the subsistence of the Army. I will not undertake to reduce it, because I have not the slightest idea whether it is the proper amount. I trust members of the committee will listen to me in what I say now. I listened to the general debate and the questions that were answered by the members of the committee, and on reading the hearings as best I could I find that this item of $120,000,000 is nothing but an estimate, which was made up under this kind of instructions, that the chief of the finance department of the Army called upon the different departments to make estimates of the amount that would be required for an Army of 500,000 men for one year. That is the statement of the committee. That is the statement, as I understand it, that was read from the hearings, the statement of the officer who is responsible for these estimates. Is there any man in this House who knows whether or not they need all this $120,000,000? I have had it stated to me upon reputable authority that they have got enough baked beans already in warehouses to last the city of Boston for 24 hours and to last the rest of the country for 10 years. [Laughter.] Why should we make appropriations for that? They have supplies of different kinds piled up in warehouses all over this country. If they are going to demobilize the Army and cut it down to a 500,000 basis during this year, what are they going to do with these millions of supplies that they have got piled up? Are they going to sell them and throw them upon the market?

But no one with any sense of responsibility wants to move to cut down the item because we do not know. We want the boys fed. There are 500,000 men, or half a million.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that he is right about the surplus supplies, except the items of subsistence, and I am glad he is not going to move to reduce it. The head of the finance department said that there will be no stock on hand by the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. WINGO. Have they no coffee on hand?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They have now, but at the beginning of the next fiscal year it will be consumed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May not that be due to the fact that the Army is disposing of supplies now—getting rid of them?

Mr. WINGO. We know it is a thankless task—we are not blind to the reputable statements that come every day about the waste of supplies in the United States Army, and the sales that are going on.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. We inquired about that. In fact, the baked beans was a matter of inquiry. We were told in committee that the extraordinary supplies they have on hand are going to be put on rations—that is, they are going to be used up—and it is some time now to the 1st of July. The best information we could get was that a great many of these things would be used up, so that the amount we have here asked for would be necessary for an Army of that size.

Mr. WINGO. I hope that is true. I do not want the Army to live on "advertising," which item was in this supply section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REGULAR SUPPLIES.

Regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection; construction and repair of military reservation fences; stoves and heating apparatus required for the use of the Army for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks; also ranges, stoves, coffee roasters, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts in the field and when traveling, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; and the necessary power for the operation of moving-picture machines; authorized issues of candles and matches; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for offices, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, and enlisted men, warrant officers, and field clerks, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; contract surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts; for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, and buildings for similar purposes on military reservations authorized by War Department regulations; for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries, including bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto and the repair thereof; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the authorized issues of laundry materials for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and for applicants for enlistment while held under observation; authorized issues of soap; toilet paper and towels; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries, and schools for noncommissionel officers; for the purchase and issue of instruments, office furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts; for purchase of relief maps for issue to organizations, commercial newspapers, market reports, etc.; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; for forage, salt, and vinegar for the horses, mules, oxen, and other draft and riding animals of the Quartermaster Corps at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of Cavalry and batteries of Artillery, and such companies of Infantry and Scouts as may be mounted; for remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, $100,000,000: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some points of order on different items in the paragraph. The first item I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to is "commercial newspapers," line 9, page 26. That is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. DENT. I think the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. The next point of order is on "market reports."

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman is going to save a lot of money by this, and I think the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, while the items are undoubtedly subject to a point of order, yet the market report to a purchasing office of the Army is undoubtedly of very great value, and does not the gentleman think that we ought to allow a man purchasing hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars' worth of supplies to have the market reports?

Mr. WINGO. There is something in what the gentleman says. But here is the fact. In modern times a purchasing officer does not have to have any market reports. He can call on the men to submit bids and copies of the market reports.

Mr. ANTHONY. I disagree with the gentleman. I think he ought to have independent means of arriving at the proper market values of the articles that he is going to buy. I think Congress ought to furnish him with every facility of information.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman think that 90 per cent of the people can pick up the morning paper and get all the market reports that are necessary?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. Every commercial house has the benefit of the latest market advice, and I think the Army officers ought to have the benefit of the market reports.

Mr. WINGO. If they were on the market hour by hour; but they are not in just the attitude of the commercial houses buying hour by hour, and they do not need to keep up with the market to that extent.

Mr. ANTHONY. While the items are undoubtedly subject to a point of order, I think it is vitally necessary that we should give the officer the benefit of these reports.

Mr. WINGO. Here is a blanket item of $100,000,000, including everything from toilet paper to electric-light plants. If the War Department were to come to the committee and say we want so much for toilet paper, so much for towels, and we want so much for an electric-light plant, and tell Congress where they propose to erect it, so that Congress could pass upon it, I should not object. But they bring in an estimate here for $100,000,000, which is nothing but a lump-sum appropriation covering everything from market reports and toilet paper to electric-light plants, and it is not a businesslike way of spending the money that is now very scarce in the United States Treasury. For that reason I made up my mind that I was going to compel these officers to make proper estimates when they come to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the next point of order is on the purchase of seed, on page 26, line 19, down to and including line 21—

For seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots—

And so forth. That is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the chairman of the committee desire to be heard?

Mr. DENT. I can not put my finger on any such provision, and if the gentleman wants to strike it out, well and good.

Mr. MANN. Well, what goes out?

Mr. STAFFORD. To what phraseology is the point of order made?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Arkansas to please designate the language to which he has made the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Commencing with the words "for seeds," in line 19, and going down to and including the word "thereto," in line 22, page 26.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. That would not make any sense, leaving that in that way.

Mr. WINGO. That is not the only item in the bill that does not make sense.

Mr. MANN. The item in the bill as it is makes some sense; but the way the gentleman leaves it, it does not make sense.

Mr. STAFFORD. The way it is reported by the committee makes sense.

Mr. WINGO. Then I shall make the point of order down to and including the word "irrigation," on line 24. Will that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. That will at least make sense, whether it is sense or not.

Mr. WINGO. Then let us make something out of it. I think the word "irrigation" should be included.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama concedes the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, on page 27, lines 3 to 11, inclusive, I make the point of order against the proviso. It is not authorized by existing law. It provides practically for a revolving fund.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Alabama say?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order before I lose my rights.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Arkansas reserve the point of order?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it the gentleman's idea to blindly strike out items all through this bill by making points of order where the items themselves are meritorious?

Mr. WINGO. No.

Mr. DENT. Certainly that is the gentleman's idea.

Mr. WINGO. Let me answer the gentleman. The gentleman has asked what my motives are. They are to compel a cessation of the habit of the House blindly voting appropriations for the War Department without proper classification in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me make this statement to the gentleman in regard to the items "for seeds and implements," which he seeks to strike out on a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. That enables the Government at the remount stations at Fort Kehoe, Mont., and Front Royal, Va.—I think it is—to utilize the Government lands for the raising of forage for the animals, and it has been shown to the committee that the Government makes quite a large amount by the raising of the forage on the Government land and with the Government labor at those places. That is the reason for the provision for seeds and implements. It is a practical business proposition.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman say that is also true in respect to Hawaii?

Mr. ANTHONY. These are at Fort Kehoe and at Front Royal.

Mr. WINGO. What about Hawaii?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know about those, but I imagine they are upon the same line.

Mr. WINGO. If the War Department or if the Government has a remount depot and they can use the stock and the men they have there for certain limited operations, that will be a saving, an economy, well and good, but they come in here and hide this item in a hundred-million-dollar lump-sum appropriation. They should come in here and say that they need $2,500 for this purpose or some other sum, so that we can determine whether they are asking for an extravagant amount or not.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman seen the estimates? They are in detail.

Mr. WINGO. Why do you not make a detailed appropriation?

Mr. TILSON. We never have made detailed appropriations in this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On this particular item, $100,000,000, the amount asked for by the department was $118,000,000 plus. Now, they gave a detailed statement——

Mr. WINGO. How much is that for seed?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They do not say how much for seed.

Mr. WINGO. The estimate does not show it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Because that item includes forage. It is to be used to provide forage, and that includes bedding, seed, and so forth, which amounts to over $21,000,000.

Mr. WINGO. And that $21,000,000 has to do with that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The committee went into the matter, and, as the gentleman from Kansas has suggested to the gentleman from Arkansas, these particular men having charge of producing the forage for the War Department made representations to us that they wanted that item of seed because they could use that seed and reduce the expense to the Government on that account, and we did not think that if they wanted $100 or $200 for seed that it was necessary——

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman from Kansas has suggested this is to cover operations at two remount establishments for the purpose of raising forage, and the gentleman here says that this is a proposition to expend $21,000,000——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is for the forage item.

Mr. WINGO. Well, he says it refers to the raising of forage, and this is this item, at certain stations, and another gentleman, a member of the committee, says that it is included in the $21,000,000, and the other says it does not include it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is for horses, seeds, and so forth. The item for seed is in the general item for forage, because it is to be used to raise forage, and instead of bringing in a separate item here for a few dollars' worth of seed it is included in the item for forage, which is the great item.

Mr. WINGO. Maybe the gentleman can determine how much is estimated for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots, and so forth.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That particular item is not in detail in this statement, but it was very small, but the committee was given the information of what these particular seeds were to be used for, and that was for the raising of forage.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order; it gets more confused the more explanation I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order, on page 25, line 22, to the word "construction."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order, on page 25, line 22, to the word "construction." It is a provision "for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries," and so forth.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I think there is no necessity for its staying in now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, but first desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was the point of order against the proviso sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I shall have to amend my amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, there is another point of order which I think will be conceded, and that is to the words "and so forth," in line 10, page 26.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. It is commonly understood to mean kindred items of a similar nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman in charge of the bill to concede the point of order.

Mr. MANN. If the point of order was conceded, I have no objection, but "and so forth" is not confined to commercial newspapers and market reports. "And so forth" covers items similar to the ones named before, and without that language it is almost impossible at times to get certain things——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is a good lawyer, and is it not the rule of construction that where you name several of these items that that would simply include those of a specific generic class, and by putting in "and so forth" that would not extend it any?

Mr. MANN. Why, yes.

Mr. WINGO. Why is it necessary to do it?

Mr. MANN. Because it sometimes occurs——

Mr. WINGO. If the committee want it in there and it will save time, I withdraw my point of order, but that is something remarkable in a legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is a very common item in a legislative bill.

Mr. WINGO. It is still a remarkable item.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had been over the decisions of the comptroller and auditor, he would not think it remarkable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 27, line 2, after the figures "$100,000,000" add the following:

"Provided, That purchases of regular supplies shall not be made except after advertisement in accordance with existing law."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I agreed to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. I move to strike out "stoves and ranges" wherever it occurs in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Strike out the words "stoves and ranges" wherever they occur in the paragraph beginning on line 15, page 24, and ending with line 11, on page 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment not because I desire to prohibit the Army from having stoves and ranges but because my information is that prior to the signing of the armistice they had entered into contracts for enough stoves and ranges to take care of an army of four and one-half million men. If the armistice had not been signed, this quantity of stoves and ranges would have been delivered by May 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I would like to complete my statement, and then I will yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman does not assume that because the word "stove" is in here that they have to buy stoves?

Mr. WINGO. I am going to get to that. I know the language is in here, because it has always been carried.

As I was saying, if the armistice had not been signed, we would have had on hand stoves and ranges for an army of that size by May 1. I understand they had so many on hand they had to build warehouses in which to house them. I do not think the Committee on Military Affairs will challenge that statement. Now, if it is true, why authorize these men, this very department that has already on hand warehouses full of stoves and ranges, to go and spend a possible limit of $100,000,000 for more stoves and ranges? I will tell you why it is put in the bill. It is put there for two reasons. First, because it has always been there, and, second, because the chief of the finance department called upon each division to report what they would need for an army of 500,000 men, and instead of checking off the things they already had in the warehouses, they put the whole estimate in there.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he succeeds in striking out the word "stoves" in the next paragraph, and in the next appropriation bill it is found that it is necessary to buy some stoves for the Army, and the language is put in, he would make a point of order against it?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly not; because that does not cut any figure.

Mr. McKENZIE. Why not?

Mr. WINGO. I will not stop to argue that proposition, because the hour is too late.

Mr. MANN. The motion, as I understand it, has not been reported yet.

Mr. WINGO. It has been reported.

Mr. MANN. It was to strike out the words "stoves and ranges" wherever they occur in this paragraph. Did the gentleman indicate any place where they do occur in the paragraph?

Mr. WINGO. The word "stoves" and the word "ranges."

Mr. MANN. I find the word "stoves" in several places, but that was not the motion you reported.

Mr. WINGO. That was my motion, to strike out those particular words.

Mr. MANN. It was to strike out the words "stoves and ranges" wherever they occur. There is no such expression in that paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. My motion distinctly was to strike out those words wherever they appeared. If the gentleman wants to quibble on the grammatical construction——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is quibbling on the construction of the bill. If he wants to offer an amendment, he ought to offer one that means something.

Mr. WINGO. When I move to strike out of a $100,000,000 lump-sum item supplies now in the warehouses, that is not quibble. If the gentleman wants to be sure of it, I will make my motion more definite and certain.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. All right.

Mr. DENT. I want to ask him one question. He has been fighting this bill ever since this afternoon.

Mr. WINGO. I have not. I have been fighting unjustified items in the bill.

Mr. DENT. I want to know what the gentleman's motive is, but——

Mr. WINGO. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. Wait a minute.

Mr. WINGO. I decline to yield longer. The gentleman can not inquire into my motives.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has not moved to reduce the amount in any case.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes, I have. I will say we have no estimate here for it. As to my motive, I have stated that several times. I believe, if possible, that we should cut out unnecessary authorizations of purchases of supplies that the Army is already glutted with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has made objection to the language used in the bill, which has been carried from year to year, and which was carried in the bill prior to the declaration of war. Some of the language, perhaps, ought not to be there, because it is not authorized by law. But the gentleman from Arkansas does not make a single objection to the amount of the appropriation. The amount of money that was authorized by the committee has been recommended by the War Department. In many cases it is a guess. Now, does the gentleman from Arkansas want us to proceed along lines where we shall not have any Army appropriation bill at all during this session of Congress? I have not had on the other side of the House any opposition to this bill. Now, does the gentleman from Arkansas propose to defeat this bill on this side of the House, simply because he wants to change the language of the bill without changing the amount of the appropriations? [Applause.] That is what the gentleman from Arkansas is up against. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will give us some good reason why he proposes to give us any further fight on this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give me a chance to reply?

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to the gentleman replying.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, just a word in regard to this item on stoves and ranges.

Here is a good reason why that language has been in the bill for a long time, and why, in my judgment, it ought to continue in the bill: In the first place, if that language is not in the bill, an officer would not be able under any circumstances to buy a stove or range, however much he might need it. Therefore, even during the next year, while we may have such a large stock on hand, it might be possible that some officer would need to buy a stove at some isolated place.

In the estimates for "Regular supplies" that were submitted to us, covering six pages of fine print, giving the items of everything that it is expected to purchase under these supplies, there is no mention whatever of stoves or ranges. The gentleman can look through the estimates and will find no such estimate, so that evidently it was not the intention of the department to buy any stoves or ranges at all during the next year. At the same time, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has just suggested, I see no good purpose to be served in striking out this language, which has been carried for many years and which might become important at any time. As I understand, the only real reason suggested for striking it out of the bill is the fear that some Army officer will rush off and spend $100,000,000 for stoves and ranges when we already have a supply of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This question has been asked by several Members, Is it possible that the $100,000,000 appropriated in this paragraph can be used in whole for any one of the specified purposes?

Mr. TILSON. Theoretically, yes; practically, no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask this question of the gentleman: Is there not an element of danger in giving this blanket authority? Suppose it was possible to spend $100,000,000 for ice machines and their maintenance, although nearly 100 other items are provided for here, and we should get into an ice-machine contract that would call for a larger expenditure, until finally $100,000,000 was expended in that way. Would not the Army suffer?

Mr. TILSON. If we are to assume that Army officers are going to behave as crooks and try to waste the money of the Government without attempting to get anything of value for it, I suppose there is a possibility that for one single year they might get away with a lot of money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose, for the purpose of the argument, we do not concede that they are crooks. Let us take the case of an armor-plate plant, such as was referred to here the other day during the discussion of the naval appropriation bill, where it was developed that we had no armor-plate factory, although the money appropriated for an armor-plate factory had been expended. That would appear to be a diversion of funds not in accordance with the appropriation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will excuse me a moment, this estimate which is furnished to the committee indicates, as to each item, what it is expected to buy under that item; but, in my judgment, it would be unwise for us to write the details of that estimate into the bill, because it is quite probable that, looking a year and a half ahead, as the officers of the War Department must do, they would not be able to foresee just the amount of every item that they might need. They might overestimate one item and underestimate another; and if they were compelled to stick to the itemized appropriation they might have to go short of one thing which they needed while they might have an abundance of money for another thing which they did not need. In my judgment, that would be bad policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to elaborate a little, for the information of the committee, the point that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has made. This very matter was discussed with Gen. Lord, who is the financial director of the Army, who has charge of these funds; and, replying to the questions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the financial director of the Army said that when Congress makes an appropriation the first thing he does is to set aside to each one of these funds upon the books of his department the exact amount of money that has been assigned for each one of these items in this bill, and he does not permit that money to be diverted until that particular sum of money has been spent for the particular thing that it is listed for upon this statement made to the committee; so that it is impossible for the thing to occur which the gentleman suggests might be done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and then I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As a general proposition the gentleman does not approve of lump-sum appropriations, does he?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No, I do not, but I think in this particular case at this particular time this is the most economical way to handle this matter in the best interests of the Government, and in response to the criticism of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] that no consideration was had as to the amount on hand in these different items permit me to say, on the contrary, that the hearings show that we asked that particular question of the War Department, and the exact amount on hand under each one of these items is stated, making a total of $6,837,918.89. There were on hand for office supplies, books, and stationery $2,986,655.46, which we are not appropriating for; for furniture $82,770.80; for towels $468,692.80; for toilet paper $609,500, showing that the War Department did take into consideration and did credit upon appropriations the exact amount that they had on hand for each particular item. We make no appropriation for stoves, to which one gentleman called attention, because they had sufficient stoves on hand.

Mr. STAFFORD. This particular service is under the charge of Gen. Goethals, is it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Goethals is the head of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Gen. Goethals is the director of supplies?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. He is director of purchases.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will not forget that he promised to yield to me.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In line with the objection made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this paragraph provides in several places for the purchase of furniture for different posts and post agencies. Now, the Army has certainly got a great deal more furniture on hand than it knows what to do with.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Notwithstanding that fact I am reliably informed that it is continuing to purchase furniture.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In this statement which I have here it shows that nothing is asked for under the item of furniture. Although the word "furniture" is carried in the bill, as it always has been carried, yet in his statement to the committee, showing what they expect to use the appropriation for, Gen. Lord presented no item for furniture, but on the contrary the statement shows that they have $82,770.80 worth of furniture on hand.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not my friend see that the provisions in the bill are utterly misleading to the House if that is so?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; not at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why do you have anything in the bill for furniture if you do not intend to buy furniture? Why should these officers be given authority so that they can purchase this furniture if they do not need it, when they have got all that furniture on hand?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Can not the gentleman see that although they have this furniture on hand the occasion might arise in the next year where some piece of furniture might be needed which was essential to the Army of the United States?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There can be no occasion arise at these posts as specified here.

Mr. DENT. May I make this suggestion? How would the gentleman write that item in the bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me to put it in when I have the time, and he arrives at the end of the bill, I will prepare something of that kind, but I imagine that he will not be ready to go back. This item could be covered and ought to be covered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Strike out the words "stoves, ranges" wherever they appear in paragraph beginning on page 24, line 15, and ending on line 11, page 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$100,000,000," on page 27, and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000,000."

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 27, line 2, strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, there was a time when a Member of this House had the recognized right to inquire into supply bills when presented to him and he was asked to vote those supplies. But, Mr. Chairman, how the times have changed. If a Member of the House has the temerity to inquire into the necessity and to move to strike out conceded unnecessary items in the bill, he at once is charged with trying to defeat the bill and questioning the integrity of the department for which the appropriation is made.

I challenge any gentleman to stand up and call attention to any criticism I have made against the War Department since the war started. Not one word of criticism has fallen from my lips to-day. The War Department is like every other department; it wants ample funds, and they think it is up to them to make the highest estimates they can and for Congress to examine and pare them down, because that has been the custom.

Far be it from me to criticize the War Department. They have had a wonderful task. Some of their officers have made asses of themselves, but we should not hold the officers who have done good work responsible for the acts of some officers that have not acted properly. They have had a great problem. But, gentlemen, the war is over and the time has come when, instead of having a billion dollars appropriated by Congress for the entire expense of the Government, we will have to appropriate two billions for interest charges, and the annual budget will be $5,000,000,000. It is true that this appropriation language has been carried for years, and I stated twice that no particular criticism should be made of the committee by reason of that. The criticism goes to Congress, but we ought to stop it and now say you shall come in with a classification of the different items and provide the amount that shall be in each classification, so that Congress can pass upon each item.

As an illustration, the gentleman from Nebraska, a faithful and efficient Member of the House, in offering an explanation of "seeds and implements for raising forage" item, read the estimate for "forage, salt, vinegar," and so forth. It makes great confusion. We have a right to inquire, and I think, although I may submit myself to criticism and lecture, I am going to insist on knowing where the money is going to. I am going to insist on exercising my right to know how these appropriations that come out of the United States Treasury are to be used. I have no apology to offer to the gentleman from Alabama for doing it, and I am willing to compare my record with his. These are troublous times, and while I do not wish to indulge in criticism of the War Department, I think they should try to be specific and point out where these appropriations are to be used. In the discharge of my duty I would try to pare down in every possible place without destroying efficiency. The gentleman says I have not moved to cut down any appropriation. The gentleman's memory is short. I do not want to make reckless reductions in any way unless I think the amounts can be cut down intelligently.

But having investigated as best I could from the hearings and the supplies they have on hand, I think if we give them $50,000,000 for the peace year of 1920, it will be all that is necessary for this, especially when we have other items here including millions more, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to oppose the amendment for a moment. I call the attention of the House to the fact that of the $100,000,000 asked for in this item there are 24 items shown by the statement, and one of them is for $49,000,000 for fuel that is to cook the food for the Army and warm the men; $11,000,000 is for gasoline for the motor vehicles, the trucks, and automobiles, and all the operation of motor-driven vehicles, which are the principal motive power of the Army; $21,000,000 is for forage to feed the animals; and $11,000,000 for lighting the Army posts and camps—$92,000,000 in all contained in these four items. I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas wants to leave the men with not enough coal, nor leave the horses with not enough forage, or to deny them light or gasoline. That is what we will do if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. That item for gasoline includes the $250 a day for these officers who run around here in Washington in private cars.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It certainly does. There may be a few thousand dollars of gasoline wasted here.

Mr. TILSON. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to one item that I think would make two-thirds of the gentleman's $50,000,000, and that is $31,000,000 for fuel for transports.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. How much did the committee find by investigation was necessary for fuel for Government transports?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They asked for $31,000,000, and we allowed them the entire amount they asked, because, as members of the committee said, we did not think that we could look the American people in the face and refuse to appropriate all of the money they asked for to bring these boys home. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has read five items that cover a hundred and thirty million dollars. If it is a sin for me to offer to reduce it, was it not a sin for the committee to refuse the whole 24 items and cut them down to $100,000,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We reduced the appropriation by $18,000,000, and we thought that we were cutting it to the very bone when we did it. That is the reason I ask the House to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 25, line 3, by striking out the word "offices" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "officers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 25, line 3, strike out the word "offices" and insert the word "officers."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the words "office furniture," in line 6——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, that is too late. The train has gone long ago.

Mr. TILSON. We have been debating the paragraph for the last 15 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. We have been debating the paragraph on the merits, and I make the point of order that the gentleman can not do that now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have just voted on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and I am sure that I was recognized before the Clerk began to read.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been had on the merits of the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Chair hold that it is too late to make the point or order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is it too late to move to strike out the last word? I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will wait until we read the next paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. After paying my respects to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama, who is in charge of the bill, whether we do not have now in the War Department sufficient office furniture to carry us along for another year? I ask this question, because I have been informed that the department is disposing of office furniture, and complaints have come to me that office furniture has been sold at such a price as to interfere with the trade. Why we should buy new office furniture under those circumstances I do not know. I want to say further to the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. DENT. I can not answer the question as long as the gentleman talks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will be very glad to hear the gentleman from Alabama in my time.

Mr. DENT. I understand the gentleman from Nebraska has already explained that we have put a provision in for the transfer of office furniture to the different branches of the service—how much of that, of course, we do not know. How could we know?

Mr. TILSON. There is nothing in the estimates at all?

Mr. DENT. Not that I know of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there is nothing in the estimates, why put it in the bill?

Mr. DENT. It might be necessary and save money; that is the reason.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of the admission made by the chairman of the committee, or rather by the gentleman from Connecticut in his name, I wish to say if I had known in time that office furniture was not estimated for by the War Department and that the committee voluntarily put it in, I would have moved to strike it out. It illustrates just what the gentleman from Arkansas has been contending, that while the committee represents to the Committee of the Whole that it was fully informed upon the estimates of the War Department and knows just where this $100,000,000 is going, it evidently went quite a little more than the War Department in the matter of office furniture, and the Committee of the Whole is left in the dark with regard to many of these appropriations. Now, I am not in favor of having lump-sum appropriations any longer. Prior to the war the Army bill carried no more than this one lump-sum appropriation carries, whereas this bill carries over a billion dollars, all in lump-sum appropriations. When the gentleman brought in his Army bill prior to the war asking for $100,000,000 to keep the Army going for the year——

Mr. DENT. Oh, no; the gentleman voted for a $12,000,000,000 bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said prior to the war.

Mr. DENT. Oh, prior to the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; prior to the war, when we were about to enter upon another era of peace we continue the war practices by appropriating in lump sums as much as $100,000,000 and leave it to the discretion of the department to divert those funds as it sees fit. Of course, the department will not do it; it did not do it in the matter of aviation or in the matter of armor plate——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. ANTHONY. I usually agree with nearly everything the very brilliant and very able gentleman from Pennsylvania advances, but in this instance he is entirely wrong, in my opinion. I think it very necessary that that language, "office furniture," remain in the bill, for the reasons that have been advanced by gentlemen on both sides of the aisle. While there may be a surplusage of office furniture for the Army at large, there may be isolated posts at some places in the world where we will need office furniture very badly, and without that authorization we could not spend 5 cents for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman agree with his colleague from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] on the committee that the department made no estimate for office furniture?

Mr. ANTHONY. They made no item in their analysis of the estimate for office furniture, and yet the committee thought it wise to leave that in the bill as it has been year after year, because we know the necessity will call for the purchase of office furniture at some place or other.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be better to sell this furniture in Washington and buy furniture down in Arizona, say. It is a waste of money and time to sell cheap and buy dear.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is undoubtedly the safe way to legislate in regard to items on these appropriation bills, so far as possible, but if we carry that idea out on this appropriation bill we would have a bill that would take us six months to read here. Now, if the gentleman will analyze some of the information that has been furnished the committee, on which we base this bill, he will see the necessity for this. I want to point out two items. For instance, in this item of regular supplies I ran across $12 worth of dragons' blood that they want to buy for some reason or other. We did not deem it wise to set forth that item in the bill. Another item is banana oil, $5.22 worth. The committee did not take up space in the bill for that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows we would not expect items of that kind to be set out in a hundred-million-dollar lump-sum item.

Mr. ANTHONY. If we carry out to a logical conclusion some of the remarks made here to-night, we would.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some little things like that are made as an excuse for working out a $100,000,000 lump-sum appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION OF THE ARMY AND ITS SUPPLIES.

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation overseas to the United States of the bodies of officers and enlisted men who died upon foreign soil in the present war; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; for travel allowance to officers and enlisted men on discharge; for payment of travel allowance as provided in section 126 of the act approved June 3, 1916, to enlisted men of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States, and discharged on account of physical disability; for payment of travel pay to officers of the National Guard on their discharge from the service of the United States, as prescribed in the act approved March 2, 1901; for travel allowance to persons on their discharge from the United States disciplinary barracks or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane after transfer thereto from such barracks or place, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of the necessary agents and other employees, including per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 for those authorized to receive the per diem allowance; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipment; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier ports, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on conditions that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provisions only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation of such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: And provided further, That nothing in the preceding provisos shall be construed to prevent the accounting officers of the Government from making full payment to land-grant railroads for transportation of property or persons where the courts of the United States have held that such property or persons do not come within the scope of the deductions provided for in the land-grant acts; for the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, drays, other vehicles, and motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans: Provided further, That $225,000 of the appropriation hereby made shall be available for additional pay of employees on harbor boats, quartermaster service, in lieu of subsistence, $449,000,000.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not offer an amendment while the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do, Mr. Chairman. I assume that the language in this paragraph of many pages is substantially that which is covered in existing law?

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire what is the necessity of providing authorization for the purchase of ships now that the war is at an end?

Mr. DENT. I do not think there is any necessity for it, and when we get to the item at the end——

Mr. TILSON. Before the chairman of the committee yields this item, let me read the explanation submitted with the estimates.

This item is included to provide funds for reimbursing the United States Shipping Board for vessels which it is contemplated the War Department will secure from them for the replacement of old vessels now in the Regular Army Transport Service, the vessels now in the service being old, and due to their age require constant and excessive repairs. The following table shows the vessels it is contemplated will be turned over by the Shipping Board.

It gives in detail the boats it is expected to turn over under this item.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the largest item carried in the bill—$449,000,000, nearly half a billion. Will the gentleman, before the reservation of the point of order is withdrawn, give some statement as to how they arrive at this enormous figure?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. Let me continue reading:

Trans-Atlantic service: Four transports, at $2,812,500 each, $11,250,000. This number does not include the Great Northern and Northern Pacific, which were purchased from War Department funds and turned over to the Shipping Board during the emergency. These two vessels, added to the four mentioned, will give six vessels in the trans-Atlantic service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand these vessels are now under the control of the Shipping Board?

Mr. TILSON. It is intended to provide funds for reimbursing the United States Shipping Board for vessels which it is contemplated the War Department will secure from them for the replacement of the old vessels now in the Regular Army Transport Service.

Let me finish reading:

Atlantic coastwise (Panama, Cuba, Porto Rico, St. Thomas, etc.):
2 transports, at $2,812,500	$5,625,000
Trans-Pacific service (Philippines, Guam, Japan, etc.):
4 transports, at $2,812,500	11,250,000
1 collier, at $2,537,500	2,537,500
Alaskan service:
1 transport (4,000 tons), at $2,812,500	1,300,000
Pacific coastwise (Panama Canal, etc.):
1 transport (4,000 tons)	1,300,000
Total	33,262,500

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, is there any provision made for transportation, either of men or supplies, to or from the north coast of Russia? Or, since we have got our troops up there, are we to leave them there without reenforcements or supplies?

Mr. TILSON. Funds available under this item could be used for the transportation of troops home from any quarter of the globe.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut has given an explanation of only $33,000,000 out of $449,000,000.

Mr. MANN. It is now 10 o'clock, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. We had an understanding that we would run until 10 o'clock.

Mr. DENT. We had such an understanding, but I thought we might dispose of this item of transportation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it will take some time to dispose of it.

Mr. DENT. Well, then, I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER as Speaker pro tempore having assumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and had come to no resolution thereon.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 15979) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was read by title and, with the accompanying report (No. 1069), was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks briefly on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Army bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks by printing a letter from a soldier, an enlisted man.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Army bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have three days in which to file minority views from the Committee on the Public Lands on the bill (S. 2021) to change the name and enlarge the Sequoia National Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] asks unanimous consent that he may have three days in which to file minority views on the Senate bill 2021. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That will not interfere with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I do not think it will.

Mr. MANN. That will come up next July.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. WALSH. On the Army bill?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; on the Army bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Army bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Alabama will immediately move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the Army appropriation bill after the convening to-morrow?

Mr. DENT. That is the intention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 15, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for the purchase of the Baltimore quarantine station (H. Doc. The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15706) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 8625. An act to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12863. An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 389).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a request out of order. It is that the terms of the league of nations, printed in all the newspapers, may be printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document for convenience and use.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I ask the Senator if he would object to including in his request that the speech of the President delivered at the time of the presentation of the terms of the league be also published along with the document he has referred to, so that the two may be read together?

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its being printed, of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the President's address be so included.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator from Nevada submit the request in conjunction with the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection at all to including it in my request.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the way I intended my suggestion, and I understand the Senator from Massachusetts has so modified his request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"COVENANT—PREAMBLE.

"In order to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among Governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, the powers signatory to this covenant adopt this constitution of the league of nations.

"ARTICLE 1.

"The action of the high contracting parties under the terms of this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of meeting of a body of delegates representing the high contracting parties, of meeting at more frequent intervals of an executive council, and of a permanent international secretariat to be established at the seat of the league.

"ARTICLE 2.

"Meetings of the body of delegates shall be held at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require for the purpose of dealing with matters within the sphere of action of the league. Meetings of the body of delegates shall be held at the seat of the league or at such other place as may be found convenient, and shall consist of representatives of the high contracting parties. Each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote but may not have more than three representatives.

"ARTICLE 3.

"The executive council shall consist of representatives of the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, together with representatives of four other States, members of the league. The selection of these four States shall be made by the body of delegates on such principles and in such manner as they think fit. Pending the appointment of these representatives of the other States, representatives of ——— shall be members of the executive council.

"Meetings of the council shall be held from time to time as occasion may require, and at least once a year, at whatever place may be decided upon, or, failing any such decision, at the seat of the league, and any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world may be dealt with at such meetings.

"Invitations shall be sent to any power to attend a meeting of the council at which matters directly affecting its interests are to be discussed, and no decision taken at any meeting will be binding on such powers unless so invited.

"ARTICLE 4.

"All matter of procedure at meetings of the body of delegates or the executive council, including the appointment of the committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the body of delegates or the executive council, and may be decided by a majority of the States represented at the meeting.

"The first meeting of the body of delegates and of the executive council shall be summoned by the President of the United States of America.

"ARTICLE 5.

"The permanent secretariat of the league shall be established at ———, which shall constitute the seat of the league. The secretariat shall comprise such secretaries and staff as may be required, under the general direction and control of a secretary general of the league, who shall be chosen by the executive council; the secretariat shall be appointed by the secretary general, subject to confirmation by the executive council.

"The secretary general shall act in that capacity at all meetings of the body of delegates or of the executive council.

"The expenses of the secretariat shall be borne by the States members of the league in accordance with appointment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union.

"ARTICLE 6.

"Representatives of the high contracting parties and officials of the league when engaged on the business of the league shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities, and the buildings occupied by the league or its officials or by representatives attending its meetings shall enjoy the benefits of extraterritoriality.

"ARTICLE 7.

"Admission to the league of States not signatories to the covenant and not named in the protocol hereto as States to be invited to adhere to the covenant requires the assent of not less than two-thirds of the States represented in the body of delegates, and shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

"No State shall be admitted to the league unless it is able to give effective guaranties of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations, and unless it shall conform to such principles as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its naval and military forces and armaments.

"ARTICLE 8.

"The high contracting parties recognize the principle that the maintenance of peace will require the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State; and the executive council shall formulate plans for effecting such reduction. The executive council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

"The high contracting parties agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war lends itself to grave objections, and direct the executive council to advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of these countries which are not able to manufacture for themselves the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

"The high contracting parties undertake in no way to conceal from each other the condition of such of their industries as are capable of being adapted to warlike purposes or the scale of their armaments, and agree that there shall be full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval programs.

"ARTICLE 9.

"A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the league on the execution of the provisions of article 8 and on military and naval questions generally.

"ARTICLE 10.

"The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

"ARTICLE 11.

"Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effecual to safeguard the peace of nations.

"It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

"ARTICLE 12.

"The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council; and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

"In any case under this article, the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the recommendation of the executive council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

"ARTICLE 13.

"The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration. For this purpose the court of arbitration to which the case is referred shall be the court agreed upon by the parties or stipulated in any convention existing between them. The high contracting parties agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered. In the event of any failure to carry out the award, the executive council shall propose what steps can best be taken to give effect thereto.

"ARTICLE 14.

"The executive council shall formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice, and this court shall, when established, be competent to hear and determine any matter which the parties recognize as suitable for submission to it for arbitration under the foregoing article.

"ARTICLE 15.

"If there should arise between States members of the league any dispute likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration as above, the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the executive council; either party to the dispute may give notice of the existence of the dispute to the secretary-general, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof. For this purpose the parties agree to communicate to the secretary-general, as promptly as possible, statements of their case with all the relevant facts and papers, and the executive council may forthwith direct the publication thereof.

"Where the efforts of the council lead to the settlement of the dispute, a statement shall be published indicating the nature of the dispute and the terms of settlement, together with such explanations as may be appropriate. If the dispute has not been settled, a report by the council shall be published, setting forth with all necessary facts and explanations the recommendation which the council thinks just and proper for the settlement of the dispute. If the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute, the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations, and that if any party shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the reason. If no such unanimous report can be made, it shall be the duty of the majority and the privilege of the minority to issue statements indicating what they believe to be the facts and containing the reasons which they consider to be just and proper.

"The executive council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the body of delegates. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request must be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute. In any case referred to the body of delegates all the provisions of this article and of article 12 relating to the action of the executive council shall apply to the action and powers of the body of delegates.

"ARTICLE 16.

"Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12 it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

"It shall be the duty of the executive council in such cases to recommend what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

"The high contracting parties agree further that they will mutually support one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken under this article, in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience resulting from the above measures, and that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State, and that they will afford passage through their territory to the forces of any of the high contracting parties who are cooperating to protect the covenants of the league.

"ARTICLE 17.

"In the event of disputes between one State member of the league and another State which is not a member of the league, or between States not members of the league, the high contracting parties agree that the State or States not members of the league shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, upon such conditions as the executive council may deem just, and upon acceptance of any such invitation the above provisions shall be applied with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the league.

"Upon such invitation being given the executive council shall immediately institute an inquiry into the circumstances and merits of the dispute and recommend such action as may seem best and most effectual in the circumstances.

"In the event of a power so invited refusing to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, and taking any action against a State member of the league which in the case of a State member of the league would constitute a breach of article 12, the provisions of article 16 shall be applicable as against the State taking such action.

"If both parties to the dispute, when so invited, refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purposes of such dispute, the executive council may take such action and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

"ARTICLE 18.

"The high contracting parties agree that the league shall be intrusted with general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunitions with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary and in the common interest.

"ARTICLE 19.

"To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them, and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in the constitution of the league.

"The best method of giving practical effect of this principle is that the tutelage of such people should be intrusted to advanced nations who, by reason of their resources, their experience, or their geographical position, can best undertake this responsibility, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the league.

"The character of the mandate must differ according to the stage of the development of the people, the geographical situation of the territory, its economic conditions, and other similar circumstances.

"Certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire have reached a stage of development where their existence as independent nations can be provisionally recognized, subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance by a mandatory power until such time as they are able to stand alone. The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power.

"Other peoples, especially those of Central Africa, are at such a stage that the mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory, subject to conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses, such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases, and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other members of the league.

"There are territories, such as southwest Africa and certain of the South Pacific isles, which, owing to the sparseness of their population, or their small size, or their remoteness from the centers of civilization, or their geographical continuity to the mandatory State, and other circumstances, can be best administered under the laws of the mandatory State as integral portions thereof, subject to the safeguards above mentioned in the interests of indigenous population.

"In every case of mandate the mandatory State shall render to the league an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge.

"The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory State shall, if not previously agreed upon by the high contracting parties in each case, be explicitly defined by the executive council in a special act or charter.

"The high contracting parties further agree to establish at the seat of the league a mandatory commission to receive and examine the annual reports of the mandatory powers, and to assist the league in insuring the observance of the terms of all mandates.

"ARTICLE 20.

"The high contracting parties will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extended; and to that end agree to establish as part of the organization of the league a permanent bureau of labor.

"ARTICLE 21.

"The high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league, having in mind, among other things, special arrangements with regard to the necessities of the regions devastated during the war of 1914–1918.

"ARTICLE 22.

"The high contracting parties agree to place under the control of the league all international bureaus already established by general treaties if the parties to such treaties consent. Furthermore, they agree that all such international bureaus to be constituted in future shall be placed under the control of the league.

"ARTICLE 23.

"The high contracting parties agree that every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any State member of the league shall be forthwith registered with the secretary general and as soon as possible published by him, and that no such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered.

"ARTICLE 24.

"It shall be the right of the body of delegates from time to time to advise the reconsideration by State members of the league of treaties which have become inapplicable and of international conditions of which the continuance may endanger the peace of the world.

"ARTICLE 25.

"The high contracting parties severally agree that the present covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof, and solemnly engage that they will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof. In case any of the powers signatories hereto or subsequently admitted to the league shall before becoming a party to this covenant have undertaken any obligations which are inconsistent with the terms of this covenant, it shall be the duty of such power to take immediate steps to procure its release from such obligations.

"ARTICLE 26.

"Amendments to this covenant will take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the executive council and by three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates."

"Mr. Chairman, I have the honor, and assume it a very great privilege, of reporting in the name of the commission constituted by this conference on the formulation of a plan for the league of nations. I am happy to say that it is a unanimous report, a unanimous report from the representatives of 14 nations—the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Brazil, China, Czecho-Slovakia, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, and Serbia.

"I think it will be serviceable and interesting if I, with your permission, read the document as the only report we have to make."

[President Wilson then read the draft. When he reached article 15 and had read through the second paragraph, the President paused and said:]

"I pause to point out that a misconception might arise in connection with one of the sentences I have just read—'If any party shall refuse to comply, the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the recommendations.'

PRESENTS HYPOTHETICAL CASE.

"A case in point, a purely hypothetical case, is this: Suppose there is in the possession of a particular power a piece of territory or some other substantial thing in dispute, to which it is claimed that it is not entitled. Suppose that the matter is submitted to the executive council for recommendation as to the settlement of the dispute, diplomacy having failed, and suppose that the decision is in favor of the party which claims the subject matter of dispute as against the party which has the subject matter in dispute.

"Then, if the party in possession of the subject matter in dispute merely sits still and does nothing, it has accepted the decision of the council, in the sense that it makes no resistance, but something must be done to see that it surrenders the subject matter in dispute.

"In such a case, the only case contemplated, it is provided that the executive council may then consider what steps will be necessary to oblige the party against whom judgment has been given to comply with the decisions of the council."

[After having read article 19, President Wilson also stopped and said:]

"Let me say that before being embodied in this document this was the subject matter of a very careful discussion by representatives of the five greater parties, and that their unanimous conclusion is the matter embodied in this article."

NO SERIOUS DIFFERENCE IN MOTIVE.

"It gives me pleasure to add to this formal reading of the result of our labors that the character of the discussion which occurred at the sittings of the commission was not only of the most constructive but of the most encouraging sort. It was obvious throughout our discussions that although there were subjects upon which there were individual differences of judgment with regard to the method by which our objects should be obtained there was practically at no point any serious differences of opinion or motive as to the objects which we were seeking.

"Indeed, while these debates were not made the opportunity for the expression of enthusiasm and sentiments, I think the other members of the commission will agree with me that there was an undertone of high respect and of enthusiasm for the thing we were trying to do which was heartening throughout everything.

"Because we felt that in a way this conference did entrust into us the expression of one of its highest and most important purposes, to see to it that the concord of the world in the future with regard to the objects of justice should not be subject to doubt or uncertainty; that the cooperation of the great body of nations should be assured in the maintenance of peace upon terms of honor and of international obligations.

"The compulsion of that task was constantly upon us, and at no point was there shown the slightest desire to do anything but suggest the best means to accomplish that great object. There is very great significance, therefore, in the fact that the result was reached unanimously.

"Fourteen nations were represented among them all of those powers which for convenience we have called the great powers, and among the rest a representation of the greatest variety of circumstances and interests. So that I think we are justified in saying that the significance of the result, therefore, has the deepest of all meanings, the union of wills in a common purpose, a union of wills which can not be resisted and which, I dare say, no nation will run the risk of attempting to resist.

TERMS DOCUMENT SIMPLE.

"Now, as to the character of the document, while it has consumed some time to read this document, I think you will see at once that it is very simple, and in nothing so simple as in the structure which it suggests for a league of nations, a body of delegates, an executive council, and a permanent secretariat.

"When it came to the question of determining the character of the representation in the body of delegates we were all aware of a feeling which is current throughout the world.

"Inasmuch as I am stating it in the presence of the official representatives of the various governments here present, including myself, I may say that there is a universal feeling that the world can not rest satisfied with merely official guidance. There has reached us through many channels the feeling that if the deliberating body of the league of nations was merely to be a body of officials representing the various governments, the peoples of the world would not be sure that some of the mistakes which preoccupied officials had admittedly made might not be repeated.

FOR VARIETY OF REPRESENTATION.

"It was impossible to conceive a method or an assembly so large and various as to be really representative of the great body of the peoples of the world, because, as I roughly reckon it, we represent as we sit around this table more than twelve hundred million people.

"You can not have a representative assembly of twelve hundred million people, but if you leave it to each government to have, if it pleases, one or two or three representatives, though only with a single vote, it may vary its representation from time to time, not only, but it may (originate) the choice of its several representatives [wireless here unintelligible].

"Therefore we thought that this was a proper and a very prudent concession to the practically universal opinion of plain men everywhere that they wanted the door left open to a variety of representation, instead of being confined to a single official body with which they could or might not find themselves in sympathy.

UNLIMITED RIGHTS OF DISCUSSION.

"And you will notice that this body has unlimited rights of discussion. I mean of discussion of anything that falls within the field of international relations—and that it is especially agreed that war or international misunderstandings or anything that may lead to friction or trouble is everybody's business, because it may affect the peace of the world.

"And in order to safeguard the popular power so far as we could of this representative body it is provided, you will notice, that when a subject is submitted it is not to arbitration but to discussion by the executive council; it can, upon the initiative of either of the parties to the dispute, be drawn out of the executive council on the larger form of the general body of delegates, because through this instrument we are depending primarily and chiefly upon one great force, and this is the moral force of the public opinion of the world—the pleasing and clarifying and compelling influences of publicity—so that intrigues can no longer have their coverts, so that designs that are sinister can at any time be drawn into the open, so that those things that are destroyed by the light may be promptly destroyed by the overwhelming light of the universal expression of the condemnation of the world.

ARMED FORCE IN BACKGROUND.

"Armed force is in the background in this program, but it is in the background, and if the moral force of the world will not suffice the physical force of the world shall. But that is the last resort, because this is intended as a constitution of peace, not as a league of war.

DOCUMENT IS ADAPTABLE.

"The simplicity of the document seems to me to be one of its chief virtues, because, speaking for myself, I was unable to see the variety of circumstances with which this league would have to deal. I was unable, therefore, to plan all the machinery that might be necessary to meet the differing and unexpected contingencies. Therefore I should say of this document that it is not a strait-jacket but a vehicle of life.

"A living thing is born, and we must see to it what clothes we put on it. It is not a vehicle of power, but a vehicle in which power may be varied at the discretion of those who exercise it and in accordance with the changing circumstances of the time. And yet, while it is elastic, while it is general in its terms, it is definite in the one thing that we were called upon to make definte.

"It is a definite guaranty of peace. It is a definite guaranty by word against aggression. It is a definite guaranty against the things which have just come near bringing the whole structure of civilization into ruin.

PURPOSES NOT VAGUE.

"Its purposes do not for a moment lie vague. Its purposes are declared, and its powers are unmistakable. It is not in contemplation that this should be merely a league to secure the peace of the world. It is a league which can be used for cooperation in any international matter.

"That is the significance of the provision introduced concerning labor. There are many ameliorations of labor conditions which can be effected by conference and discussion. I anticipate that there will be a very great usefulness in the bureau of labor which it is contemplated shall be set up by the league.

"Men and women and children who work have been in the background through long ages and sometimes seemed to be forgotten, while governments have had their watchful and suspicious eyes upon the maneuvers of one another, while the thought of statesmen has been about structural action and the larger transactions of commerce and of finance.

LABOR AN INTERNATIONAL QUESTION.

"Now, if I may believe the picture which I see, there comes into the foreground the great body of the laboring people of the world, the men and women and children upon whom the great burden of sustaining the world must from day to day fall, whether we wish it to do so or not; people who go to bed tired and wake up without the stimulation of lively hope. These people will be drawn into the field of international consultation and help, and will be among the wards of the combined governments of the world. This is, I take leave to say, a very great step in advance in the mere conception of that.

"Then, as you will notice, there is an imperative article concerning the publicity of all international agreements. Henceforth no member of the league can call any agreement valid which it has not registered with the secretary general, in whose office, of course, it will be subject to the examination of any body representing a member of the league. And the duty is laid upon the secretary general to earliest possible time.

FOR PUBLICITY OF TREATIES.

"I suppose most persons who have not been conversant with the business of foreign affairs do not realize how many hundreds of these agreements are made in a single year, and how difficult it might be to publish the more unimportant of them immediately. How uninteresting it would be to most of the world to publish them immediately, but even they must be published just as soon as it is possible for the secretary general to publish them.

"There has been no greater advance than this, gentlemen. If you look back upon the history of the world you will see how helpless peoples have too often been a prey to powers that had no conscience in the matter. It has been one of the many distressing revelations of recent years that the great power which has just been, happily, defeated put intolerable burdens and injustices upon the helpless people of some of the colonies which it annexed to itself, that its interest was rather their extermination than their development; that the desire was to possess their land for European purposes, and not to enjoy their confidence in order that mankind might be lifted in these places to the next higher level.

GERMANY TO LOSE COLONIES.

"Now, the world, expressing its conscience in law, says there is an end of that, that our consciences shall be settled to this thing. States will be picked out which have already shown that they can exercise a conscience in this matter, and under their tutelage the helpless peoples of the world will come into a new light and into a new hope."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate certain resolutions adopted by the Shipbuilders' Federation of the Atlantic Coast, Gulf, and Great Lakes, which will be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Shipbuilders' Federation of the Atlantic Coast, Gulf, and Great Lakes, held at Philadelphia, February 10, 11, 12, 13, 1918, representing the organized labor in all the shipbuilding and navy yards of the United States, with the exception of the Pacific coast.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the United States Government to protect the men employed in the navy yards and the shipyards of the United States, as well as the capital invested in the buildings, land, and machinery, and to that end they should see that in case any lay off is made in any shipyard or navy yard of the country that proper provision is made in advance for the transportation of the men to their homes and places in steady positions and to take the place of those which have been taken from them.

Resolved, That our country should develop its mercantile marine to the same extent as that of all of its great industries. It should be second to none in the world. We believe that American goods should be carried by American vessels and special attention should be given to developing our trade with every portion of the world. We therefore appeal to the President of the United States and to Congress to carry out the full program arranged during the war and to develop our mercantile marine to the fullest extent.

Resolved, That we believe that the American Navy should be equal to that of any other Navy in the world and that our country should not be obliged to rely upon any other power for our national defense, and with that end in view we heartily approve of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy submitted to Congress, and most earnestly urge upon Congress to adopt the full program submitted by the Navy Department.

We regard the action of those Members of Congress who attacked the naval program for political purposes as antagonistic to the spirit of the American people. The citizens of our country are justly proud of the achievements of the Navy, which has reached its highest efficiency under the present administration. We also congratulate the present Secretary of the Navy for his management of the department, and which is the pride of our country to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. I present joint memorial No. 4 of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado and ask that the same be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

[House joint memorial No. 4, by Representatives Dolan, Owen, and Raye.]

To the Hon. WOODROW WILSON, President, and THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, now in session, respectfully represents that:

Whereas the conflict between democracy and autocracy has been brought to a successful termination through the most able assistance of our "Army of Liberty"; and

Whereas the demobilization of something like 2,000,000 men, of which number approximately 25,000 are Colorado's brave sons, who responded so nobly to the call of our country during the great crisis, is bound to have far-reaching results throughout the United States. Each city, every hamlet, and each community is bound to be more or less affected by the return to civil life and civil duties of these brave men, who sacrificed their all for the honor and liberty of the world; and

Whereas many of the enlisted men returning to the place of their enlistmen are without a nickel in their pockets. (Reports of their plight are already floating back to disturb the equanimity of their former comrades.) How to obtain the ordinary comforts of life between the date of discharge and the next pay day is a problem so far left for the soldier himself and a few charitably disposed individuals to solve. The country is under a moral obligation to give its discharged soldiers an opportunity to return to civil life and civil duties in a manner that will not cause them to sacrifice their self-respect by becoming objects of charity, however willingly donated, for even the briefest time; and

Whereas the soldiers are being mustered out on a few days' notice with no advance of pay, and in some instances without having received their pay for three and four months past services, and are turning up in the cities, improvident, "broke," away from home, without work, applicants for civilian relief. Many of them do not want work yet. Many others are unwilling to undertake the day-labor jobs, which alone they can find. There is every prospect that unless remedial measures are promptly taken the sight of stranded, workless, moneyless soldiers will be common throughout the land;

Wherefore, your memorialist, the Twenty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado, now in session, respectfully advises, recommends, and requests that your honorable body take such action as is necessary to provide for the payment to honorably discharged soldiers, at the time of their discharge, all pay due them at that time, and in addition, as a fitting testimonial of the sacrifice of these brave and noble men, six months' advance pay.

It is directed that this memorial be enrolled and that one copy be sent to the President of the United States, one to the President of the United States Senate, one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one to the Secretary of War, one to the chairman on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, one to the chairman on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, and one to each of the Members representing the State of Colorado in the Senate and House of Representatives and in Congress now assembled;

And that the Twenty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado, now in session, urgently requests our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their every effort and all honorable means to provide for the payment to honorably discharged soldiers all back pay due them and six months' advance pay upon their discharge from the Army, in conformity with the spirit and terms of this resolution.

I hereby certify that the foregoing House joint memorial has been duly adopted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado.

HARRY P. MASON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a joint memorial telegraphed from the State senate of the Washington Legislature, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OLYMPIA, WASH., February 1½, 1919.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.:

Senate joint memorial 10.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Hon. WESLEY L. JONES has introduced in the Senate of the United States a resolution requesting the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to immediately remove the emergency restriction against the acceptance by American shipyards of foreign contracts for steel shipbuilding; and

Whereas the shipyards of the State of Washington are well equipped to accept and perform such contracts without prejudice to the interests of the United States; and

Whereas the obtaining of such contracts at this time will be of great advantage in assisting the industries of the State of Washington in the creating of industrial activity and in furnishing employment during the critical reconstruction period now confronting the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, respectfully petition your honorable body to recommend the immediate passage of such resolution and such other appropriate action as may be necessary to secure the removal of the restriction herein referred to; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this memorial to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington; and be it further

Resolved, That this memorial be telegraphed to Edward M. Hurley, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board; to Charles Piez, Director General of the Fleet Corporation; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; the President of the United States Senate; and to the Senators and Representatives from the State of Washington.

The foregoing resolution was adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington, February 13, 1919.

VICTOR ZEDNICK,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to say that I had a conference with Mr. Hurley this morning, and I think it is but fair to state that he is not very favorably inclined to this proposal, but that his reasons are not based upon diplomatic reasons, but upon his ideas as to the business situation. That is all I wish to say about it at this time.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask to have read a telegram from the Legislature of the State of Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., February 1½, 1919.

Senator SELDEN P. SPENCER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Both house and senate adopted resolutions to-day calling on Missouri representatives to secure amendment to rivers and harbors bill, which appropriates only $400,000 for the Missouri, when Congress voted in 1910 to expend $2,000,000 a year for 10 years and has spent less than $1,000,000 a year. Full resolution by mail.

W. G. KITCHEN, Chief Clerk.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fairfield and Waterville, in the State of Maine, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 1029, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Rawlins, Wyo., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 757, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the proposed extension of Federal control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of St. James Council, No. 298, Knights of Columbus, of Boston, Mass., and a petition of the Robert Emmett Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Boston, Mass., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the executive committee of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the operation of the United States Employment Service after July 1, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, relative to water-power legislation, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Ike B. Stevens, secretary of state of the State of Tennessee, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy of senate joint resolution No. 53, session 1919, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my official signature and by order of the governor affixed the great seal of the State of Tennessee at the department, in the city of Nashville, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.]

IKE B. STEVENS,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint resolution 53.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, IN SENATE,
Nashville, February 11, 1919.

Whereas there is now being considered by a conference committee of Congress a bill entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of the dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of the interstate and foreign commerce," passed the Senate December 14, 1917, and the House of Representatives September 5, 1918; and

Whereas the water powers in the navigable rivers of the State of Tennessee and other Southern States are urgently needed for the industrial development and creation of new industries in the State of Tennessee and other Southern States:

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Tennessee especially urge its representatives in Congress and its representative on the water power bill conference committee to actively support and aid in every way that they possibly can the passage of water-power legislation at the present session of Congress and before adjournment; and

Resolved further, That the representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee safeguard to the State all of its rights and privileges reserved to the State under its constitution in its navigable rivers, and that all charges, control, and administration of water powers developed in its navigable streams, except as to matters and questions that relate purely to navigation and interstate commerce, shall be left to be regulated by the laws of the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded to each Member of the House of Representatives and each Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Adopted February 11, 1919.

ANDREW L. TODD,
Speaker of the Senate.
SETH M. WALKER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 13, 1919.

A. H. ROBERTS, Governor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also present a resolution adopted by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of Johnson City, Tenn., stating that they are unalterably opposed to Government ownership of telephone properties and favoring the return of same to private operation, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Regular meeting of the board of mayor and aldermen was held in the courtroom, Tuesday, February 4, 1919.

Present: Mayor C. P. Faw, Aldermen Ellison, Davis, McLeod, Taylor, and Sharp, City Manager Dyer, and Acting Recorder Artz.

Absent: Aldermen Thompson, Muse, and Richardson, City Attorney Barnes, and Recorder Warren.

The following proceedings were had, to wit:

Upon motion of Messrs. Ellison and Davis, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas Johnson City, Tenn., has for several years suffered the expense and inconvenience of two antiquated and inefficient telephone exchanges; and

"Whereas an earnest but unsuccessful effort has been made by the board of mayor and aldermen, since the Government assumed control over the telephone system of the country, to secure relief from said condition through the Postmaster General; and

"Whereas as in the case of railroads, the service rendered by said telephone exchanges has not only become more unsatisfactory but more expensive under Government control: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the board of mayor and aldermen, That they are unalterably opposed to Government ownership of telephone properties, but favor an early return of same to private operation, under proper Federal regulation: Be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Representative in Congress from the first district and to the two United States Senators from Tennessee."

Then the board adjourned.

Adopted February 4, 1919.

C. P. FAW, Mayor.

Attest:

J. ALLEN ARTZ,
Assistant Recorder.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a communication from the local board for Carroll County, Tenn., relative to the deportation of alien enemies, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUNTINGDON, TENN., February 12, 1919.

Senator KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Since the war is now over and the period of reconstruction has begun, we trust Congress will not overlook the fact that there are many in our midst who were born in Germany and other foreign lands and had lived here many years prior to the war without ever having declared their intention to become citizens of our country. Some did declare themselves, but when it came to the protection of this great country that had nurtured and protected these ingrates they all claimed exemption from military service on the ground of noncitizenship. We believe that all such who are in our midst should be deported. For every alien so exempted a good American boy had to go to the front while they remained at home in ease and safety.

We appeal to you as Tennessee's representative in Congress, a State that has purer Anglo-Saxon population than any other State in the Union and who holds in her bosom as brave men and women as live on the earth anywhere, to see to it now, while we are going through this reconstruction, that not only the German cowards who surrendered their papers but the nondeclarants as well who claimed exemption on the ground of noncitizenship shall be sent where they belong—back to Germany or other former places of residence—for both of them are the same kind of parasites. A man not willing to fight certainly would not make a desirable citizen.

We believe in the "Put nobody on guard but Americans" plan, and we trust that as our representative at Washington you will support a measure restricting immigration in the future and that will make it impossible for the nondeclarant alien who claimed exemption from military service to be naturalized in the future.

We believe the time has come when a line should be drawn between patriots and traitors, and it should be done while things are fresh in our minds. We trust, therefore, that each Member of Congress from the "Volunteer State" will support a measure on the lines above suggested, and, if necessary, that some of our Members may introduce such a measure.

Yours, respectfully,

LOCAL BOARD FOR CARROLL COUNTY,
J. B. COX, Chairman.
J. SAM JOHNSON.
W. H. EASON.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also present a communication from the Ministerial Alliance of Nashville, Tenn., concerning Christian unity and a league of nations, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION CONCERNING CHRISTIAN UNITY AND A LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

I. CHRISTIAN UNITY.

The Ministerial Alliance of Nashville, Tenn., composed of Protestant ministers of the city, recognizing the gracious Providence which has given victory to the allied armies that have been fighting for the suppression of crime and violence and for the establishment of righteousness and peace in the earth, desire to give expression of their gratitude to Almighty God for the blessings wherewith He has blessed us and our allies in this struggle of might against right. We desire to give renewed expression to our faith in the adaptation of Christianity to the world's moral and spiritual needs and in the ultimate spread and triumph among men and among all nations of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, which alone has power to banish war from the earth and to give ultimate and permanent peace to the world. But to accomplish this beneficent and far-reaching result it is absolutely necessary at this time to internationalize all Christians if we are to Christianize all nations. The time has come when the followers of Christ everywhere are called on as perhaps never before to cultivate the spirit of unity and cooperation in their great and common task. For the accomplishment of the task to which this generation is called, and for which the opportune day has come, we need to reconsecrate ourselves as Christians not only to ceaseless prayers, but to sacrificial and undivided service for humanity, a service of unified effort so important and imperative at this epoch and crisis in the world's history that it will be nothing less than a moral crime for it to be marred or defeated by sectarian rivalries and jealousies. (A league of the nations of the world, if it is to be on the basis of the ethical ideals of Christianity, which is the only basis upon which it can be effected, should be preceded and accompanied by such a union or league of Christians of all names and creeds as will bring upon the nations of the earth the impact of a world-wide Christian church unified in brotherly love and cooperative service.) The call of the Master of mankind that comes to his followers to-day is to put the emphasis of our faith and preaching and practice upon their unities and not upon their differences. Let this spirit of brotherly love and cooperation be all along the far-flung battle lines of world conquest for Christ, the inspiration and the passion of the new Christian patriotism that will be no less national because it has become international.

II. A LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

This ministerial alliance also desires to give its indorsement to the movement looking to a league of all nations for the promotion of world-wide and permanent peace; and without as yet indorsing any one of the different theories or plans suggested for the organization and maintenance of such a league, as opposed to other theories and plans, we give it as our deep conviction that some such union of nations as that proposed is the wisest, if, indeed, it be not the only, method of effectually preventing war in the future and of promoting that spirit of brotherhood among nations such as can alone be the guarantee of permanence for the league if it should be organized.

To President Woodrow Wilson and to all other statesmen of the world, to whatsoever nationality they may belong, who are seriously and unselfishly endeavoring to establish on the basis of Christian ideals of justice, of liberty, and of human brotherhood such a league as that proposed, we pledge our devout and unceasing prayers to the God and Father of all men and all nations that he would divinely guide those who are working to bring about this fellowship of nations in a league of peace and crown their deliberations and efforts with such success as shall make it a supreme blessing to the whole world.

W. F. TILLETT.

Mr. KING. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint memorial (H. J. M. 2) memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of an amendment to the bill introduced by Senator BANKHEAD in the United States Senate on December 4, 1918, known as S. 5088; also the same amendment to a bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator SWANSON on December 5, 1918, known as S. 5098; also the same amendment to a bill introduced by Mr. SHACKLEFORD in the House of Representatives of the United State on December 12, 1918, known as H. R. 13354; and also to any other similar bills introduced in Congress in order to provide a more equitable application of Federal aid for post roads in the sparsely settled States, and to provide a more reasonable time limit for the availability of such Federal aid.

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Utah, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there are pending in the Congress of the United States bills known as S. 5088 and S. 5098 and H. R. 13354, all of which provide for additional Federal aid for post roads under the terms of the act of Congress approved July 11, 1916, and commonly known as the Federal aid road act; and

Whereas section 6 of said Federal aid road act provides that the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and

Whereas, although additional Federal aid for road building at the present time is highly desirable, nevertheless those States having large areas and relatively small populations will be unable to avail themselves of the benefits of this act as amended to provide additional Federal aid without a disproportionate burden of taxation:

Now, therefore, your memorialists urgently request that the said bills, and any other similar bills which may be introduced in the Congress of the United States, be so amended that section 6 of the said Federal aid road act will provide that in those States where the average population per square mile of area is 100 persons or more, based upon the census of 1910, the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and that in those States where the average population per square mile of area, based on the census of 1910, is less than 100 persons, the share of the United States shall be increased one-fourth of 1 per cent for each person, or major fraction thereof, less than 100 per square mile; and, furthermore,

Whereas section 3 of said Federal aid road act provides that so much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State only until the close of the succeeding fiscal year; and

Whereas on account of the said provision of section 3 of said act, local conditions existing in some States render it practically impossible to comply with the terms of the act:

Now, therefore, your memorialists also request that said bills now pending in Congress, and any other similar bills which may be introduced, be amended so that section 3 of the said Federal aid road act will provide that so much of the appropriation to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State until the close of the second succeeding fiscal year; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Utah to the Congress of the United States and to each body of said Congress.

The foregoing H. J. M. 2 was publicly read by title and immediately thereafter signed by the president of the senate, in the presence of the house over which he presides, and the fact of such signing duly entered upon the journal this 5th day of February, 1919.

G. H. DEER,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Attest:

ADAM L. PETERSEN,
Secretary of Senate.

The foregoing H. J. M. 2 was publicly read by title and immediately thereafter signed by the speaker of the house, in the presence of the house over which he presides, and the fact of such signing duly entered upon the journal this 4th day of February, 1919.

CHARLES C. RICHARDS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

HUGO B. ANDERSON,
Chief Clerk of House.

Received from the house of representatives this 6th day of February, 1919.

Approved, February 6, 1919.

SIMON BAMBERGER,
Governor.

Received from the governor and filed in the office of the secretary of state this 6th day of February, 1919.

HARDEN BENNION,
Secretary of State.
By JERROLD R. LETCHER,
Deputy.

STATE OF UTAH,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE.

I, Harden Bennion, secretary of state of the State of Utah, do hereby certify that the attached is a full, true, and correct copy of a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah memorializing Congress for the passage of an amendment to bills now pending before said body to provide for a more equitable application for Federal aid for post roads, etc., as appears on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Utah this 6th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.] HARDEN BENNION,
Secretary of State.
By JERROLD R. LETCHER,
Deputy.

Mr. KING presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salt Lake City, Sandy, Midvale, Murray, and Magna, all in the State of Utah, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ROANOKE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5580) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Martin and Bertie, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River at or near Williamston, N. C., and I submit a report (No. 722) thereon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUG RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5478) granting the consent of Congress to the Fall Branch Coal Co. to construct a bridge across Tug River, and I submit a report (No. 723) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5610) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate and arrange with certain foreign Governments to convert their present indebtedness to the United States into marketable and saleable securities; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 5611) granting to certain claimants a preference right to purchase public lands in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 5612) to create the Yakima National Park in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 5613) to donate a captured German machine gun to the town of Littleton, in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 5614) to create a Federal industrial relations commission; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 5615) to authorize the President of the United States to restore Milo O. Frank and William H. Fort first lieutenants in the National Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 5616) for the promotion and retirement of Lieut. Col. Samuel R. Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLICITY OF STOCK SALES.

Mr. SIMMONS. I introduce a bill sent to me by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is a bill to provide for furnishing information with respect to shares of stock offered to the public, and prescribing penalties. I introduce it at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 5617) to provide for furnishing information with respect to shares of stock offered to the public and prescribing penalties was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay the amounts due in all claims for damages (other than such as are occasioned by vessels of the Navy) to and loss of privately owned property, occurring subsequent to April 6, 1917, where the amount of the claim does not exceed $500, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer to the active list as extra numbers and next below their running mates in the regular naval service such officers of the Naval Reserve Force, not exceeding 50 in number, who have served in the Navy during both the Spanish War and the war against Germany and her allies, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the United States Naval Reserve Force intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that any retired officer of the Navy or Marine Corps who has creditably performed active duty for a period of not less than one year and a half during the war with Germany shall be promoted on the retired list with the next higher rank, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing that any retired officer of the Navy or Marine Corps who has been or shall be detailed to active duty shall receive the rank, pay, and allowance of the grade not above that of captain in the Navy or colonel in the Marine Corps, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LENROOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for the construction of a road through the village of Odanah in the Bad River Reservation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES IN HONOR OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to submit a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration. I will say that it conforms to the usual form of printing the memorial exercises in honor of a deceased Senator or Representative.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 14,100 copies of the proceedings and the eulogies delivered in Congress on Theodore Roosevelt, late a President of the United States, with illustration, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senators and Representatives of the State of New York, and 100 copies, bound in full morocco, for the use of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt: Provided, That there shall be included in such document the proclamation of the President and the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States on the death of Mr. Roosevelt, an account of the funeral services, and other matters as may be deemed appropriate.

INDEPENDENCE OF ARMENIA.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 454), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the Armenian nation has for many centuries occupied certain regions in Asia Minor, extending from Ararat to the Gulf of Alexandretta, including the southern littoral of the Black Sea, in the region of Trebizond; and

Whereas the Armenian nation is the oldest nation inhabiting said regions, and has developed therein a national culture with a common language and religion; and

Whereas the Armenians are capable of self-government, and their common interests and aspirations make proper the erection of a national Armenian Government in said region: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Armenia be constituted a free and independent country, and that the Armenian people be permitted to erect therein a free national republic for the maintenance of their national rights and the perpetuation of their native language, culture, and traditions.

INDEPENDENCE OF GREECE.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 455), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas people of the Greek race have from time immemorial occupied the lands in Europe and Asia Minor bordering upon the Ægean Sea and have also occupied the islands of said sea; and

Whereas the political independence and the culture of the Greeks were for many centuries submerged by the intrusion of the Ottoman Turks into said lands and their despotic domination of the same; and

Whereas the present Kingdom of Greece was the first country in said region to be liberated from Turkish rule, and since its establishment has consistently striven for the liberation of the people of Greek nationality, who reside in Epirus, Southern Albania, Thrace, and Anatolia; and

Whereas the Greek nation has been loyal to the cause of the allied nations in the war against the central empires and has rendered valuable military assistance and made other contributions to the success of the allies in their campaign in the Balkans, notwithstanding the pro-German policy and attitude of the former Greek King: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the territory of the Kingdom of Greece be extended to include Epirus, Southern Albania, Thrace, the islands of the Ægean Sea, and those parts of Anatolia the inhabitants of which are of Greek nationality.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15706. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I feel obliged to attend a very important meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs this morning, and I shall, therefore, occupy the time of the Senate for just a moment to conclude the remarks which I was making when the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon.

At that time I was calling attention to some specific items in the pending bill, among which was that found on page 5, appropriating $3,000,000 for the purpose, among other things, of acquiring the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. I made some statements with regard to that project which have been challenged by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], whose familiarity with the history of the project is very great and far more accurate, both as to conclusion and detail, than mine. I shall not challenge any of the statements which he has made, for I have not had time to examine them and because I know that he would not have made them if they were not based upon facts. But I may say, Mr. President, that this is an old project, one which has been before Congress for a good many years and which is now in the conclusive stages of what may be called a successful result.

This canal is desired, among other things, for naval and strategic purposes. The Senator from Delaware, I think, referred to a document which emanates from the War Department and refers to the use of this canal for the transfer, in case of emergency or when desired, of our fleet from one point to the other, without subjecting itself to the danger of attack on the sea.

The modern battleship, Mr. President, requires a draft of from 25 to 30 feet of water, and this canal has but 9 feet; the modern superdreadnaught requires a width for safe passage through a canal very much more than the width of this canal now is. All of which means, Mr. President, that the acquisition of this canal is merely the initial step in a series of tremendous appropriations for its enlargement, and until so enlarged the canal can not be utilized for the purposes mentioned. Of course, I realize that the canal can be used in a small way for the passage from the Delaware into the Chesapeake Bay of craft engaged in commerce. That, however, I do not understand is anything more than an incident to the acquisition of this canal.

Mr. President, if we have waited so many years for the final acquisition of this canal, I submit that in these days of peace, while negotiating a league of nations that shall make wars and the rumors of wars impossible, at a time when the Nation, having just emerged from the bloodiest of all conflicts, is sympathetic with any movement having for its purpose the permanent banishment of war from the face of the earth, and having in mind the enormous expense of that war and the enormous appropriations which we are now making, it might wait for a few years before $3,000,000 of the people's money are appropriated for its acquisition.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado object to my interrupting him as he goes along with respect to the particular point he desires to make?

Mr. THOMAS. I would not object to it, except that I want to get through as soon as possible. Of course, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. For example, I desire to say that the reason the canal has not been in operation during the past war and of very great use is the opposition of the character which is presented by the Senator from Colorado to-day. Of course, the Senator is familiar with the earnest manner in which I have advocated the purchase and deepening of this canal for the last five or six years——

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. To illustrate, when you start an effort of this sort in time of peace, the reply is that we are never going to have any war, and when we are done with the war that we are never going to have any other war.

I will say to the Senator, for example, that during the last war, in the U-boat raid on the Atlantic seaboard just 3 miles off Delaware capes, probably enough ships were torpedoed and sunk and cargoes destroyed to have paid for the whole building of this canal. Those ships would undoubtedly have passed through this canal had it been constructed. I merely use that as an illustration. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the sole purpose of this canal, or the greatest purpose, being naval or military, although that would be very great.

I have here a statement of Admiral Benson, the head of our Navy, showing before the war the immense importance of it, and its great commercial use is testified to by a report from the Department of Commerce.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I know that there was large destruction of sea craft during the spring and summer of last year, but I very much doubt if even 50 per cent of the vessels destroyed would ever have passed through this canal if it had been in existence. They were boats engaged in the West Indian traffic and the South American traffic, and some of them, of course, were coastwise vessels.

Frankly, I am opposed, either in time of peace or in time of war, to the expenditure of the people's money for such purposes. I think I ought to say that. My suggestion that the appropriation should not be made now is by no means a concession upon my part that it ought to be made at all. I know the Senator from Delaware feels differently from myself regarding the subject. I know he feels, and feels with all the ardency of his nature, that the acquisition of this canal is essential to the commercial and military needs of the country. I do not think so. So far as the commercial needs are concerned, the canal, if it is not desired to be sold by the stockholders because of its profitable character, there is no reason why the Government should interest itself in the subject by taking it off their hands.

Now, I confess I am no expert; I may be entirely wrong; but my judgment is that the aircraft of the future will be the great arm of offense and defense of the Nation, not only on the seacoast but on the sea and on the land; that it will ultimately attain that position through its development, which is now coming very fast, and which I think the Government should recognize and encourage as vigorously as possible. The battleship itself will be as obsolete in 20 years as the old three-masted frigate of war of pre-Civil War days now is. That, however, is merely conjecture.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Might I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to show to the Senator how this matter has been considered. On last evening I handed to the Senator the report made by the War Department—the Chief of Staff and the War College—in regard to the utility of this canal, and I am almost sure from my recollection that it shows how a descent would probably be made at the capes of the Delaware and a lodgment effected by any great naval power that could overcome our high-seas fleet. That joins in precisely with the idea which the Senator has now expressed in regard to the efficiency of aircraft. A lodgment being made at the port of Lewes, which is the only fine undefended harbor on the Atlantic seaboard between New York and Norfolk, that lodgment could be made an aviation base, from which this city could be attacked in one hour by aircraft, Philadelphia in less than an hour, and New York in a little more than an hour in the way that aircraft go now. The result of it might be that this lodgment would be effected because our Navy could not be concentrated there for the purpose of preventing it, and we would be subjected to some of the horrors which have occurred in Belgium simply because our Navy could not prevent that lodgment, which they could do if the ships lying in New York Harbor and at Hampton Roads were able to prevent a landing being made. I only cite that to illustrate how all this defense work comes from that careful consideration which I know the learned Senator, whose great ability is known to us all, would give to a law case were he considering it before he went into court.

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, the Senator's statement proves too much. If foreign countries are developing aircraft to the extent that would make possible such a calamity as has been outlined, then all the naval safeguards against such a calamity would be utterly inadequate to prevent it, because we know now that by building platforms upon the turrets containing the great guns of the modern superdreadnaught aircraft are carried in great numbers, relatively speaking, and can be launched from those bases and accomplish the identical things to which the Senator refers, unless our own aircraft development is sufficiently comprehensive to overcome it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish the Senator to understand me as saying that aircraft could effect a lodgment such as I have described. I said that naval vessels, our high-seas fleet being defeated, could effect such a lodgment and use it as a base.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I understand the Senator. I am not afraid of any lodgment being made on the coast of the United States by any naval force in existence. In these days of submarines, mines, depth bombs, and huge coast guns, I undertake to say that the entire British Navy, in the event of an unfortunate conflict between that great power and ourselves, could only penetrate the confines of this country by coming by way of Canada, which, of course, we could not prevent under any circumstances. One of the significant features of this war has been the inability of any fleet, however powerful, to effect a landing or a lodgment on hostile territory, with the single exception of the unfortunate expedition at Gallipoli, and there the landing was made difficult, of course, but it was nevertheless made, because of the absence of those very elements of defense to which I have called attention.

Mr. SMOOT. And it proved a very expensive undertaking.

Mr. THOMAS. And the expense of it, both in blood and in treasure, was simply appalling. The day has passed when any naval force can effect a lodgment on the shores of any country that is properly defended by modern appliances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not quite understand how naval vessels are going to be benefited by the purchase of this canal and the dredging of it to a depth of 12 feet.

Mr. THOMAS. Thirty-five feet, if necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the report, which says:

> Regarding the further improvement of the already recommended waterway between Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay, the Chief of Engineers concurs with both the special board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the opinion that it is advisable for the United States to buy the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal at a cost to the United States not exceeding $2,514,290, and to then enlarge it to a sea-level canal of 12 feet depth and 90 feet bottom width, with the least interference practicable to existing traffic, following in general the methods indicated by the special board, at a cost which, including the first year's maintenance, amounts in round numbers to $8,000,000, of which $3,000,000 should be made available by the first appropriation, and economical work will then require subsequent appropriations of from $500,000 to a million dollars per year.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I think I can possibly enlighten the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of course the statement of the Senator from Utah, which he reads from simply one of the reports, of which there are a multitude, shows that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing." There is no doubt in my mind that the purchase of this canal will lead ultimately to its deepening sufficiently to permit the passage of our naval vessels through it. That is what the naval experts recommend. I hold in my hand, for example, a monograph by Admiral Benson on this question, from which I can read to the Senator what his views are, if the Senator would care to hear them, but the information on this very subject, to be found in the reports made from time to time by commercial bodies, by naval commissions, by military commissions, and by the commercial experts of the Commerce Department, is so voluminous that in order to bring it before the Senate it would take too much time, but I can refer the Senator to all those reports.

My hope is—and I state it frankly—that the purchase and deepening of this canal will so demonstrate the great utility of that kind of transportation commercially, will so show how the power of our fleet can be greatly increased—and Admiral Mahan is one of the great authorities on that subject from whom I have freely quoted in some of the efforts I have made in regard to it—that it will result finally in the construction of a Philadelphia-New York canal, we will call it, which will many times multiply the efficiency of our fleet. While, of course, a 12-foot depth would only accommodate light-draft vessels—and that would be a very great thing commercially—I have no idea that this canal when purchased will be limited to 12 feet. I think its utility, as suggested in that report, will be so demonstrated that the Federal Government will continue to deepen and widen the canal until it is really made an effective waterway.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Delaware has made that statement. I think the Senate ought to know approximately what the expenditure will be upon this canal to make it 35 feet deep, according to the engineers' report.

Mr. RANSDELL. If I may interrupt the Senator, he said to "35 feet"; I presume he means 25 feet.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from Delaware said "35 feet."

Mr. SAULSBURY. Twenty-five feet is the extent to which they have gone in making these estimates, and that depth will probably accommodate all except the superdreadnaughts of our Navy. I can tell the Senator, in round numbers, exactly what the cost of such a canal will be; it will be about $12,000,000 altogether.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not figure it in that way if this report is true. The report says that if it is made a sea-level canal of 12 feet depth and 90 feet bottom width it will cost $8,000,000. I understand that the canal to-day is about 9 feet deep.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It has a depth of 9 feet; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It has a depth of 9 feet, and 12 feet will make 3 feet extra. Now, if the 3 feet extra cost $8,000,000, then if the canal were deepened to 35 feet, deducting 9 feet, the present depth, from 35 feet, would leave 26 feet, and 3 into 26 goes nearly nine times, and nine times $8,000,000 is $72,000,000, which would be the cost to make it 35 feet deep; and the Senator knows that the deeper the canal is dredged the more costly it is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the figuring of the Senator shows that anything can be done by a man with a lead pencil, and that my statement in the first place, that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," is absolutely true. I will explain to the Senator just why his calculations are all wrong. It is because of facts with which the Senator is not familiar.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will permit me just a moment——

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to say to the Senator that I simply base my figures upon this report. If the report is wrong, then, of course, my figures are wrong.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The report is not wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, does the Senator admit, then, that to deepen this canal to 12 feet from 9 feet and make a bottom width of 90 feet will cost $8,000,000?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think probably the engineers are accurate in that estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I want to say to the Senator that would indicate that for every 3 feet of additional depth it will cost $8,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; I will explain that to the Senator, if he will permit me.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if there is a way of explaining it, I should like to have the explanation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can explain it, I think, to the satisfaction of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will be glad to hear the Senator's explanation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the present canal is a lock canal. That includes the purchase price of the canal at $2,500,000. The upper levels of the lock canal must be cut down until they are 12 feet below ordinary sea level; so that the greatest cost will be the first cutting, where you have to go down, for example, in the upper levels, 22 feet in order to get your 12 feet. Thereafter the dredging is not, as the Senator supposes, much more expensive, but the water-borne dredges can, of course, excavate up to a reasonable depth much more cheaply the greater amount they excavate at one place and the better transportation they have; so that these figures have all been estimated and given in the reports of the engineers, and I can refer the Senator to the engineers' estimates, for a width of 125 feet and 25 feet deep. That would be sufficient to demonstrate absolutely the utility and usefulness of this canal, and would pass a very great many of our naval vessels, all of our submarines, all of our tenders, and answer for ordinary commercial purposes. The cost, including the purchase of this canal, widened to 125 feet and to a sea-level depth of 25 feet, is given on page 10 of Document 196, referred to, and is stated to be $12,424,500. I will say to the Senator that I am practically certain that that will be reduced half a million dollars on account of conditions that exist regarding land purchases and things of that kind, which are estimated at a very high rate; but I hope I have explained to the Senator how the first cutting is the most expensive.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the very document from which he is reading; and this is what I find:

If the lock canal is ever to be deepened to 25 feet, it would be advantageous to so arrange its foundations, sills, and floors as to allow of such deepening without serious extra cost or serious interference with traffic, and this will add also somewhat to cost of construction. Making an allowance for these items, and stating the special board's estimates in round numbers, its estimates will stand as follows:

Lock canal, 12-foot depth, cost $20,000,000.
Lock canal, 25-foot depth, cost $30,000,000.
Sea-level canal, 12-foot depth—

And that is what we are undertaking to arrive at—

$33,000,000.
Sea-level canal, 25-foot depth, $45,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Where does the Senator get those figures?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 7 of the report of the office of the Chief of Engineers, War Department, dated Washington, August 9, 1913, addressed to the Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. But the Senator is referring to the wrong canal. The Senator is referring to a canal in another portion of the Atlantic seaboard. He is referring now, if the Senator will permit me, to the canal across New Jersey, which is not even started yet.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it says here, beginning with paragraph 3:

Regarding the further improvement of the already recommended waterway between Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay, the Chief of Engineers concurs with both the special board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the opinion that it is advisable for the United States to buy the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, at a cost to the United States of not exceeding $2,514,290, and to then enlarge it to a sea-level canal of 12 feet depth and 90 feet bottom width, with the least interference practicable to existing traffic, following, in general, the methods indicated by the special board, at a cost which, including the first year's maintenance, amounts in round numbers to $8,000,000, of which $3,000,000 should be made available by the first appropriation, and economical work will then require subsequent appropriations of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 per year.

Then paragraph 4 says:

The Chief of Engineers concurs with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the view that further deepening to 25 feet of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal at an extra cost of $4,500,000 should await further observation——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; but, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah simply skipped paragraph 5. Paragraphs 3 and 4 refer to the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. Paragraph 5 goes on to say:

Regarding the proposed waterway from Delaware River to New York Bay, the Chief of Engineers concurs—

And so forth. Paragraph 6 proceeds to consider the New York Canal; and the figures from which the Senator reads are in paragraph 6, which refers to the building of the New York Canal, which, of course, will take a vastly greater amount of money and will probably take $45,000,000. I hope the Senator sees that he is reading from the wrong page.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was only reading the report, and I have not had time to study it, because it was handed to me by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] just a few moments ago.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But not in regard to this canal.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, it has reference to the canal.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is precisely what I have been going through for five years here—trying to get my colleagues to understand that we are talking about one thing which has been thoroughly estimated, and they bring in inadvertently, unknowingly, figures which refer to entirely different things. I have been managing to educate about one Senator a year on this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, since the name of the Senator from Louisiana has been mentioned——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for just a moment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I simply want to say that I was very glad to hand to the Senator from Utah the report to which he has been referring, which covers two or three sections. He inadvertently had the section between New York Bay and the Delaware River confused with the section between the Delaware River and Chesapeake Bay. It was just a little and very natural error on his part.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in a matter of this kind what are a few millions between friends? The fact is that Uncle Sam's Treasury will be burdened to some degree, expressed in seven figures or probably eight figures, whether the enterprise is as contended by the Senator from Delaware or as urged by the Senator from Utah. The probabilities are, and I think the history of our river and harbor appropriations sustains the inference, that whatever the estimates may be the ultimate cost to the Treasury will greatly exceed them.

Mr. President, I am not going to dwell longer upon this subject. I have said perhaps more than I ought to have said, and the discussion has been more illuminating by those who have interrupted than by myself. But before I take my seat, Mr. President, I want to register a protest, as solemnly as I can, against the devotion of the few remaining days of the Sixty-fifth Congress to the consideration of business like the river and harbor bill. We have about 14 days left for actual work; and the business upon the calendar of the most tremendous and pressing importance is, in my judgment, altogether beyond the possibility of intelligent disposal if we should devote every minute of every hour of every day to its consideration up to the 4th of March next at 12 o'clock noon. We have spent two or three days upon this bill, and it will doubtless consume as many more—valuable days, precious days—when the great department supply bills, the great appropriation bills necessary to operate this Government for the next fiscal year, are thrust aside, to say nothing of a number of conference reports which refer to matters of equal importance.

In addition, Mr. President, this Congress ought to—although I do not believe it can—enact some legislation before it adjourns for the purpose of repressing the seditious and insurrectionary conditions that are becoming more and more menacing in the great centers of the country every day. We are fiddling our time away when the Nation seems to be in the very throes of a coming volcanic upheaval, and we are doing nothing about it except determining how much money we can obtain for this scheme and for that and the other out of the Treasury of the United States.

One of the most ominous articles I have read in many days appears in this morning's Washington Post. It is entitled "'Reds' Beyond Reach," and it is from the pen of George Rothwell Brown. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read this article. I hope every man and every woman within the sound of my voice will read it, because it will convey to them some degree of knowledge of the manner in which the devotees of the red flag of anarchy have conducted themselves since the armistice was signed and the surveillance of the Government upon their activities relaxed. It appears that in two of the great cities of the Union there are scores of publications that have sprung up like mushrooms, printed on red paper or in red ink, and reaching from 500,000 to 5,000,000 of the people daily, not only encouraging but advising insurrection, not only suggesting but preaching the doctrine of the dagger and the torch, and announcing that when the hour arrives—and it will arrive soon—universal massacre and destruction of all except the criminals composing these organizations will begin. In other words, these publications advocate and practice treason against the Government of the United States and the State governments, and are doing it with impunity, conscious of the relaxation of existing laws which in themselves were in many directions too weak to meet the emergencies confronting the officers of the Government.

We should make treason odious in this country by appropriate legislation—by summary legislation. If necessary, we should sweep aside everything upon the calendar and enact such legislation now, because self-preservation is the first law of nature. We are minimizing the magnitude of these conditions, as Americans are always apt to do until the crisis shall have been reached and possibly passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator is aware, doubtless, that there is a nation-wide propaganda for the repeal of the espionage law, and for the purpose of permitting the United States mails to be made the vehicle of carrying the very literature of which the Senator speaks, which advocates assassination, murder, revolution, and the destruction of our form of government.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes, Mr. President. It is being done openly; and why should it not be done openly, when the officials of the Government must be supine for lack of legislative authority to proceed? I suppose the widening of Podunk Creek, or $1,000,000 to the Kinnikinnick River, or $5,000,000 for the purchase of a canal, is so supremely important that we have not time to consider, much less to discuss, this menace. We prefer to divide the raiment of the Republic in the shadow of the cross rather than take up the problem of meeting this menace and the enacting of legislation that will at least place upon the authorities the responsibility of seeing to it that government of the people shall not perish from the earth.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that if this bill is to be passed we shall pass it, and take up this more important subject, and do something about it before Congress adjourns.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think no one can controvert the very impressive statement that has just been made by the Senator from Colorado. I doubt if many Senators even understand the widespread propaganda which is going on in the United States to-day, not only through the press, to which the Senator has referred, but in innumerable meetings where treason is being taught and talked without remonstrance on the part of the Government. Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and the people of this country will have to give some consideration to their own self-preservation.

However important the duties of the President may be on the other side—and I do not intend to discuss that matter, because there is a difference of opinion—I say that he can not perform a more important duty than taking the lead in the matter to which the Senator from Colorado has referred, and stamping out in some form this wicked propaganda which is going on in the United States. If the occupant of the chair in this Chamber were exercising the duties of the President of the United States I know what would be done, I think. I think some action would be taken by Congress which would at least check this evil, which is likely to be a scourge within the immediate future.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss that particular question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Colorado suggested that Congress should either set aside the bill we now have or pass it promptly and proceed to consider this matter. I think I appreciate the importance of the statement he made and the subject he referred to, but I wanted to ask him, and as he has been called out I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts, whether he knows if any administrative officer of the Government has submitted any proposal to Congress that would meet the situation, or has any committee of Congress reported any legislation that Congress could proceed to consider to meet the situation?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have not any information that would enable me to answer that question in the affirmative, but what Congress needs and what the country needs is a leader in this matter. We are going to waste our effort unless we have some determining factor to point out the way which we should go, and under the conditions which obtain to-day we have not any such leader.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator know of anyone who ought to be better able to direct us as to how to proceed than the administrative officers of the Government?

Mr. WEEKS. Of course, they should be the motive force in whatever action is taken, and Congress will very readily follow.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that there is a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee investigating that subject now.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, but, Mr. President, that subcommittee has been in active operation for weeks—I do not know but as long as two months—and the Senator from Florida knows very well that there is not a Senator in this Chamber who has time to read one-tenth of the testimony which they have taken. They are not likely to report within a definite time, and if we wait for a report from that investigation we are going to be deluged with this question, and, I am afraid, in a bloody way.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is right in referring to the subcommittee to which the Senator from Florida referred. The duties of that committee are limited and do not involve any recommendation for legislation. They were merely to investigate a charge that was made in the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with respect to the use of money to carry on a propaganda in favor of the brewers. Then, the scope of the committee was enlarged to ascertain if there was any German propaganda in this country; and lastly, by an amendment, or another resolution, rather, which was offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a few days ago, the subcommittee was directed to inquire what activities were going on in this country by the Bolsheviki, whether there was any money being expended for the purpose of disseminating Bolsheviki sentiments in this country. But I do not understand that that committee is authorized to formulate any legislation or to report any particular legislation.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Utah knows perfectly well that it will not formulate, in the immediate future at least, any effective legislation which is to deal with this question as it should be dealt with.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator states the matter accurately, and I regret——

Mr. WEEKS. And I am not disparaging the subcommittee in the least.

Mr. KING. I know the Senator is not; I happen to be a member of this subcommittee. I know the Senator has no intention of doing that, but I regret that there is no committee now working upon the question, which committee would be ready to submit at an early date concrete recommendation to deal with the question to which the Senator from Colorado referred.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that an inquiry ought to be made as to whether any money was spent in the interest of this propaganda prompts me to say that it is not necessary to spend money to start such a propaganda. The maladministration of justice and unfair dealings with patriotic men arouses a feeling of antagonism which ultimately makes alliances with any who favor a kindlier and better disposition toward the average citizen.

We were discussing here the other day with a great deal of vigor the court-martial revelations before the Committee on Military Affairs. Such revelations are calculated to bring into disrepute the officers and offices of the Government.

This morning I am informed that under the direction of the Department of Justice soldiers returning from abroad are being arrested in the city of Detroit for wearing their uniforms one day after they have returned, and an appeal made to the War Department says the War Department has nothing to do with the matter. They take one view and the Department of Justice takes another, the Department of Justice construing the law as they think it should be construed, which it is not too much to say is in direct opposition to the construction of the law which is placed upon it by the War Department. Oh, Mr. President, has it come to pass that a soldier who has honored his uniform by fighting the battles of his country can not wear that uniform home with him?

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator say that has occurred or that he has read of it? It seems incredible.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have it upon authority very direct that there is an absolute conflict between the Department of Justice and the War Department upon the right of the soldier to wear his uniform after reaching his home. He may wear his uniform under the law from the scene of his military activities to his home not exceeding the period of 90 days. The War Department holds that he has a right to wear his uniform 90 days even around home, and the Department of Justice is hunting down these soldiers and prosecuting them and placing them under arrest for doing so. I am informed this was done only yesterday in the city of Detroit.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if they are being prosecuted for wearing their uniforms after the 90 days or during the 90 days?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One day after their discharge and return to their homes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. One day after their discharge?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and his return to his home; the uniform that the soldier has honored while imperiling his life perhaps.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am asking for information. I have had a great many inquiries about it, and my understanding was that they were permitted to wear their uniforms by the War Department for three or four weeks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The War Department takes that view, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, but the Department of Justice takes a directly opposite view, and in the enforcement of the law the Department of Justice has a wider and more important function than the War Department.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not want to pursue the matter any further. I am humiliated and saddened to think that any department of the Government would exercise this technical or arbitrary power and deprive soldiers of the uniform. They can not all buy civilian clothes when they get back. They have not the money with which to buy them, and if they wear civilian overcoats over clothing military in character to keep them warm they are apprehended. Now, that is not right. This makes for disorder and it makes for the very things that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Colorado are combating.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not hear the entire statement made by the Senator. I can not conceive and it seems incredible to me that the Department of Justice has, as he says, any jurisdiction in the matter or any business with it at all. What order can the Department of Justice make in regard to a man wearing his uniform?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The busybodys of the Department of Justice are too numerous and their ramifications too many for any ordinary man to fully comprehend. I have seen them in their activities over and over again. Several years ago I saw in the Senator's own State the activities of agents of the Department of Justice along our border, where warrants were not required to place citizens under arrest. Their activities are numerous, and too numerous for the ordinary man to comprehend. But what I say to you now has been put up directly to the War Department. Gen. McIntyre—and I do not think I am violating any confidence—said this morning that their view of the right of the soldier to wear his uniform and the view of the Department of Justice are seriously different. I assert that in the streets of the city of Detroit soldiers returning from service to their country have been apprehended by agents of the Department of Justice for wearing their uniforms in the streets of that city. I think it is outrageous, and it makes for this disorder of which Senators complain. It makes for disrespect of government and law and it dampens the ardor of the patriot willing to give his life for his country and yet not permitted to wear in private life the uniform he has honored.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I have one moment more?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We passed a bill here providing that a soldier could wear his uniform and own it; that it should be his. It was most appropriate legislation. I think the bill went through the Senate practically unanimously. I understand the same legislation has passed the House in a little different form, but the two bodies have not reconciled their differences, and in that interim the law which the Department of Justice construes one way and the War Department another is permitted to stand.

I do not think that many men in the Government of this country, from the highest to the lowest will approve of the pernicious activities of the Department of Justice officials in apprehending soldier boys for wearing their uniforms upon the streets of one of the great cities of this country.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that I know of thousands of men who have been discharged from the Army who are still wearing their uniforms, and there is no objection. What the Senator now states is something entirely new to me. I can not conceive of the condition being very extensive, at least to which the Senator has referred. I have not heard of any objection being interposed by the Department of Justice or by any Government official to the discharged soldiers wearing their uniforms.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope——

Mr. KING. Just in conclusion, I do not think the Senator from Michigan intends to launch a general criticism of the work of the Department of Justice and its agents during the period of the war through which we have just passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. KING. I think the Department of Justice has done admirable work.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Splendid.

Mr. KING. Thousands of patriotic citizens all over the United States have voluntarily cooperated with the administration. I know Mr. Bielaski, a Republican by the way, has attempted to discharge the duties of that important trust with fidelity and with ability. While I have differed from him in many, many particulars, because I come in contact with him very frequently, I feel constrained—and, indeed, it is a pleasure—to say that so far as I could observe he has tried to do his duty as a faithful public servant and a patriotic American. I think that the Department of Justice has earnestly and honestly tried to administer the law and to uphold the hands of the Chief Magistrate of our Government in the carrying out of the immense responsibilities resting upon him and upon all officials of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I agree with the Senator from Utah. The Department of Justice has done excellent work. I go one step further than the Senator from Utah and say that Mr. Bielaski's management of his very onerous and burdensome department has been decidedly to his credit and successful from every point of view.

I am not launching a general criticism against the department, but I do say that the construction of the present law by the War Department and its announcement to the world of the construction of the present law by the Department of Justice and its purpose and plan, as evidenced in the city of Detroit particularly, calls for condemnation and makes, in my opinion, for that lawlessness and disregard for our institutions which ought not to be permitted to grow.

The only point I rose to emphasize was the point made by the Senator from Massachusetts and that of the Senator from Utah, that it is not necessary to spend money to get propaganda against the Government if the Government itself, either thoughtlessly or unintentionally, is using its power against the ordinary decencies of civil life.

Now, that is all I am complaining about. I can not think of anything much more humiliating than to have a boy apprehended for wearing his uniform. There is not a jury in the United States that could convict that boy of violating any law of the country.

If the representatives of the Department of Justice in the city of Detroit are pursuing those tactics, which I am informed they are, and reliably informed, it ought to be stopped. Better than that, the conference committee should get together and give this boy his uniform to take home with him.

One of the lessons of my youth that I never will forget as long as I live was the uniform of an uncle hanging upon the wall of his humble cottage in his little country home in Michigan. I read out of it lessons of patriotism which I have never forgotten, and at his knee I heard of the sufferings of himself and his comrades. He did not parade his virtues; he had many of the weaknesses of which human nature complains; but he had been a patriot, and I have loved his memory from my youth, because there was attached to his service as a private soldier in the service of his country, which his uniform attested, his old gun and his old cap and his canteen.

We must not permit through any laxity of legislation these soldiers to be degraded and imposed upon for wearing the uniform if they desire to wear it and if they need to wear it. We must not permit them to be degraded by our laxity or by the overofficiousness of the officers of one department of the Government in contradiction to the wishes of another department of the Government.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; but I have not the floor.

Mr. KING. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The floor belongs to the Senator from Massachusetts, and I yield it back. I only intended to emphasize that one thought, and I leave it there.

Mr. KING. As soon as the Senator from Michigan made his statement I immediately called up the Department of Justice to ascertain what the facts were with respect to the grave accusation made by the Senator. I have just been informed by the Assistant Attorney General who has charge of these matters that no such instructions were ever given; that no such interpretation by the Department of Justice has been placed upon the law as is suggested by the Senator from Michigan. They never heard of an arrest and never authorized an arrest, and never have placed that interpretation upon the law, and if any officious, bumptious person in Michigan masquerading as a representative of the Department of Justice—perhaps, indeed, a representative of the Department of Justice—has pursued the course suggested by the Senator, my advices are from Mr. Bryan that his act was not authorized and he has exceeded any authority which was conferred upon him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think if the Senator had called up the War Department——

Mr. KING. I called up the Department of Justice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He would have found out from Gen. McIntyre that there is a disagreement between that department and the Department of Justice. But I am glad to have this information from the head of the department. I have always found them reasonable; but some overofficious and overexacting official out there has caused these boys to be humiliated and disgraced. That information comes to me without question, and I rely upon it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if I had had an opportunity previously I should have expressed the opinion, or the hope, at least, that the Senator from Michigan was mistaken in the statement which has been brought to him. Certainly such action could only be taken by a bumptious official and in total disregard of law. I do not think that any such action as that is general. There are reasons enough why this condition is spreading throughout the United States, in my opinion, without citing individual cases which may have happened in some particular locality.

But what I arose, Mr. President, to discuss very briefly was the matter which is really before the Senate, and that is the appropriation for the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal; not particularly relating to that canal, but in relation to a complete system of intercoastal canals from Maine to North Carolina, at least. I think it has been demonstrated very clearly during this war that one of the most useful purposes for which Government appropriations might be used would be the perfection of such a canal system. It is not only in a sense a military requirement, but it is a commercial requirement of the very highest order.

Let me refer for just a moment to the Cape Cod Canal in Massachusetts, for it is not necessary, I think, to do so in detail. But heretofore all the shipping going north of Cape Cod on the Atlantic coast has had to pass around the end of that cape. It is most dangerous navigation, and the end of Cape Cod is literally strewn with the wrecks which have taken place there. The number of lives lost every year is considerable, and the loss of property is very great. The Cape Cod Canal, which has now been taken over by the Government, because of military as well as commercial requirements, and which would furnish a link in this intercoastal system, will in just one item save to the people of New England north of that cape in the transportation of coal practically a million dollars a year, and not only save that in money but will save many lives and a very considerable amount of time.

For example, a vessel going from New York to Boston can use that canal and save about half the pilotage fees which would be required if it went around the cape. It is a neighborhood of fogs, and frequently Nantucket Sound is filled with vessels waiting for clear weather, so that they can get across Pollocks Rips and around the cape. I have myself remained there on a sailing vessel for three days waiting for an opportunity to get around. So when you consider the question of the loss of life, the loss of time, and the loss of money, it is of vital importance to navigation on our coast that that canal should be in operation, and it should be put in operation so as to be available for every class of vessels, including the dreadnaughts of our battle fleet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely desire to suggest, in corroboration of what the Senator from Massachusetts has been saying, that everything which he has said with regard to Cape Cod and the navigation around there in the vicinity of Nantucket and all along that coast applies with double force to the navigation around Cape Hatteras, which ought to be protected as far as possible by an intercoastal canal.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has correctly stated the case in its application to Cape Hatteras.

The Chesapeake & Delaware Canal is a part of that system; and if we should complete the so-called Raritan Canal through New Jersey, and the Cape Hatteras Canal through the sounds of North Carolina, we should have from north to south a complete system of internal waterways. It would save time, save life, and perhaps be of material advantage in case we ever again became engaged in war.

Therefore at this time, when we have great numbers of men out of employment, when we are going to have more out of employment, when there is much discussion of undertaking governmental activities for the purpose of giving employment, I submit to the Senate that no more valuable use could be made of the Government's money and of the time of the men now needing employment, than to complete or to undertake this very beneficent public work. I therefore hope that, as one link in the chain, this appropriation for the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the pending amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "$2,500,000; completing," and to insert "$1,000,000; for"; and on page 6, line 2, after the words "in all," to strike out "$2,571,080" and insert "$1,071,080," so as to make the clause read:

Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea, $1,000,000; for improvement at Camden, N. J., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1120, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $71,080; in all, $1,071,080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Chair will pardon me, I wish to say that I think the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to make some observations on that item. I know last evening he asked to have it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment having been declared carried, the Chair suggests that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], in charge of the bill, will doubtless move to reconsider the action of the Senate, if the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] shall desire to speak on the amendment.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Utah desires to submit any observations on the amendment, I suggest that that ought to be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest that we proceed in the regular way, and then, if the Senator from Utah desires to be heard upon the amendment, I shall be willing to make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. KENYON. I notice that the Senator from Utah has been called out for a few moments, but I think the matter can be again taken up when he comes back, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. FLETCHER. We will take the matter up again when the Senator from Utah returns to the Chamber, if it shall be then so desired.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 6, line 8, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $20,000; for"; and in line 10, after "$39,770," to insert "in all, $59,770," so as to make the clause read:

Cooper, Salem, Cohansey, and Maurice Rivers, Woodbury, Mantua, Raccoon, Oldmans, and Alloway Creeks, N. J.: For maintenance, $20,000; for improvement of Raccoon Creek in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 800, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $39,770; in all, $59,770.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if either of the Senators from New Jersey is here, may we not have some information as to the importance of Raccoon Creek, as to what it is? I have not been able to find the House document in reference to the matter. It may be that the chairman of the committee has it.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a project which is new, and the original estimate of the engineers for it was $39,770 to complete it; but there seemed to be a question whether or not that would entirely complete it, and the engineers stated that that amount could be advantageously and profitably spent, so we changed the word "completing" to "for" and let the item stand as it came from the other House, at $39,770.

It is shown by the document I have here, which is House Document No. 800, Sixty-third Congress, second session——

Mr. KENYON. What is the proposition?

Mr. FLETCHER. This document shows as to Raccoon Creek as follows:

2. Raccoon Creek is a crooked tidal stream emptying into the Delaware River about 18 miles below Philadelphia. The existing project for its improvement contemplates the formation of a dredged channel 7 feet deep and 75 feet in width at mean low water from the mouth to Bridgeport, thence a channel of the same depth and 60 feet wide to Springers Wharf, and thence a channel 5 feet deep at mean low water and 40 feet in width to the head of navigation at Swedesboro, with a cut-off at Molonox Shoal. This project is practically completed. It appears that the additional improvements now desired are the extension of the 7-foot depth to Swedesboro and the protection of the mouth. The district officer states that the heaviest receipts and shipments are made at the wharves at Swedesboro, for which reason he believes that the full depth of 7 feet should be carried to that point. He further states that a broad shoal has formed at the mouth of Raccoon Creek, which will require annual redredging or the construction of a jetty. The estimated cost of extending the 7-foot channel to Swedesboro and dredging between the mouth of the creek and the 7-foot curve in Delaware River is $25,300.

In other words, the division engineer disagreed with the district engineer as to the length of that jetty, but the division engineer recommends that it be constructed, as I have said, at a cost of $39,770. Then, the report further says:

4. After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports, I concur in general with the division engineer, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that the further improvement by the United States of Raccoon Creek, N. J., is deemed advisable under a modification of the existing project providing for a channel 7 feet deep at mean low water from the inner channel of Delaware River to Swedesboro, 75 feet wide to Bridgeport, thence 60 feet wide to Springers Wharf, and thence 40 feet wide to Swedesboro, with a dike at the mouth, at an estimated cost of $39,770 for first construction and about $5,000 annually for maintenance. The full amount of the estimate should be provided in one appropriation. It should be noted that the present project has been practically completed for considerably less than its estimated cost, and that the estimate of the work now proposed is only about $4,400 more than the unappropriated balance of the estimate for the existing project.

The committee thought that the whole project might be completed for that estimate of $39,770, and therefore we did not change that; but, for fear that it might not be fully completed, we changed the word "completing" to the word "for," so that it would read, "for the improvement" instead of "for completing the improvement."

Mr. KENYON. The appropriation is not enlarged?

Mr. FLETCHER. The total is enlarged, as the Senator will see. That is caused by the maintenance item of $20,000 which we added for the other projects. That was done on the recommendation of the engineer. He thought that the available balances for some of the other projects might not be sufficient properly to maintain them and that he would need $20,000 more in order to maintain properly the projects named in the lump-sum item.

Mr. KENYON. In striking out the word "Completing" and in inserting the words "For maintenance," does that mean that $20,000 would have completed the project?

Mr. FLETCHER. No. As the bill came from the House there was no provision made for the maintenance of those items at all; they were simply named, and then the sentence began "Completing improvement of Raccoon Creek." There was really a lack of provision for maintenance, although the purpose was that there should be an appropriation for maintenance for the projects named in the beginning of that paragraph. The committee, in order to complete the provision, inserted the words "For maintenance." It was really an oversight, I think, upon the part of the House in not putting in the words "For maintenance" there. Their purpose was to have those projects maintained, but they did not provide any appropriation whatever for maintenance and did not use the language "For maintenance."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the Senator will recollect that the statement was made that the reason for the items appearing as they did in the House bill, grouping a number of projects together without any appropriation being made for maintenance, and then the appropriation following for completing the improvements, was that they believed there would be sufficient funds either left over from the appropriation for the improvement or that the engineers might use necessary amounts from a general fund for the maintenance of these items where no specific appropriation was made, but they desired to have them included in the bill, so that the engineers would be permitted to use the other funds for the purpose of maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENYON. Then, there is an unexpended balance in connection with these items?

Mr. LENROOT. In many cases there are unexpended balances.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Taylor, in recommending this item felt it was advisable to ask the further odd sum of $20,000, so as to make provision for the maintenance of those projects.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in these river and harbor bills it is sometimes difficult to tell, without a very close study, whether the streams set forth in the bill as creeks are, in fact, creeks or inlets from the sea. I have been opposed to the numerous items we have had in river and harbor bills for streams that seemed to be simply creeks, but I appreciate the fact that there have been instances where inlets from the sea, with a great deal of commerce, have been designated as creeks. I think that is rather unfortunate and leads to a wrong impression.

We have had Raccoon Creek before us for consideration for many years. I think it was first ably defended by former Senator Martine, who could defend these New Jersey projects with a great deal of vigor and persuasiveness.

In the report of the engineers as to this creek I find, on page 407 of part 1, this language:

> Original condition: The creek was crooked and obstructed by numerous shoals. It had an available depth of 4 feet between the mouth and Bridgeport, 1¾ miles, and thence of 3 feet to Swedesboro, the head of navigation, 9.75 miles from the entrance.

I take it that Raccoon Creek, from that description, is not a very important or necessary waterway. The engineer does state that by the work that has been done in the past the carrying of perishable freight has been facilitated, so that much good has been accomplished. There was an unexpended balance July 1, 1917, of $4,950.64; the amount allotted in the river and harbor act of August 8, 1917, was $5,000, making $9,950.64. I suppose if the improvement of this great waterway was not to be completed that sum would have been amply sufficient to have carried on the necessary work of maintenance.

There seems to have been no operations during the last fiscal year. The work was suspended January 3, 1917, and it does not seem to have been resumed, which may account to some extent for the paucity of a showing as to the commerce. The total commerce seems to have been 37,085 tons. We have appropriated altogether for this creek $97,500. It really seems to me, so far as the evidence disclosed in the report is concerned, that this is one of the waterways the expenditure of the public money on which is wasteful.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, did the Senator observe that this creek is so important, its proportions are so immense that it is denominated as being crooked and has numerous shoals?

Mr. KENYON. I knew it was crooked.

Mr. KING. It has an available depth of 4 feet between the mouth and Bridgeport, 1¾ miles, and thence of 3 feet to Swedesboro, the head of navigation.

Mr. KENYON. Where is Swedesboro? Does the Senator know where Swedesboro is?

Mr. KING. It is on Raccoon Creek, and Raccoon Creek is near Swedesboro. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENYON. Swedesboro is the head of navigation of Raccoon Creek?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the commerce on this creek in 1913 was 89,075 tons, valued at $1,158,170. Now, that is a right considerable commerce.

Mr. KENYON. What year is that, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. RANSDELL. 1913. The Senator has correctly stated that the report shows that the commerce of 1917 was 37,085 tons, valued at $307,179; but the Senator failed to call the attention of the Senate to this very important item on page 408, under the paragraph "Commercial statistics," which reads in this way:

> The usual draft of loaded vessels is from 4 to 7 feet. The general character of the commerce for the calendar year was crude oil, farm produce, manure, grain, oyster shells, and tomatoes.

Evidently it is a farming community.

> The decrease in commerce is due to it being impracticable to obtain complete reports.

Mr. KENYON. Where is the Senator reading from?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is on page 408 of the first volume of the report.

Mr. KENYON. For 1918?

Mr. RANSDELL. For 1918, part 1, the same that the Senator was reading from; the last paragraph on page 408.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. Pardon me until I finish, and then the Senator can ask his question.

> The decrease in commerce is due to it being impracticable to obtain complete reports.

I do not know exactly the situation there, Mr. President; but I do know that on a good many of these smaller waterways gasoline boats carry a very considerable commerce, which in the aggregate amounts to a great deal of commerce, and that it is very, very valuable to the small communities. This is not one of the big things, it is true. It is only a few dollars; but those small communities must be taken care of just as well as the big ones, and it is almost impossible to get accurate statistics on the smaller class of boats like the gasoline boats. I can refer the Senator to a river in my own State, Louisiana—Terrebonne Bayou, it is called—which has 1,000 boats on it, and you will find hardly any statistics in regard to the commerce, but in the aggregate it is a very important commerce; and I have no doubt that the commerce on Raccoon Creek, which in 1913 was 80,000 tons, worth over a million dollars, is still a valuable commerce.

Mr. KENYON. I want to substantiate the statement of the Senator. I agree with the Senator that the record shows that oftentimes, as a result of the burning up of the boat, we do not get the commercial statistics. For instance, on Newbegun Creek the gasoline boat was burned up and the engineers reported that they could not get any statistics.

Mr. RANSDELL. But the report does not say that a boat burned up in this case. The engineers say that the decrease in commerce is due to its being practically impossible to obtain complete reports. They do not intimate that a boat burned up.

Mr. KENYON. No; but I am substantiating the Senator's argument by referring to Newbegun Creek, where the one boat burned up, and so the engineers say we can have no statistics. The Senator is correct on that point.

Mr. RANSDELL. That might be true as to Newbegun Creek; there might have been only one boat there, and, of course, if that boat burned there would be no commerce; but evidently that is not the situation here, when the official statistics show that five years ago there were 89,000 tons of commerce, worth over $1,000,000. Surely it took more than one boat to carry all of that commerce, especially when those are very small boats of only about 4 feet draft.

Mr. KENYON. And it is very serious, of course, when the only boat on the creek burns up.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is probably true. If the Senator says so, I suppose it is true. I would not dispute his statement. If he knows that, I will accept it as correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was just going to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that in many instances, as I have read through hundreds and thousands of pages of these reports, we find that the commerce constantly diminishes upon the creeks.

In many instances it diminishes, because the railroads invade the territory, and their rates are so much lower and the transportation is so much quicker that as a result they cease to utilize the so-called waterways for the purpose of transportation. Then in many other instances the people devote themselves to entirely different occupations as the country changes, so that instead of exporting certain products they may be giving their attention to the production of other matters that do not call for export; or if for export, export in a different way.

I just want to suggest to the Senator, however, in connection with the statement that this creek in its palmy days had the immense tonnage referred to by the Senator from Louisiana, that I know of mines in the West that have an output of 40,000 tons a day, and they do not ask the Government to carry that freight for them. They have to build their own wagon ways and roadways and railroads for the purpose of conveying their freight. I know of hundreds and hundreds of farmers in the West and in the Middle States who produce thousands of tons of farm products during the year. They have to construct their own wagon ways and roadways to the railroads for the purpose of transporting their commodities. The Government does not bring to them a railroad or bring to their farms or to their mines the instrumentalities for the transportation of their commerce. Private business does it; private initiative does it; corporations do it. But it seems that the plan now is that if there is an infinitesimal creek, or if there is a swale, the Government must, then, out of the creek construct a waterway; and if there is no water there, sink artesian wells or something of that nature and pump water into the swale for the purpose of carrying to market the commerce of the inhabitants of that vicinity.

Mr. KENYON. Now, the Senator raises a question that we always have up in every river and harbor discussion, as to the railroads. I wonder if the Senator has observed the annual report of the Director General of Railroads on inland waterways?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the Senator gets on to that subject, may I say a word about Raccoon Creek? I am afraid the name may prejudice this project.

Mr. KENYON. I am coming back to Raccoon Creek.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply want to call the Senator's attention to just what this project is. It may save him some trouble to investigate it.

The additional improvements now desired are the extension of the 7-foot depth to Swedesboro and the protection of the mouth.

Now, the engineer says:

I have personally examined this stream on several occasions, recently for the purpose of preparing this report.

The traffic of the stream is carried by gasoline boats and barges, by one steamboat plying daily between Bridgeport and Philadelphia, and by occasional steam tugs with barges. Mr. Miller reports 34 vessels regularly employed, with an aggregate tonnage of 4,823, and drafts between 4 and 6 feet. In 1912 the commerce amounted to 92,688 short tons, valued at $1,163,700. About 21 landings and wharves are used. The incoming freight consists principally of fertilizers, coal, building and road materials, and domestic commodities. The outgoing freight is farm produce, fruit, and truck. Vegetables are shipped in large quantities by rail to Boston and other eastern cities, and by boat to Philadelphia, Chester, and other places on the Delaware River. For shipments of this kind, Raccoon Creek ranks near the head of the list of tributaries of Delaware River and Bay.

That is the kind of stream this is. It is one of the important tributaries of the Delaware River. Because it is named Raccoon Creek, we ought not to deprive it of the improvement to which it is entitled; and I will state that the project was originally adopted away back in 1882.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think the name ought to prejudice it. We ought to appropriate liberally to take care of the mouth of Raccoon Creek.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can see that the term "creek" does not dignify it sufficiently, but the report further says:

The heaviest receipts and shipments are made at the wharves at Swedesboro, for which reason the full depth of 7 feet should be carried to that point.

That is the reason why they want to carry the improvement up to Swedesboro. Those are the real facts about the merits of the project.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator has defended it so well. I want to get back now to the question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him just one moment before he proceeds with a general discussion?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the State of New Jersey has made any contribution toward this waterway?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so.

Mr. KING. Has it contributed a dollar to any of these creeks and inlets and streams, some of which are so minute as to be unknown, upon which millions of dollars have been expended by the Government?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say as to that.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator have the audacity to suggest that they should?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would have to look over all the projects in New Jersey. I can not say as to that.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the State of New Jersey has made no appropriation for this project. My information is that notwithstanding millions of dollars have been expended by the United States upon harbors and creeks and streams in New Jersey, the latter has made no contribution, though many of them are for local purposes and serve local ends.

Mr. KENYON. What is the use of the State appropriating, if the Government will take care of it?

Mr. KING. I understand that there are a few States in the Union that have recognized the propriety and justice of the situation and have had the honor to do something with respect to the improvement of streams within their borders, some of which have been purely local. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] whether his State is on the roll of honor or on the roll of dishonor in respect to these appropriations?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the rule does not permit a Senator to refer disparagingly to a State of the Union.

Mr. KING. These appropriations are all considered so honorable that I supposed designating them as dishonorable would not change the result.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have enough trouble about this bill, without rowing about what are good and bad States.

Mr. KING. I will inquire of the Senator whether his State is on the roll of States which have made appropriations for the improvement of their own waterways?

Mr. KENYON. That raises a parliamentary question. Is a reference to a State getting appropriations a reflection on the State?

Mr. KING. Apparently that seems to be the rule, as I interpret the remark of the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; but the Senator from Utah used language that approached very closely to an infringement of the rule. He spoke of honorable and dishonorable States, and he asked if the State of Massachusetts was on the honorable or the dishonorable list. That is a plain violation of the rule.

Mr. KING. On the roll of honor or on the roll of dishonor. I submit that it is not honorable for a State to fail to make appropriations for purely local purposes, and to impose upon the Federal Government duties and burdens which rest upon them, and that when States do make appropriations for rivers and harbors it is an honorable thing; and I ask the Senator whether his State has done the honorable thing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that that is out of order, and a violation of the rule.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit that it is a very honorable thing for a State to make an appropriation for rivers and harbors for local matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all right.

Mr. KING. I do not think it is a very honorable thing for a State to come here and impose upon the Federal Government and ask for appropriations for matters that are purely local. I should think that it was not an honorable thing for a man to come here and ask for Federal appropriations for purely private concerns. I do not think, in the realm of ethics, that it is a very honorable thing for States to shirk functions which devolve upon them and put them over on the Federal Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must stop this. There is not any showing in this bill that any State of the Union has come here and asked for anything, and the Senator from Utah is speaking offensively about States of the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Utah know that the States have no control over navigable waterways?

Mr. KING. I was speaking in general terms, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Take a State that has a stream entirely within its borders, such as the raging Ocklawaha. Is it disrespectful to talk here about appropriations going into a State that are for a stream entirely within the borders of the State?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, the Chair has not so held. The Chair does not care how Senators criticize these creeks and appropriations. They can say anything they please about them, if they do not try to divide off the States of the Union into honorable and dishonorable States and if they do not attempt to inject into the RECORD the statement, which is not a fact, that any State of the Union has come here and asked for appropriations. There is no showing of that kind. This bill is reported by the Committee on Commerce, and there is not in the RECORD or in the report a single thing that shows that any State government has ever come to this Congress and asked for an appropriation for rivers and harbors, until this morning there was a memorial of the Legislature of Missouri. When we reach that question, if it ever comes up, the Chair will rule on it.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think the Senator intended to reflect on States. I think we have a right to discuss these Federal appropriations which go entirely into States, such as the instance I have cited.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no desire, of course, to reflect upon any State. As Senators know, I have contended here for the States, for their honor and dignity and against what I have considered to be the tendency of the times, to submerge the States in a strong federalism. I love and honor the States and beheld in them sovereigns, governments indestructible, having important functions to discharge. I submit that the policy of Congress in making appropriations for small, invisible creeks and streams, not navigable, and in the interest of purely local districts, has not been creditable. Such appropriations have been condemned by Senators and Congressmen. One of the most eminent men in public life, Mr. Burton, former Senator from Ohio, in this Chamber and on the floor of the House, and in public utterances since he left the Senate, has denounced many of the rivers and harbors bills which have passed through Congress. He denounced them because there were unknown creeks and streams that were receiving large contributions from the parent Government—streams which, if they were susceptible of any commerce, ought to have been developed by the States themselves, because they were purely local, and not by the Federal Government.

I am condemning appropriations made by the Federal Government for the benefit of purely local sections, and also large appropriations upon navigable streams where there was no commerce and upon which there never will be commerce. An examination of the hundreds of projects which have drawn approximately $1,000,000,000 will convince any fair-minded person that hundreds of millions of dollars have been wasted. If the State of Massachusetts has made contributions for the development of its rivers, creeks, and harbors, I think it was fair just as well as an honorable thing for it to do. I beg, however, to inquire of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, whether his State has made contributions for the purposes just mentioned?

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Iowa let me ask a question of the Senator from Utah? The Senator from Utah has stated that former Senator Burton, who certainly was a great man, has denounced the river and harbor bill. I wish to ask him if the former Senator Burton was not chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives from 1898 until, if I mistake not, March 4, 1909, a period of about 12 years, and if he did not include in the river and harbor bills which he reported, whenever a river and harbor bill was adopted, the very item now in discussion, Raccoon Creek, and if he did not include in the river and harbor bill nearly all the other creeks that have been criticized from time to time by the Senator; and, further, if the former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, was not such a forceful man that if he had opposed the item the other members of the committee could not have included it in the bill over his protest?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator do me the kindness to yield for a moment?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Of course, I can not answer all of the questions propounded by my esteemed friend from Louisiana as to what were included within the bills during the time the Senator to whom he refers was chairman of the committee. I know he was chairman of the committee for many years. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to read a word or two of what former Senator Burton did say. Senator Burton said in an article which he wrote appearing in World's Work for February, 1913:

> For years we have been struggling under a vicious system of river and harbor improvements. For instance, the river and harbor bill of 1910 contained items favoring 296 out of the 391 congressional districts. This bill was a masterpiece of geographical distribution and a striking tribute to the cohesive power of legislative logrolling. Even the obstacle offered by mountains of considerable size did not prevent certain portians of the country from being represented in this bill.
> Now, there are two ways of framing a river and harbor bill. The popular method of drawing a bill is to make such concessions to all the different States and localities that you will have an overwhelming support for the measure. The other method, and the right one, is to select those projects which would benefit the whole country and then finish them with promptness. The first method is irresistible. It will win every time.

Proceeding he says:

> This policy of piecemeal appropriations encourages extravagance and the adoption of injudicious and wasteful projects merely for the purpose of spending money in the greatest possible number of districts. When you give small appropriations to a large number of items it is an invitation to every Congressman who has a harbor, a creek, a well-developed spring to come in and ask for an appropriation in these bills. It is a very simple matter to come to Congress and secure $100,000 on a project that will cost a million or two millions.

Then he asks, after the entering wedge has been made:

> What! Will Congress, after it has committed itself to this great project, although costing a million dollars or more, drop it after $100,000 has been spent and let the money expended be buried in the sea?

Then he proceeds:

> In this way I have seen the most unwarranted and extravagant enterprises undertaken, apparently not so much to improve our waterways as to put the Government's money into circulation in the various congressional districts, in order to improve the chances of the different Members of Congress for reelection.

Proceeding, he says:

> Communities and individuals, backed by a large share of the public press, whose pages teem with demands for economy and with condemnations of Congress for extravagance, are constantly insisting that large and sometimes utterly unjustifiable appropriations be made in their own locality. A Member of Congress is told, "If you do not get this appropriation for a public building or for this river or harbor, or if you do not join in a movement for this new line of activity, you will no longer be returned to office." Of course no man in public life wishes systematically to adopt a course which will prevent his return to the office he holds, though some theorists and political scientists seem to think the proper course for a Congressman is to go straight ahead to defeat.

Then he states further on:

> Public buildings, river improvements, free seeds, departmental publications are being used to reelect Members to Congress. Bluntly, the people are furnishing the money by which they are being delivered.

Then he refers to a river in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, the Red River, and says:

> For the last year traffic over this stretch of 476 miles below Fulton Harbor, aside from the saw logs which could be floated without any improvements, was 10 tons of grain, 16 tons of provisions, 26 tons of fish, and 10 tons of ice. In all, 62 tons were carried on these 476 miles of river. The river and harbor bill of 1912 carried an appropriation of $50,000 for this stretch of the Red River. That is at the rate of $806 for every ton of merchandise or grain carried on that river the preceding year. The amount expended for the year is practically eight times as much as all the value of the merchandise and freight carried. Two years ago it was 835 tons, and now it has dropped to 62 tons.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask just one question? I will promise to ask but one.

Mr. KENYON. I am willing to yield, but I am not willing for the Senator from Utah to read former Senator Burton's speech in my time. It would take, I think, a week.

Mr. KING. No; I was just reading from an article he wrote.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish the Senator from Utah would put in the reply which I made to that article. He told what he called the truth about our waterways, and I called my reply the real truth about our waterways. It was published in the RECORD. But I will not take the time of the Senate with that.

I simply wish to ask the Senator from Utah if he is not the author of a bill introduced in the Senate on December 11, 1918, which proposes to appropriate the sum of $15,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, "for construction work and incidental operations for a reclamation project on Green and Grand Rivers, Utah, to be expended under the supervision of the Director of the Reclamation Service"? He wants half as much on that one project as this bill proposes to expend on all the waterways of the greatest country in the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the Senator sees exactly the reason for executing the rule. He is getting right into the question of a State, which the rule says a Senator must not offensively refer to.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Vice President will pardon me, I was going to say I have no objection in the world to this item; it may be all right; but I was asking the Senator, who has spoken of this roll of honor and dishonor here, if he did not introduce that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is ruled out.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Vice President for ruling it out.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, and if the Vice President will indulge me for a moment, the Government of the United States owns large tracts of fertile land within what are called the public-land States. Years ago it adopted the policy of placing water upon these lands in order to sell them to home seekers. By this course it was enabled to form a market for its own land and at the same time benefit the entire Nation. Whether the policy was wise we need not discuss at this time. The Government of the United States is now considering a plan to aid the soldiers and sailors when they are discharged from the Army and Navy. This plan contemplates the reclamation of lands owned by the Government, and which, when water is applied thereon, prove to be agricultural lands of great value. The Government owns several million acres of most excellent land which can be irrigated from the waters of Green and Grand Rivers. Fifteen millions of dollars would reclaim hundreds of thousands of acres of these lands, and thus furnish homes for thousands of home seekers. This project would, in my opinion, be considered and developed if the suggestion of Secretary Lane relating to homes for soldiers and sailors are carried into effect. The bill to which the Senator refers is in aid of the program, which seems to meet with so much favor, that the Government should improve its own holdings in order to dispose of them, and at the same time aid genuine home seekers, and particularly those who have so heroically served the Nation in the conflict just ended.

Mr. RANSDELL. If it be a good project, I certainly hope personally that it will be adopted. I would not pretend to denounce it as unwise. I simply asked the Senator from Utah if he did not introduce that bill.

Mr. KING. I did.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] desires to answer the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which was addressed to him, and I have no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I heard the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] a day or two ago ask some Senator if his State had made any contribution to the improvement of rivers and harbors in which they were directly interested, and thinking he might ask me the question, I brought with me this morning a statement showing what Massachusetts has done.

My judgment is that Massachusetts has done and is doing about as much and more than it should, and that many of the expenditures the State has made are properly national expenditures; but, as I have the opportunity to do so, I wish to put in the RECORD the result of the operations along these lines of the State of Massachusetts in the year 1917. Massachusetts spent $84,230.72 in general expenses and materials for improvements. It spent in the improvement of rivers and harbors: For Cotuit Harbor, $1,090; for Barnstable and Mashpee Harbor, $9,900; for the Connecticut River, $7,698; for Duxbury Bay, $1,235; for Falmouth, Waquoit Bay, $10,219; for Gloucester Harbor, $9,587; for Hull Harbor, $38,284; for Hyannisport, $1,152; for Ipswich River, $3,073; for Lynn Harbor, $21,419; for New Bedford Harbor, $20,355; for Plymouth Harbor, $7,673; and, in addition to that, for another harbor in Plymouth, $6,664; for Warrens Cove, $11,723; for Rockport Harbor, $800; for Sandwich Harbor, $9,444; for Scituate, $1,057; for Scituate, First Cliff, $1,585; for Scituate Harbor, $8,425; for South Hadley Harbor, $2,239; for Wareham River, $21,809; for Winthrop Shore, $1,000.87.

It spent, in addition to these improvements, for maintenance and operations of Pier 5, $85,923; for the surveys and improvements of rivers and harbors under special appropriations, $10,760; for the tidewater fund, $1,425; for Mystic River improvement, $153,572; for Income Harbor compensation fund, $8,337; for improvement of South Bay in the city of Boston, $2,096; for development in the port of Boston for various purposes, $725,789; for expert and special services, $609; for supplies and expenses, $5,046, making a total for the port of Boston of $774,799; for harbor-improvement loan, New Bedford, $29,239; for harbor-improvement loan, Weymouth, Fore River, $75,000.

Very recently the State contributed the same amount the General Government appropriated and the same amount the Fore River Ship Building Co. contributed for the development of Weymouth Fore River. For dredging Boston Harbor, $18,844.

This makes a total, Mr. President, of $1,461,295, of which about $400,000 was spent in constructing a dock at Boston. That is in one year. I have not all the expenditures that have been made by the State of Massachusetts for rivers and harbors, of course. It would take a long time to compile them; but I have a letter in my possession relating to the proposition now pending in Congress to make a 40-foot channel in Boston Harbor, in which it is stated:

The United States has expended on Boston Harbor and its tributary rivers, etc., from 1825 to 1915, a period of 90 years, the sum of $12,668,474.99, an average of $140,760.83 per year.

The State of Massachusetts has expended and actually entered into contract to expend on Boston Harbor and its tributary rivers, etc., from 1870 to 1915, a period of 45 years, the sum of $15,477,360.62, of which amount all but $2,784,152.94 has actually been expended, making an average of $343,719.03 per year by the State.

During 45 years the State of Massachusetts has expended upon Boston Harbor and rivers tributary thereto over $3,000,000 more than the National Government has expended since the beginning of the river and harbor appropriation.

I do not contend, Mr. President, that all States should do as much, but I do contend that there should be in doubtful cases cooperation between the local community and the General Government. I do not think it should be the case in Boston Harbor, for example, which is distinctly national; nor in a great improvement like the Mississippi River or New York Harbor, but I do think in improvements essentially local there should be a plan of cooperation between the General Government and the local government which would modify to some degree this system of rivers and harbors improvements.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I really rose to ask some questions in regard to Raccoon Creek, but one thing has drifted to another until we have gotten rather far away from that creek. The inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] regarding his bill raises the same old question that if a Senator opposes certain appropriations in certain bills and later himself introduces an appropriation bill for other purposes he is rather estopped from questioning any appropriation bill here. I see no reason why a man should not be in favor of certain appropriations and against certain appropriations. I have been against the general plan under which river and harbor bills have been framed, not against doing great public works. I have been rather converted to the idea that the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal is something of a good proposition or could be made one of national necessity and not merely to help some local community.

I have raised no voice against it in this Chamber at this session. That, it seems to me, can be made a great national canal. While it will require some expenditure of money, I am very frank in saying that my views about that canal have changed somewhat. I do not know that we ought to spend the money just now in the present condition of our Treasury, but it is an improvement that some day should be made.

What I have urged in the past is that we take the bill and try to cut out those things in it that are not of national concern but merely local. We need not deceive ourselves about it, or grow indignant about it. We know that in the past many of these items in the river and harbor bill, the same as in the public buildings bill, have been local not only in appropriation but in everything else. That is something to get away from in this country, to get nationalized in feeling and in action as well as in appropriations.

The Senator from Utah suggests competition of the railroads, and I started to talk about that and called his attention to the report of the Director General of Railroads. I do no know whether we are going to be able to make the great waterways of this country useful unless the Government owns and controls the railroad. I am not arguing for that proposition, because on that I confess that my mind has not reached a conclusion. But the director general in his report to Congress on that subject used this language, and I think it may be well to put it in the RECORD:

The increased responsibilities of this country in the family of nations will demand greater commercial activity on our part. Transportation is a major problem, for, on account of the extensive area of our country, we have a longer average haul to seaboard than other industrial commonwealths. It has seemed to me evident that by developing transportation on the waterways and coordinating and articulating them with a unified railway system, we shall bring about a correct solution of the rail-water controversy, which has been in progress for 50 years. This is possible with the railways under Federal control. I doubt if any of our rivers or canals will become active factors of transportation if the railroads are turned back to private control. The old methods of railway competition with the waterways doubtless will be revived and the waterway experiment may not be able to survive that competition.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if the Senator has concluded that quotation, I wish to add to it a statement made by the Director General of Railroads before the Interstate Commerce Committee just exactly along the same line.

Mr. KENYON. I should be very glad to have that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator has concluded that quotation, I should be glad to have this inserted in the RECORD. In the examination before the committee, the question of when the roads should be turned over to the owners arose before the Interstate Commerce Committee, and the Director General of Railroads made this statement within the past few weeks. Director General McAdoo said:

The intercoastal waterway from Philadelphia to Beaufort, N. C., will be susceptible of greater commercial developments. The projected improvement between Norfolk and Beaufort will not be completed for some time, and it will require at least two years to modernize the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. This improvement, that is the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, ought to be authorized promptly, and I hope that Congress may grant the necessary appropriation and power to deal with the matter.

That is a very important connecting waterway there which could render very great service to the commercial center at Baltimore if it could be finished.

I thought the Senator would like to have the whole story go in the RECORD; and I thank him also for his kindly reference to the enterprise in which I have taken so much interest.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator put that in the RECORD. Of course, the railroads have helped to make almost impossible water-borne traffic. The Mississippi River is paralleled by railroads. If any river in the world ought to carry commerce it ought to be the Mississippi River, but it can not do it. I never thought the Missouri River improvement would amount to anything, and that every dollar we put into it would be an absolute waste, but the lower Mississippi is developing some commerce by barge lines that are placed there.

I did not intend and do not intend to take any more time of the Senate in the discussion of the bill. There are some of the items I want to discuss and have a vote upon when the time comes—the Ocklawaha River, which I believe is an indefensible proposition, and the Ouachita River, which is worse than indefensible.

But I want to recur to Raccoon Creek. I do not understand why the commerce has so decreased from 1913, when it was of a value of $1,178,170 and consisted of 80,075 short tons, to 1914, to a value of $350,970 and to 23,543 short tons. That is a tremendous decrease in the commerce of this mighty stream. In 1915 it seems to have gone back to the figures of 1913, and the commerce then shows a value of $844,200 and short tons 89,638.

Oldmans Creek and Alloway Creek seem to be about in the same general situation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Iowa permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I know very little about these appropriations or the improvements which are desired for the State of New Jersey. I am familiar, however, with one or two of the items which are in the bill.

The policy of Federal appropriations for these improvements has been oftentimes attacked on this floor. In fact, I have been here, I think, three sessions, and twice I have heard the eloquent attacks made by the Senator from Iowa upon the improvements desired by the State of New Jersey, and I am beginning to feel that it is becoming somewhat chronic.

Mr. KENYON. The appropriations or the attacks?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The attacks. I will defend the appropriations as best I can.

I, representing the State of New Jersey, do not want to be accused of trying to secure from the Federal Government for any project in that State any money that is not necessary or needful, but I do say that if it is the policy of the Federal Government to aid the States on the seaboard in improving the tidal streams of such a State in order that the water-borne traffic and commerce may continue, as long as that is the policy it is the duty of the Federal Government to continue it as far as the improvement of worthy projects is concerned.

I dislike to be accused of supporting any measure that savors of "pork," a popular term which has been carelessly and often, as far as New Jersey is concerned, untruthfully used in connection with this bill. It is not my fault that the Almighty placed New Jersey on the seaboard. I am very glad that He did so, but I do not want any benefit for my State that is not essential for the commerce not only of New Jersey but of the world at large. The Western States in this connection, in the improvement of the tidal streams in the State of New Jersey, enjoy directly or indirectly the benefit of that commerce.

I believe it is my duty as a Senator from New Jersey to support any worthy project which will develop the commerce of the country, whether that development is in Iowa, Utah, Colorado, or in the State of New Jersey. I believe I am a Senator of the United States, not a Senator entirely of the State of New Jersey. Now, in regard to——

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator—I agree with his position—does he believe it is the duty of Congress to appropriate funds for streams entirely within a State?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As long as they are tributary to the tidal waters of the Atlantic or the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. KENYON. So you can engage in commerce with the world and with other States. But that is not the condition of Raccoon Creek. If a river is entirely within a State, does the Senator believe it is then the province of the Government to appropriate funds for that stream?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I know of no such project in my State, but I am answering the criticism of the Senator in regard to appropriations which are asked for in this bill.

Now, let me speak for a minute on the question of these appropriations. New Jersey is indented with many tidal streams. Those streams run varying from 5 to 10 and 15 miles inland. In the industrial centers, such as those on Newark Bay and the Kill Van Kull, these streams directly furnish water-borne traffic and transportation for many of those large industries, and they afford an outlet to New York Harbor.

Take the case of Cheesequake Creek, which has been facetiously commented upon from time to time in this connection. I know of several million rounds of ammunition which were transported along that creek directly to the ships that carried it to the battle front on the other side, because one of the largest ammunition plants in the world was located along that creek in order that it might be near the shipping point in New York so as to transport this ammunition to the other side.

Take the creeks and rivers that have been mentioned and are grouped in the present item which is under criticism, for instance, Cooper River. Cooper River is a tidal stream, and along that stream are located many of the industries of southern New Jersey. There are located the Camden Iron Works, which had large Government contracts and were fabricating steel, I believe, for the war equipment of the Federal Government. While I do not know what the tonnage is on that stream, I do know that to afford the proper facilities by a certain water depth it is necessary, in order that an outlet may be afforded to that industry, that that stream should be properly dredged.

Take these other streams; they are called creeks; but creeks in New Jersey as mentioned here are tidal streams and not creeks such as are located in Iowa or Utah, which have water in them probably only six months in the year; but the tides ebb and flow in these creeks in New Jersey.

Along these creeks are located in southern New Jersey the farmers who furnish produce for the great cities of Philadelphia and Camden. Along these creeks the farmers ship their produce to market.

In pursuance of the requirement of the Federal Government, that practically 60 per cent of the tomato crop should be requisitioned, in order that the troops on the other side might be supplied, it was along these creeks that the farmers of New Jersey shipped their tomatoes to the factories, which canned them and made the soup and other food products for the Army on the other side.

So, I say, while it might appear to the Senator from Iowa that these projects are not necessary and are not worthy, he is mistaken. So far as I know from my observation and meager knowledge—for I have not made a study of this question; I have been on other committees, where I have conscientiously devoted my time to public affairs, such as the Military Affairs Committee and the Committee on Banking and Currency—but I do say, from the meager knowledge that I have on the subject, that I know of no project which is contained in this appropriation bill which is unworthy or which can be properly criticized.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I merely want to finish what I have to say. I have shown the facts about these New Jersey streams. Possibly they are all meritorious, but I am only guided by what the Army engineers say and am drawing conclusions from their statements.

I was glad to hear the Senator's statement about Senators representing the United States instead of individual States. That is good doctrine which has been preached here a great deal, but I think very seldom practiced. It runs a little contrary to the remarks of one of the officers of the river and harbor congress lately in session here, which generally meets just previous to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. Capt. Ellison—I think he was the secretary of one of the congresses—uttered this great sentiment:

We send a Congressman here to legislate for the Nation theoretically, but actually to get all he can for us, and, if he does not get our share and then some, we do our best to replace him.

I am glad that that doctrine does not find a response in Congress. I have said all I care to say about these streams in New Jersey, Mr. President, and I have no desire to delay matters.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he recollects what reasons were given for the amendment making an appropriation of $20,000 for maintenance in this case?

Mr. FLETCHER. That was inserted by the committee on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. He stated that it would require that additional amount above the available balance on hand to the credit of those projects. There are available balances on hand, and the engineer stated that he would place that item for maintenance at $20,000, because he felt that they would need that much.

Mr. LENROOT. It seems to me that in this particular case the engineers must have made a very serious mistake in their estimate, for I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the annual report on page 419. In the group of harbors embodied in this paragraph, including two small additional harbors upon which the maintenance charge is only $1,000 a year, we find that upon the entire group in 1914 there was expended for maintenance $18,000—I am giving round figures—in 1915, $12,000; in 1916, $18,000; in 1917, $18,000; and in 1918, $21,000, or an average of less than $20,000 per year. Then, just at the bottom of the page, I read:

July 1, 1918, balance available, including $42,624.66, available only for maintenance—

Showing that on the 1st of July last they had $42,624.66 available only for maintenance, and upon the entire group we have been expending less than $20,000 a year for the past five years. It seems to me, therefore, that very clearly a mistake has been made in this respect.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I can not get detailed information without further conference with Gen. Taylor; but the appropriation we have provided in the bill is based on his recommendations to the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not question that; but I think he must have made a mistake; it is very clear a mistake must have been made.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is possible; and, if it is desirable, suppose we pass that item at present and refer to it later?

Mr. LENROOT. That will be satisfactory, if the chairman will get a letter giving the reasons for this proposed action.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to get fuller information. It is possible we have made a mistake in putting the figures as we have them here; but I do not think that is likely. I suggest, Mr. President, that we pass over the item "for maintenance, $20,000."

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, Mr. President, let me also ask the Senator from Florida, while he is looking up the question of maintenance, to look up the question as to the amount that would be necessary to complete these projects. The House of Representatives provided that $39,770 should complete the project, and the Senate committee struck out the word "completing" and made it "for maintenance, $20,000"; and then for the improvement of Raccoon Creek, and so forth.

The Senator will remember that in all of the projects which are found on pages 3, 4, and 5 virtually the same amendment was made, and the amounts appropriated by the House were retained. But where the word "completing" was not stricken out and remained as the House had it, the amount was increased by 50 per cent. Would that apply in this case the same as it did in the other cases?

Mr. FLETCHER. If the committee should provide absolutely for completing this project of Raccoon Creek, it might be necessary to increase the amount; but the committee was advised that, while it might be possible to complete the improvement for that amount, it was not absolutely certain, and that, in any event, the amount of $39,770 could be advantageously expended on the improvement. So we allowed the amount to stand as provided by the House and as estimated in the original document, striking out the word "completing" and inserting the words "for improvement." So we did not absolutely pledge ourselves that the improvement would be completed by the expenditure of this amount upon it; but in all probability it will be. If it should not, that amount can be expended profitably and advantageously, in any event.

In the item referred to on the other page by the Senator, it was perfectly clear that the amount shown in the original document would not complete the projects. It was insisted that they should be completed, not merely begun. Those were not such projects as might be partially worked on, then abandoned and left while waiting for further appropriations. So it was desirable to give in this bill the entire amount which was necessary to complete them. That is why we changed the amounts there, without changing the word "completing." We left in the word "completing" and changed the amount to a sufficient sum to complete the improvement.

In this instance we did not absolutely say that this amount would complete the project, but it may do so. We left the amount as it stood and simply provide that the work shall be done; that the improvement shall be made. Then the money is appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator to ascertain, if it is possible to do so, what amount it would take to complete these projects? Then I should like to see an appropriation made to complete them all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that it is hoped that this appropriation will complete this project. There is also an available balance there, I believe.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; it is for maintenance. This appropriation may complete it—we do not know—but, at any rate, we feel justified in making that appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator, after he investigates this matter, will conclude that $20,000 for maintenance is not necessary; that is, if he will look at the report, provided the report is correct, and if the past amounts for maintenance are adhered to for the coming year, I think he will find there will be an ample sum for maintenance for this project for the coming year.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator should understand that that refers to a different matter entirely. Maintenance refers to the projects listed above.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that.

Mr. FLETCHER. This amount is confined to one project—Raccoon Creek.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee will remember that Gen. Taylor urged completion in only two classes of cases, one where estimates had been so recently made that the estimated amount would complete the project, and another class of cases where it would be poor economy to go on with a portion of the work and leave it uncompleted and then take it up later. But as to many of these improvements, as in this case, the project is really in two separate parts. In this instance one proposes the building of a jetty, as I remember, and the other the deepening of the channel. Therefore the engineers can complete a portion of this improvement without any economic loss and let the remainder of it go until a later time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. I am much obliged to the Senator from Wisconsin for clearing that up as he has done. That is the precise situation here, and that is the reason why we did not propose to increase this amount. We thought the amount ought to stand and that the improvement should be continued as far as possible.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the explanation of the Senator from Wisconsin clears the matter so that we now understand just what is desired and what the work will be for the coming year. As I understand, the Senator from Florida is going to allow that amendment to go over in order to look up the question as to the amount for maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; the item as to maintenance; but the Senator does not desire the other item for the improvement of Raccoon Creek to go over, I take it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not care about that. After the explanation of the Senator from Wisconsin, it seems to be perfectly clear that this amount will be necessary for that particular project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Without objection, the amendment providing "for maintenance, $20,000," will be passed over, at the request of the chairman of the committee, and the total will be changed.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no need of changing the total, because if the item for maintenance is not left in the bill, of course the amount of the appropriation provided by the House will still remain.

Mr. FLETCHER. But we will have to change the total if we reduce the maintenance item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment changing the total will also be passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 6, line 13, after "$20,000," to strike out "Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended on Absecon Inlet," so as to make the clause read:

Cold Spring and Absecon Inlets, Absecon and Tuckerton Creeks, and Toms River, N. J.: For maintenance, $20,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida state whether there is any information at all from the engineers as to why that provision should be stricken out? The House evidently thought that there should be no money expended upon that inlet.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to state to the Senator that the reason why the committee felt justified in striking that out was because we had the assurance of the engineers that in the estimate of $20,000 Absecon Inlet was not included, and, therefore, the money would not be spent there anyhow, and so there is no use of inserting a proviso to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Is Absecon Inlet completed?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is completed and is not one of the items needing any of this fund for maintenance. I repeat, none of this money will be spent on Absecon Inlet anyhow. We have the assurance of the engineers to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. What I was thinking was whether, if the improvement there has been completed, it would not be well to strike out the words, in line 11, "and Absecon Inlet"?

Mr. FLETCHER. It was thought best to keep that item there. It is in the list of items that have been carried in the bill, and it was not deemed wise to eliminate it entirely from the provision, but none of that money, I repeat, will go for Absecon Inlet, mentioned in the proviso. Therefore we struck out the proviso. I think it better to do that, because otherwise it would be a limitation that it is not necessary to put in the bill, and a sort of reflection on the inlet, which it is thought unnecessary to make.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be an unexpended balance for that inlet. Does the Senator know whether there is?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; there will be none. This entire amount is intended for other maintenance than that at Absecon Inlet.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 6, line 15, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Chester River, Pa.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 667, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$65,000," so as to make the clause read:

Wilmington Harbor, Del.: For maintenance, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing," and insert "for maintenance, $9,000; for"; in line 7, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; in line 11, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; and in line 14, after the words "in all," to strike out "$53,134" and insert "$62,134," so as to make the clause read:

Rockhall, Queenstown, Claiborne, Tilghman Island, Cambridge, and Crisfield Harbors, Elk and Little Elk, Chester, Corsica, Choptank, Tuckahoe, Warwick, La Trappe, Tred Avon, Wicomico, Manokin, and Pocomoke Rivers, Slaughter, Tyaskin, and Broad Creeks, Twitch Cove and Big Thoroughfare River, and Lower Thoroughfare, Deal Island, Md.; Nanticoke River (including Northwest Fork), Del. and Md.; Broad Creek River, Del.; and Tangier Channel, Va.: For maintenance, $9,000; for improvement of the North Fork of Tred Avon River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 27, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $19,600; for improvement of Wicomico River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1509, Sixty-third Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $17,100; for improvement of Tangier Channel in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 107, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $16,434; in all, $62,134. The unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for Tilghman Island Harbor is hereby made available for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 796, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 18, to insert:

Potomac River at Washington, D. C., at Alexandria, Va., and Lower Cedar Point, Md.; Anacostia River, D. C.; Occoquan, Aquia, Upper Machodoc, and Nomini Creeks, Va.: For maintenance, $32,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is entirely a new item, and I should like to have the Senator explain just why it has been inserted in the bill at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that the necessity for it has developed since the bill was considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and acted upon there. The Chief of Engineers finds that there will be work required to maintain these projects, and this appropriation is based upon the very latest data which he has in his office. He recommended to the committee that those projects be taken care of in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any unexpended balance for that purpose now, does the Senator know?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there are some unexpended balances, but they are inadequate. There is no balance to the credit of the Anacostia River, but there are unexpended balances to the credit of the Potomac River at Alexandria, Occoquan Creek, and the Rappahannock, although the Rappahannock is not included in this item. There are a few small balances; but the engineers say that they are not sufficient to maintain the projects listed in this amendment, and that it will be necessary to make this appropriation in order properly to maintain them.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, Mr. President, that if it is possible to eliminate from the bill any new items of this kind I sincerely hope the Senator will do so for several reasons. Among others, I have just come from a meeting at which it was announced that another appropriation of at least $750,000,000 will have to be provided for between now and the close of this session of Congress. I do not want to go into the details of that proposed appropriation now, but these vast amounts are piling up on us very rapidly. I know that $32,000 is a small amount; but when I stop to think that within the last three weeks it has developed that we must provide $2,000,000,000 over and above what was anticipated two months ago, it alarms me. I left that meeting to-day knowing, as I have said, that $750,000,000 more must be appropriated and that we can not get along without it, for we must pay our debts. When that appropriation comes here I shall feel bound to support it, because it is to pay obligations which the Government entered into when we were fighting for our very existence; and, so far as I am concerned, I must vote for it, notwithstanding I know that our total appropriations are going to be so vast that the human mind can hardly comprehend them.

Thirty-two thousand dollars, I repeat, is a mere speck, but small appropriations multiply so rapidly that we have $100,000 appropriated before we know it. From that the amount jumps to $1,000,000; then to $10,000,000; then to $100,000,000; and after a while we find ourselves appropriating another $1,000,000,000.

I do not say this in a spirit of faultfinding at all; I say it in the spirit of a Senator who is trying to call the attention of the people of the country to the fact that the obligations they will have to meet will be burdensome indeed, and every man, every woman, and every business in the United States from now on should recognize that in order to meet these obligations they must economize in every way possible. When we see projects added here that could perhaps be postponed for a year, or possibly two years, it would be wisdom, as I look at it, to put them off until we can get a breathing spell, until we can meet the great burdens that are upon us now, and will be upon us for the next year particularly—not that there will not be burdens thereafter, not that we shall not have to pay heavy taxes, for we shall have to pay them for years to come, and our children, and perhaps our children's children, will be paying taxes in order to meet the obligations that the Government is under to-day.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I think we ought to pay the closest attention to all items. So far as I am concerned, I care not what bills are introduced or what Senator introduces them, or what State is to receive the money, or where the benefits are to fall, I think they all ought to be given the closest scrutiny. Let us from now on say, as a unit on both sides of this Chamber, that we are going to stop everything that is not absolutely necessary in order to maintain our Government and keep the wheels of industry going. We will see, of course, that those who are suffering through the war and through the effects of war are taken the best care of possible, but I know that we must sooner or later cease appropriating money out of the Treasury without regard to how it is going to be raised.

I am not going to ask for a vote upon this amendment. If the Senator thinks it is absolutely necessary and will so state to the Senate, I have not another word to say upon it. I know the Senator from Florida is a good legislator; he is a sound-thinking man. I never in my life saw him go off on a tangent. He is a conservative man, and I have faith that he is not going to undertake at this time to load this bill with unnecessary items. Therefore I ask if this provision can not be eliminated just as well as not and go over to another year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the bill has been considered by the Commerce Committee precisely along the line of the views announced by him with reference to the importance of economizing to the limit and saving every item that we could reasonably save and at the same time keep up the necessary public works. This is an item for maintenance of these projects—the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.; at Alexandria, Va., and Lower Cedar Point, Md.; Anacostia River, D. C.; Occoquan, Aquia, Upper Machodoc, and Nomini Creeks, Va. All of these are improved projects which it is necessary to maintain. There is a small balance to the credit of the whole group. Some of them have none at all. Occoquan and Aquia Creeks have no balance at all to their credit. This appropriation covers the period from next June to June 30, 1920, and unless we provide for them they are likely to go to pieces and depreciate so materially that the money we have spent on them heretofore will be almost wasted. The engineer has stated that it is necessary to have this amount in order to maintain these projects and save the money we have already put in them and keep them useful for commercial purposes. We have limited it to the last dollar, I think, if the Senator will allow me to say so, in this item. Of course, if it is not all absolutely necessary—and they are not going to do any work that is not needed—it will remain in the Treasury; we will not spend it. But upon the advice of the engineers I must say to the Senator that I feel conscientiously that we would make a serious mistake to strike out that item, and I hope the Senator will allow it to remain.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that where we have rivers and inlets that have taken a great deal of money from the Public Treasury to complete or improve them it would be unwise in many cases to let them go uncared for. The Senator is perfectly right in stating that if the project is not completed and there is no money for maintenance, then there ought to be an appropriation for that purpose. The only question then is as to how much it should be. The Senator himself feels positive that this $32,000 is necessary for that purpose, and I shall not object any further to the item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 8, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $2,000; for"; and, in line 11, after "$25,000," to insert "; in all, $27,000," so as to make the clause read:

James, Nansemond, Pagan, and Appomattox Rivers, Va.: For maintenance, $2,000; for improvement of Pagan River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 591, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $25,000; in all, $27,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $2,000; for"; and, in line 22, after "$5,000," to insert "; in all, $7,000," so as to make the clause read:

Blackwater River, Va.; Meherrin and Roanoke Rivers and Newbegun Creek, N. C.: For maintenance, $2,000; for improvement of Newbegun Creek in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 24, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $5,000; in all, $7,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask that this item, beginning on page 9, lines 17 to 22, may go over temporarily? I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] wants to speak upon Newbegun Creek. He notified me to that effect just before he went away, and I ask to have it passed over temporarily.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I ask that the item between lines 17 and 22 be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the item will be temporarily passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Manteo Bay, Scuppernong, Pamlico, Tar, South, Bay, Neuse, and Trent Rivers, Fishing, Contentnea, Swift, and Smith Creeks, and waterway connecting Swan Quarter Bay with Deep Bay, N. C.: For maintenance, $7,500; for improvement of Scuppernong River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1196, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $31,800; in all, $39,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 12, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; in line 18, after the words "second session," to strike out "$5,200" and insert "$9,000"; and, in line 19, after the words "in all," to strike out "$45,600" and insert "$49,400," so as to make the clause read:

Beaufort and Morehead City Harbors, Beaufort Inlet, waterway from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Inlet, waterway connecting Core Sound and Beaufort Harbor, channel connecting Thoroughfare Bay and Cedar Bay, and inland waterway, Beaufort to Jacksonville, N. C.: For maintenance, $24,500; for improvement of Beaufort Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1108, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $15,900; completing improvement of channel connecting Thoroughfare Bay and Cedar Bay, N. C., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1125, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $9,000; in all, $49,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 1, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Northeast, Black, and Cape Fear Rivers, N. C.: For maintenance and continuing improvement of Cape Fear River below Wilmington in accordance with the existing project and in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 746, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, $498,625; continuing improvement of Cape Fear River above Wilmington, $51,000; for improvement of Northeast River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1356, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $25,375; in all, $575,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 9, after the words "first session," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$28,000," so as to make the clause read:

Waterway between Charleston and Winyah Bay, S. C.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 178, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before reaching the next item I wish to say just a word about the appropriation for Savannah Harbor.

This appropriation is about one-half the usual appropriation. The situation is this: There is an amount unexpended from past appropriations which in the judgment of the engineering department justifies the reduction of the appropriation this year. I do not complain of this action. They do not believe that profitably there can be used more than the amount they will have unexpended of the past appropriation and this appropriation; but I wish to call to the attention of the Senate the reason why there is an unused appropriation. It is not that the appropriation was too large before, but in part from the lack of an efficient engineer in charge, and in part from the lack of a seagoing dredge, the harbor did not receive proper attention. The appropriation was not used, and work required was not done. During the past 18 months the channel across the bar has filled up nearly 2 feet, and there has been a substantial injury to the harbor in other ways. A new engineer is now in charge, and he is doing very efficient work, and the Engineering Board have recommended, in connection with the Brunswick appropriation, a sum for the acquirement of a dredge to be used in the Savannah district.

In this connection I will call the attention of the Senate to the amount of commerce passing through the Savannah Harbor——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, may I ask him a question? Does the Senator know what amount of this appropriation of $260,000 is to be used in improvement and how much for maintenance?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not give the exact figures. They will use as much as they find necessary for maintenance.

Mr. SMOOT. I judge, from what the Senator says, that the greater part of it will be used to remove from the bar the 2 feet that they have allowed to drift in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A large part of it will be required for maintenance, and for lack of proper attention during the past 18 months maintenance will cost more than a normal amount.

Mr. SMOOT. So that is only a striking evidence of what was stated just a few moments ago—that to allow these projects to run on without maintenance is the very height of extravagance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a lack of business judgment. I do not attribute this failure to lack of judgment by the engineers here in general charge, because they manifested the greatest interest to have the harbor kept in proper condition. The local engineer was not a man fitted to meet the difficulties that surrounded him during the past year. He had trouble with labor. He stopped a number of times the operation of the dredge that he had because of disputes with labor. He did not have a first-class dredge. As a consequence the harbor was not properly maintained.

What I wish to do now is to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of this harbor, and let it be a part of the RECORD. To be perfectly candid, I was surprised myself to find that for a number of years past the seagoing commerce of Savannah has been larger than that of any harbor on the Atlantic coast except New York City.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to Savannah Harbor?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I am speaking of Savannah Harbor. I wish to call attention to the exact figures, as I think it an interesting and valuable matter for the Senate to know. I wish the RECORD to show what appropriations to the Savannah Harbor mean to the commerce of the country. I present the facts to distinguish appropriations to this harbor from the criticism, with which I have had sympathy, placed upon work of no national value.

This harbor in 1884 had a seagoing commerce of $51,630,518. In 1917 it had a seagoing commerce of $478,215,950. It is second only to New York City on the Atlantic coast. From 1884 to 1904 the percentage of gain of commerce out of Savannah Harbor was 170, as against 92 per cent for Baltimore, 95½ for Philadelphia, 53¼ for New York, and 41½ for Boston. From 1904 to 1914 the Savannah increase was much larger than that of any other point upon the Atlantic coast. From 1884 to 1914 Savannah's gain was 454 per cent, New York's was 162 per cent, Baltimore's was 154 per cent, Philadelphia's was 78 per cent, and Boston's was 3½ per cent.

Again, the foreign exports from Savannah for 1914 were $110,594,981; those from New York were $864,546,338; Baltimore, $109,690,231; Boston and Charlestown, Mass., $65,715,181; Philadelphia, $65,182,514; Norfolk, $25,625,255; Wilmington, N. C., $25,870,851; Charleston, S. C., $20,829,302. So that in 1914 the foreign exports from Savannah were larger than those of any other port upon the Atlantic coast except New York.

Turning to the Gulf, New Orleans had $193,839,961 in 1914, against Savannah's $110,594,981.

The water-borne commerce through the port of Savannah for the year 1914 was $349,193,325; New Orleans, $311,557,861; Boston, $241,288,667.

I give next the commerce through the port of Savannah from 1910 to 1917, inclusive. It began at $224,000,000 in 1910, and in 1917 it was $478,000,000.

I then give a comparison with the other cities, and I show that during the average of that period the commerce through the port of Savannah exceeded that of any other city upon the Atlantic coast, except New York, and exceeded even that of New Orleans, on the Gulf coast.

Mr. KENYON. What is the population of Savannah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. About 125,000, I think. I give these figures, Mr. President, and I ask the privilege of putting the exact figures in the RECORD, because when the subject of this port comes up, as it will next year, again, I want the foundation laid by having the Senate realize the importance of its commerce to the commerce of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., February 6, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Our business interests are deeply concerned over the utter inadequacy of the appropriations made for the proper maintenance of this river and harbor.

Savannah naturally is ambitious to play its part in the great era of trade expansion that we all look forward to. Our business interests are progressive and have widespread international connections that justify the hope that in the years just ahead there will be a vastly greater volume of commerce passing in and out of this harbor.

Arrangements are making for an extension of our commercial connections with South America, Central America, and the West Indies. Our trade with European countries, as you are doubtless fully aware, had a wonderful development in the years immediately preceding the war. There is also reason to believe that Asiatic connections will come, bringing a direct movement of southern raw and manufactured products through this doorway.

We will be handicapped and the interests not only of Savannah but of all Georgia and of other Southern States will be adversely affected if the Savannah Harbor is not properly protected and promoted.

We look to you to take care of our interests at this time when it is essential that we have a strong friend in Congress. The business interests here are your friends, and we appeal to you as friends as well as Georgians and representatives of great commercial affairs to use your influence to correct what we regard as a manifest injustice.

Requesting your most earnest support in this important matter, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

MURRAY STEWART, Mayor.

[1] Figures in hands of Chief of Engineers—unable to obtain in Savannah.

With a total expenditure of $10,628,240.10 to June 30, 1916, on the Savannah Harbor, the water-borne commerce of this port for 1915 shows an increase over the calendar year 1884—713.6 per cent.

Controlling depth of harbor for 1917 remains practically the same as of 1916, but there has been an advance in the general depth of the harbor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to state the next amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Poindexter	Smoot
Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Sutherland
Culberson	Kenyon	Ransdell	Swanson
Fletcher	Kirby	Reed	Thomas
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Robinson	Townsend
Gore	Lewis	Saulsbury	Trammell
Hale	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Harding	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh
Henderson	Moses	Sherman	Warren
Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is detained by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to return to page 6 while the matter is fresh. I have just telephoned Gen. Taylor respecting the item of $20,000, in line 7, for maintenance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted to return to the item mentioned by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The engineers report that there has been very little maintenance on these two projects for the last year or two, and that the entire amount to the credit of those projects now will be used up during this spring and summer; and that unless they can have this amount of $20,000 they will not be able to give proper consideration to those projects after next summer, say July or August of this year—they refer mainly to the Cooper and Salem Rivers and Raccoon Creek—and that there is no mistake in our reporting it at $20,000. That was the amount which was recommended, and it is based on a report received from the district engineer on January 8. Recently, since the bill passed the House, the district engineer reports that he will require that amount for maintenance of those projects until July, 1920; so I ask that that item be agreed to as reported in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, myself, that if the item is actually required for maintenance, it ought to be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the item recurred to will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, the total will be made $59,770 to correspond to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total, without objection, will be changed to correspond to the amendment. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 14, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$23,000"; in line 18, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "$50,000; completing improvement of Generals Cut, Ga., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 581, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $1,000; for"; and, in line 20, after the words "in all," to strike out "$28,000" and insert "$56,000," so as to make the clause read:

Waterway between Beaufort, S. C., and St. Johns River, Fla.: For maintenance, $50,000; completing improvement of Generals Cut, Ga., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 581, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $1,000; for improvement of Back River, Ga., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1391, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $5,000; in all $56,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this $50,000 is for maintenance only, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. For maintenance of these waterways, yes; between Beaufort, S. C., and the St. Johns River, Fla. It is the intracoastal waterway from Beaufort, S. C., to St. Johns River, Fla. The increase is due to the recommendation of the engineers that $23,000 would not be sufficient to maintain that waterway until July, 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is an increase of over 100 per cent; and I wondered why the House only allowed $23,000, and then they immediately came to the Senate and had it increased over 100 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. The House estimate was not based upon the very latest information, and later data received by the Engineer office show that they need that amount, $50,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 2, after the words "first session," to strike out "$240,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to read:

Brunswick Harbor, Ga.: For maintenance, $30,000; for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 393, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia said that he was going to make some explanation of this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill understands this matter perhaps even better than I do, because it has been done by recommendation of the Engineering Department; but I understand that it includes the purchase of a dredge for the entire Savannah district.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have the document here. That is with reference to Brunswick Harbor, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. House Document No. 393.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that dredge is to be used in both of the harbors or in the entire district.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is for the purpose of completing the project if the project itself is adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong; it is for maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it is not for the purpose of completing it. It is for the dredge; that is right. It is to build a dredge, and it was estimated that it would cost that amount. They needed a dredge there; they had to have a particular kind of a dredge to do that work, and it was necessary to raise the appropriation for the purpose of providing that dredge.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that Gen. Taylor told us that there were no private companies that had a dredge that could do just that kind of work, and it would be necessary to have a dredge constructed for that work, which he regarded as very important. In many of the works private companies can do the work just as well as the Government, and we have a general clause permitting them to bid on all the work; but at that particular place he said that there was no chance to get the work done by a private company, and he wanted authority to construct the dredge.

Mr. SMOOT. What particular conditions are there that require a special dredge there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They need a seagoing dredge.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is out adjoining the ocean, very similar to the work at New York Harbor and at the mouth of the Mississippi River, where the Government has its own dredges, but they have no dredge that they can send to that point. All of their deep-sea dredges, he said, were in use, and they would need one for that work. They did not know of any place from which they could transfer a dredge to do that work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I called up Gen. Taylor and had a talk with him after the report of the committee was made. I understand the situation is this. The real damage in this harbor has been due to the fill of the bar. There is a channel out through the bar from both these harbors. I have a map of Brunswick Harbor here. The lack of furnishing a seagoing dredge has caused in the last two years the Government work on this channel to fill in nearly 2 feet. The same is true of Savannah Harbor.

Let me say in reference to Brunswick Harbor that in many respects it is the greatest harbor on the Atlantic coast. It is landlocked by St. Simon and Jekyll Islands; it has an area of 31 square miles; it has a thousand acres with depth of from 30 to 80 feet in the channel. The Government owns Blythe Island, bought in 1857 for the purpose of locating a naval station. It has simply not received the attention that its great value to the country deserves.

In the past two years there have been erected in Brunswick plants with investments of $20,000,000. The business has enormously increased. I have here a statement from the secretary of the board of trade giving a list of new plants that have very recently been built there. The Government put up one plant. The Atlantic Refining Company put up an enormous refinery there. The port will be used to a greater extent for that reason by vessels going toward the Panama Canal and South America.

This increase, Gen. Taylor told me, is in part to provide a seagoing dredge for the use not only of Brunswick, but equally of Savannah.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what is the depth of that channel?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The average at average low water is about 24 feet.

Mr. SMOOT. About 24 feet?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. About 24 feet, and 7½ more feet at high water. The project involves, with no great expense, adding 4 feet more depth to it. I dislike to give the figures, for I might be wrong, but there is to be with that additional 4 feet a depth to float any of our big naval vessels.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the depth was 22 feet in June, 1917.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was a fill of 2 feet at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, it had been 24 feet?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It had been 24 feet, and it was to have been carried to 30 feet. That was the project, but the lack of a seagoing dredge allowed the fill of 2 feet.

I wish to add that there is one great feature of Brunswick Harbor. It is not a harbor into which waste from the soil flows. It is an inlet from the sea and scarcely anything comes to it to fill it up. It is one of the most economical harbors to maintain that can be found anywhere for that reason.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a tide of about 7 feet, does the Senator say?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The tide is from 6.8 to 7.6 feet.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a very important harbor, and it is growing in importance all the while. There are no dredges available to do that work. The Government itself has not the necessary dredge. In fact, the Chief of Engineers reported to our committee that there is need for 20 new dredges in his department. But we have not provided for those. In this case it is necessary to provide for the dredge in order to have the work done.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what the dredge will cost. The balance, of course, would be the amount to be expended in improvements.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be the difference between $240,000 and $500,000; that is, $260,000 for a seagoing dredge. It is very much needed by the department, not only in connection with this work but other work.

Mr. SMOOT. I am glad to see that there is a great deal of commerce in and about that harbor. I think there were 1,009,026 short tons, valued at $28,258,725.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is now very much more than that.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just wait, I will state that that was the effect of the first improvement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I am always in favor of spending money upon projects where there is a commerce connected with them. What I object to is spending money upon projects where there is no commerce to-day and no likelihood that there ever will be sufficient commerce to justify the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That commerce, as a result of this work, has increased 5,000 per cent up to $56,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that on a project of that kind it is worth spending public money.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the last three years capitalists have invested in plants in Brunswick to the amount of $18,150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to congratulate the Senator from Georgia and also the people of Georgia upon that fact. I was surprised to hear the Senator say that the commerce of Savannah Harbor is as great as it is. In fact, I had no idea that it was greater than that of Boston Harbor until the Senator called my attention to it to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was surprised, too.

THE BOARD OF TRADE,
Brunswick, Ga., January 28, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Your letter of January 21 to Mr. R. L. Phillips, president of the board of trade, has just been referred to me by Mr. Phillips, who was out of the city for the past 10 days.

I am sorry your request for a map of Brunswick Harbor, showing width of channel and depths all over the bar, did not reach me sooner.

I am sending you herewith copy of Coast Survey Chart No. 447, which shows the depths at all points in the harbor, and on which the local Army Engineer office has outlined the anchorage areas that has depths of 30 feet at mean low water, or 37 feet at mean high water. The channel widths are also shown thereon. You will note from this that, with the exception of the shoal spots at Brunswick Point and in upper and lower Turtle River, the only obstacle preventing the use of the harbor by vessels of the deepest draft afloat is the controlling depths on Brunswick bar. The fact that the greater part of Brunswick inner harbor runs from 30 feet deep at mean low water to as much as 87 feet deep at mean low water should prove conclusively the economy with which the harbor can be deepened to make it available at low water for any ship in the world. Its large area of deep-water anchorage makes it a logical port for such improvements.

We have also indicated on the chart the location of the shipbuilding plants, the United States picric-acid plant, and the site upon which the Atlantic Refining Co. is now building their $5,000,000 oil refinery and half mile of permanent docks, over which they will receive the crude oil from tankers, and at which they will be able to fuel a practically unlimited number of steamers at one time. The availability of these fuel-oil facilities, both for merchant ships and the Navy, will be regulated solely by the controlling depth of water available between the open sea and the docks, and to make these facilities of the greatest value to the Nation a project should be adopted at once, as has been done already by the War and Navy Departments at Charleston, to provide a minimum channel 40 feet deep at mean low water, and not less than 1,000 feet wide. A channel of this depth would make available for use by the Navy not only these fuel facilities, but also the navy-yard site on Blythe Island, owned by the Government, and unused, since 1857, and the natural anchorage areas, in which a great fleet could ride safely at anchor without obstructing the channel.

With kind personal regards and best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

A. M. SMITH,
Managing Secretary.

THE BOARD OF TRADE,
Brunswick, Ga., February 4, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your wire, reading as follows, received: "Mail me at once figures on your growth during the last two years, naming new plants." In answer, I am giving you below a list of the old plants and the new plants here:

	Cost.
Old plants:
Yaryan Rosin & Turpentine Co	$1,000,000
Georgia Veneer & Package Co	250,000
Georgia Creosoting Co	200,000
Savannah River Lumber Co	100,000
Lang & Orr (planing mill)	50,000
Sea Food Co. (canning plant)	40,000
Brunswick Canning Co. (Ltd.)	60,000
Glynn Canning Co	75,000
	1,775,000
New plants (added in last two years):
Government picric acid plant	9,500,000
Atlantic Refining Co. (refinery and fuel oil)	5,000,000
Brunswick Marine Construction Corporation	300,000
Liberty Shipbuilding Co	50,000
United States Maritime Corporation	250,000
American Shipbuilding Co	350,000
Brunswick Shell Products Co	25,000
Brunswick Machine Co	25,000
Brunswick Shipbuilding Co	75,000
The Foundation Co.-Carpenter-Watkins (Inc.)	200,000
Trant Lumber Co	50,000
Georgia Rosin Products Co	50,000
Brunswick Cross-Arm Co	25,000
United States Government naval air station	2,000,000
Glynn Compress Co	50,000
Georgia Cotton Co	50,000
Glynn Ice Co. (new ice and cold-storage plant)	150,000
Total new industries	18,150,000

The total bank deposits for the year 1915 were $1,221,000; for 1916, $1,718,000; for 1917, $2,261,000; and for 1918, $4,118,000.

The pay rolls per week for 1915 were $33,000; for 1916, $44,000; for 1917, $63,000; and for 1918, $390,000. These figures were obtained from the three banks here in November, 1918.

If there is any further information that you desire along this line, please wire or write us and we shall be glad to send it to you promptly.

Yours, very truly,

A. M. SMITH,
Managing Secretary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 25.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will not the Senator let us vote on this amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, if I shall be recognized afterwards.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make a point of order against the motion of the Senator from Iowa. There is a motion pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the Secretary proceed with the next amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 2, in the total for Brunswick Harbor, Ga., strike out "$270,000" and insert "530,000."

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of resolution No. 25.

Mr. President, this resolution relates to legislation or the preparation for legislation made necessary by the war through which we have just passed.

I regret very much that I feel it to be my duty to bring the subject before the Senate at this time and in that way to defer, not to defeat, the appropriation bill which is under consideration. But from my standpoint this resolution and the subjects which are involved in it are of infinitely greater importance than any appropriation bill that has been brought before the Senate or that is likely to be brought before this body.

The appropriation bills will be passed. The operations of the Government will not be suspended. We all understand perfectly well that these appropriation bills must be and will be adopted in some form. But unless I can get consideration for this resolution at this time it is not likely that the House will come into possession of it in time to pass upon it or to consider it before this session has closed. It is of the very first importance, Mr. President, that this resolution, if it meets the favor of Congress, shall be considered at this session.

The opportunity to accomplish the thing which we desire to accomplish through the resolution is passing day after day. It can not be as effective as though it had been adopted a month ago, and every hour that intervenes without the action of Congress upon the subject will allow some important vital situation to pass unimproved.

These are my reasons, Mr. President, for bringing it before the Senate at this time, and I sincerely hope that it can be disposed of by the Senate so that no serious delay will occur in the consideration of the river and harbor bill. If I have to choose between the passage of the river and harbor bill and the passage of this resolution, I unhesitatingly select the latter for my preference.

The resolution, Mr. President, is substantially as follows: It provides for the creation of six joint congressional committees on reconstruction. Each of those committees is to be composed of five Senators and five Representatives in Congress. They are to be selected in the manner in which the standing committees of each House are selected, and they are to change from time to time as the standing committees are changed.

I quote, then, the next paragraph of the resolution:

The said committees shall make, respectively, investigations of the subjects hereinafter named and herein assigned to them, respectively, and shall report to Congress from time to time with such recommendations as to additional legislation, or otherwise, as they, respectively, may deem advisable.

The first committee, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee upon the demobilization of the Army and Navy, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit.

I especially call the attention of the Members of the Senate to the scope of the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Do I understand the Senator from Florida rises to a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not opposing particularly the Senator's resolution, but I insist that it is not in order now, because we are considering this bill under a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the committee amendments to the bill in the order which they come, and the pending question now before the Senate is the amendments of the committee offered to this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. The Chair thinks that under Rule XXII the pending question is the committee amendment, and the motion of the Senator from Iowa is not in order. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Chair rule that until this bill is disposed of there can be no change in the proceedings of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly not. The Chair simply rules that the pending question is the committee amendment which the Secretary has reported, and that under the rules of the Senate it is out of order to make the motion which the Senator from Iowa has proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Secretary read the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states to the Senator from Utah that the amendment has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the amendment with reference to Brunswick Harbor had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was agreed to and another amendment has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. What other amendment was read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment again.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 2, strike out "$270,000" and insert "$530,000."

Mr. SMOOT. That is only changing the total, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment and it has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Secretary read it after the other was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to a vote on this amendment, but I hope the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] will not feel that there will be no opportunity for me to bring forward this resolution. I intend to bring it forward at some time and take the judgment of the Senate upon it. If I can not do it otherwise than through speaking upon it, either upon this amendment or upon some other, I shall pursue that course in obedience to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am standing by the rule of the Senate. There is a bill here that ought to be completed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall discontinue my remarks until this amendment is voted upon. Then I shall seek the recognition of the Chair for the motion I desire to make.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point of order, in my judgment, is good against this proposal or against any other proposal of this kind until these amendments are acted on, because under the unanimous consent of the Senate the formal reading of the bill was dispensed with and the Senate committee amendments were to be taken up and considered first. The committee amendments are here to be acted upon. I am not delaying the Senator. If we go on and act on these amendments, the Senator will have time to offer his resolution for consideration. I am not opposing his resolution, but there is a bill here in my charge, and it is my duty to keep the bill before the Senate and have it disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not questioning the sincerity of the Senator from Florida or his conception of his duty. I hope the Senator will pursue the course which he thinks best. I shall endeavor to get this resolution before the Senate just as soon as I can.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to see this bill put through, but I desire to say that if the contention of the Senator in charge of the bill is correct there will never be another unanimous consent on an appropriation bill that the committee amendments shall be considered first. That is not my understanding nor was it ever contemplated by me that an agreement of that kind would shut out action of every other kind and require the consideration of the amendments of the committee before anything else could come up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no point of order pending. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has the floor and is entitled to address the Senate. The Chair sustained the point of order made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not desire to address the Senate on the amendment which the Chair has said is pending, but I hope to get the floor immediately after that is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEES ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 25.

As I was remarking a few moments ago with regard to the character of the resolution, the first joint congressional committee is upon the demobilization of the Army and Navy, and it is required to investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The employment of discharged soldiers and sailors in civil pursuits.

(b) The allotment of lands to returned soldiers and sailors and their establishment in homes upon the public domain.

(c) All legislation which may be required in the proper care for those who have suffered the dangers of war, and especially those who have been disabled and whose ability to earn a livelihood has been impaired.

Mr. President, is there anything more important than to enact the legislation which ought to attend the demobilization of our Army and our Navy? Confessedly our legislation is both inadequate and imperfect. The highest duty of the American people at this time is to see that the men who have offered their lives in defense of their country shall be properly cared for as they return, either in health or in sickness, to their homes and to their communities. I do not remember just how many have been wounded during the war in France, but, as I remember, nearly 50,000 have fallen and 200,000 have suffered some disability in the defense of their country.

What shall we do with these soldiers, incapable as they are of earning a livelihood, without the means to enter upon any business which they are qualified to pursue, and when even though they come home safe and sound they find themselves not only deprived of the profits of the employment in which they were formerly engaged, but they find themselves without the opportunity to reenter those employments.

If there is one thing more than another which ought to engage the patriotic heart and ought to command universal interest it is some legislation, some provision with regard to these men, who have done more than you or I have done. We may have performed our duty as we have understood our duty, but it was a duty unaccompanied with danger. They have performed their duties in the midst of the most terrific struggle which ever devastated the earth, and it is for us now to see that as they return to their homes they are so provided that they will not suffer in the transition of war to peace.

I do not believe there is a single committee now engaged in the especial duty or work of devising the legislation which will make this transition either tolerable or safe. I do not think that there is any one committee that has in charge the legislation of which I speak.

I do not want by the organization of standing committees composed of Members of the House and Senate to dispossess the committees of either the Senate or the House of the jurisdiction which they are now exercising. I want these committees to go forward with all the speed possible and do the most effectual work they can do. But this is imperative work. There is need for immediate concurrence between the House and the Senate respecting any legislation that we may approve. If we work separately we will neither work as effectively nor will we accomplish the end so speedily as though we were to create joint committees, who would act in a sense as conference committees. We will save months in point of time, aside from utilizing the combined wisdom of both branches of Congress in the preparation and the passage of legislation with the object which I have set forth.

I do not intend to lay before the Senate my own views about the legislation which should be had. I would instantly create controversy if I were to do so. It is that very controversy among Members of Congress which makes legislation of this character difficult to pass. It is difficult to come to an agreement with regard to it, and from that fact arises the necessity of joint committees, if we intend to do anything within the time in which we must do it, if we are to afford the relief, which is imperative from my standpoint. If we allow six months to pass or a year to pass, these men will have suffered all they can suffer, and any remedy we may propose will be unavailing. It will have lost very largely its purpose if we permit months and months to go by without preparing a comprehensive and an effective plan for their relief.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. FRANCE. Does not the Senator think that much of the unrest throughout the country, to which allusion was made this morning, is due to the neglect on the part of the national legislative bodies to deal with these very matters?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so, Mr. President. We are drifting into the most unfortunate position in which any nation can be. I believe it to be true that a very large proportion of the soldiers who have gone abroad and have so magnificently performed their duty, not only to our own country but to civilization itself, are coming home discontented, are coming home with criticism in their hearts, and that many of those discharged from the service will come with criticism upon their lips. I can not imagine anything more depressing than to feel that the 2,000,000 men who have fought for us on the soil of France are coming to their own land not only dissatisfied with the manner in which their officers have managed and controlled them but deeply disappointed because their own country has done nothing to provide for the transition from war to peace, from military life to civil pursuits.

Is there a Senator here who doubts it? Can you doubt that if the very day after the armistice was proclaimed there had been created a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress with the especial duty of taking care of the men who are thus committed to our guardianship, and if we had entered upon that work diligently and intelligently, and this were known to the soldiers of the United States, there would have occurred the severe criticisms and the deep-seated disappointment on the part of these men you now observe?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator asks the question whether there is one Senator who doubts that statement. I am one. So far as my State is concerned I do not think there is a man returning from the Army who is not able to find plenty of work and a position open to him to go back to; and I have the impression that in Iowa, the Senator's State, he will find that the condition is very much the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. I must entirely disagree with the Senator from Nebraska. I have no doubt that a great many of these men will find labor, and that a great many of them have found labor, but a great many have not found employment, and they will not be able to find employment unless the industries of the country revive in a way which I regard as impossible, at least very improbable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not true that the Senator's own mail from his constituents indicates that for every man who is looking for a place he has 10 men in the Army anxious to get out, so as to take positions that are offered them?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is very little actual communication between those who have places to give and the men who are in the Army. They depend for their information in that respect upon the general sentiment of the community, the general promises which are outstanding, to reinstate men who have gone into the Army in their former places, but they can not reinstate them in their former places unless those who are now filling those places are driven from them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not answer my question. I want to say that, so far as my mail is concerned, there is not a day that passes that I am not urging the War Department to discharge men who have places open for them and work awaiting them.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know of some such cases, but the men are begging to be discharged whether there are any places open for them or otherwise. They do not want to remain in the Army during times of peace, and they would rather face the struggle for employment than to continue in the Army. I think that is the exact situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while I agree with very much of what the distinguished Senator from Iowa has said, and in the main agree that we ought to perhaps appoint committees or at least devote ourselves at the earliest possible moment to the present domestic problems involved, and made more pressing by the recent armistice and the transition from war to peace, replying very briefly, and in a word——

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not yield for a reply, because the rule might be applied to me rather rigidly, and I might lose my place on the floor.

Mr. KING. May I say this: Does not the Senator feel that his statement was a little too broad when he observed that the men returning from overseas—and he did not seem to make any distinction—were filled with bitterness and resentment in their hearts, and when discharged that feeling manifested itself in criticism from their lips of those who had charge of them and of conditions generally? I have not found such a condition. I think that the men who have come from overseas feel that they did a great work for their country and for civilization and have come home like gallant men ready to meet the problems that confront them here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no doubt they come home with the same spirit with which they fought. They intend to play their part in the drama of life, and they will do it courageously; they will do it resolutely, but it is still my observation that there is among the returning soldiers a very pronounced feeling of disappointment—sometimes resentment, and sometimes merely regret which they experience in coming home and finding that they are not to be cared for as they believed they would be.

Mr. President, what I say, of course, about the treatment of the soldiers abroad does not apply to all the officers of the Army, but I have listened to scores of them relating their grievances with regard to the manner in which they have been officered and controlled in France. Do not think that that has driven from their hearts the love of country, or the purpose to work for her and fight for her in the future, but, nevertheless, it is a very unhappy and unfortunate circumstance.

Mr. President, this, however, is a mere opening chapter to this resolution. It is put first in the resolution because it ought to be done first. It must be done now, or not at all; that is, it will not be effectively done unless it is done now. But I pass to another subject of the resolution.

The third of said committees, which shall be known as the Joint Congressional Committee on Interstate Transportation, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The permanent relation which the Government of the United States should sustain to the common carriers of the country.

(b) Whether the systems of transportation now in possession of and being operated by the Government should be returned to their former owners and operated as heretofore, or whether Government operation should continue with or without Government ownership; or, if private ownership is to continue and private operation resumed, what system of regulation and control will be best adapted to secure efficiency in service, reasonable rates of transportation, and fairness to the capital invested.

(c) The relation which should be established between inland water transportation and the railways, including the control of the former.

(d) All questions relating to communication by wire.

Mr. President, there is no greater, no more vital problem now before the American people, none that has ever been before the American people, and I am led almost to say that there never will be one more important, of vaster consequence, than the subject I have just recited. The Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate has been for a month or more holding daily sessions, inviting the views of men of thought, of men of experience, of men of judgment upon this important topic. I do not want that committee to cease; I want it to continue the work in which it is engaged; but, if we had a joint committee, composed of Members of both Houses, that could establish some relation between the consideration of this subject in the Senate and in the House, if we could be drawing more nearly together, if we could be conferring with regard to the subject, in my judgment, we would reach a conclusion months and months in advance of the time that will be required if there be entirely independent consideration and action upon the part of the two Houses.

This is the time to do that work. The public mind is alive not only to its importance, but is alive to the very difficult problems which inhere in the readjustment of the relations between the Government of the United States and the carriers of the country. There never has been a time, and I do not believe that there ever will be a time, when the public mind is so ready and so ripe, so matured for the consideration and disposition of this subject as it now is. Everybody is thinking of it. Every man who has been affected by the experience of the last year, every man who was affected by the experience of the time before Government operation—all are agreed and anxious that the United States shall, at the very first possible moment, reach a conclusion with regard to the permanent policy which shall be established between the Government and the railroads.

If we miss this opportunity, no other so good a one is likely to recur, and it seems to me that there ought to have been two months ago the closest communication and the closest relations between the two Houses in the consideration of this subject.

I mention but one other of the subjects which are touched by this resolution. It is this:

The fifth of said committees, which shall be known as the Joint Congressional Committee on Employers and Employees, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) Conciliation and arbitration in labor disputes.

(b) The relation of men and women in similar employments.

(c) Substitution of female employees for male employees, and vice versa.

(d) The organization of permanent employment agencies.

(e) The distribution of labor, including employment of surplus labor on public works.

(f) The sanitary housing of employees and the disposition of houses constructed by the Government during the war.

(g) The freedom of labor, and of employment in its relation to trade unionism; and wages, hours, and conditions of employment.

Mr. President, if I said a few moments ago that the adjustment of the railway problem was the most important, I desire to retract that statement. That part of the resolution which I have just read is the most important of all.

The people of this country are deluding themselves in the hope that the storm which has swept over Russia, which is at its height in Germany, which is gathering in Great Britain, will not be felt in the United States. Those who indulge that hope are bound to be disappointed. Mr. President, we must face that question—the labor question—just as these other countries are facing it.

The struggle between socialism and a modified individualism agitated the world for years before the war. It received great impetus during the war. The outcome of the war was of a character to bring this issue directly before the people of the several countries engaged in the war, and we must meet calmly, intelligently, and resolutely the issue between socialism and individualism of a modified character, because none of us can hope, and none of us ought to wish, to continue individualism just as it was known before.

There is no essential difference between the Soviet government of Russia and the Ebert government of Germany, except that the former is in civil war and is led into atrocities, if you please, assassination and murder, so characterized because it is in war; but there is no essential difference. Before the war the labor movement of Europe was largely in the hands of the Socialists. The labor leaders of Russia before the war were Socialists; the labor leaders of Germany were Socialists. They led, directed, and controlled the movement in behalf of labor in those countries. The only two great commercial countries in the world in which any kind of individualism was preserved before the war in labor unions were Great Britain and the United States.

I hope I will not be understood as approving socialism as it is preached in Russia or as it is preached in Germany or as it is now being taught in Great Britain. I believe in individualism in private enterprise, but no man dare rise anywhere to condemn as unpatriotic or untrained or uneducated all the men and the women of the world who believe that socialism is the better form of industry and production. While I do not agree with the Socialists in that respect, nevertheless I know that the time is coming when I must meet that doctrine or that form of government in society, not by denunciation, not by repression, not by imprisonment, but I must meet it in the forum of reason and argument, and, if I can not prevail against it there, I go down, and I ought to go down.

The Socialist in Russia believes that all industrial activity should be conducted by the government. The Socialist in Germany believes exactly the same thing. The Socialists in Great Britain—and the principal labor leaders of Great Britain are now passing into the ranks of socialism—believe that human activity should be conducted, managed, and directed by society itself. They believe, and we all believe, that a man who will not work ought not to eat. I think that is a fundamental doctrine, whether one is an individualist or whether he is a Socialist; but we believe, those of us who still cling to the old system in a modified form, that there is no enduring progress in the world unless there are degrees in compensation or reward.

I for one believe that a worker is entitled to withdraw from that which he produces or which the aggregate produces the share proportionate to his contribution, and I know of no way in which to adjust that share save upon the basis of the world's opinion with regard to the value of the contribution. I do not care, however, to discuss the question. I only know that it is here for consideration, and it is here for decision. There is a crying demand for legislation, for consideration, and for intelligent study of the relation between labor and capital, between the varying views which are held by students with regard to the share to which the worker is entitled as compared to the share to which capital is entitled.

We ought to have a joint committee of Congress devoted to that subject, and to no other—a joint committee that can so coordinate the work of the two Houses that we will be likely, at least, to reach a conclusion upon the inquiry or upon the problem within some reasonable time. We ought to be able to say to the men who believe that they have been and that they are deprived of their honest, just share of the fruits of labor that the whole thought of the Congress in a crystallized and organized way has been turned to the subject, and that we are not unmindful of its importance, not unmindful that it is vital to the perpetuation of the Republic and to the happiness of mankind.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. May I suggest to the Senator that, entertaining similar views to those he has expressed as to the importance of this particular question, I introduced a resolution here for a general survey of labor problems by the Committee on Education and Labor. That resolution passed the Senate, and we have had at least, I think, 25 days where the usual hours of committee meetings have been given to that subject. The hearings have been intensely interesting, and out of them have come for consideration certain bills that we felt might help the labor situation.

I wish to say to the Senator that at the time Mr. Gompers testified I think we had possibly six members of the committee present. During the remainder of the time, I am safe in saying, we never have had over five present, most of the time not over three, and some of the time only two, the average being about three. The effort to do something along that line was met with the proposition that the way to handle this question was to radiate a cheerful optimism, and that any attempt to investigate these questions tended to excite unrest and Bolshevism in the country. I have come to the conclusion that, so far as the Senate is concerned, it does not feel that there is any necessity of doing anything on that subject. I hope, and I believe, that when the President of the United States returns—and it seems that the only way to secure any action by the Senate or by Congress is through his efforts—he will realize the situation and not be deterred by charges of inciting trouble from lending his great influence to some movement of that kind; but it has been disappointing that apparently no interest can be aroused at present in that behalf.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the junior Senator from Iowa, with the permission of the senior Senator from that State, to consider the fact that we are in the closing hours of the session and that Senators are busy with appropriation and other important measures which would excuse some of them, perhaps, from attending the committee to which the junior Senator from Iowa refers.

Mr. KENYON. These hearings have been running for five or six weeks, I will say to the Senator from Utah. I think there are members of the Committee on Education and Labor who never have attended a meeting of that committee.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. I do not wish to be led into any criticism of Senators who do not attend committee meetings. I understand how difficult it is for them to adjust their various engagements, and I do not want to depreciate in the least degree the very valuable work that has been done already by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. I say of that committee, as I did of the Interstate Commerce Committee, that I hope it will continue its labors, for there can not be too much light shed upon this problem; there can not be too much energy devoted to its solution. I hoped that, if Congress could lift up the subjects which are named in this resolution into high prominence and turn the attention of the whole country to them and to these committees, we could awaken an interest in them that does not exist and will not exist if they are being dealt with by the ordinary standing committees of the two Houses.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], that I think the cause of the inattention probably runs very much deeper than the one he suggests, because the President in his last message before he went abroad said that there was no need for reconstruction, except with reference to a policy having to do with the returning soldiers; that, so far as the general business of the country was concerned, it did not need to be reconstructed; that what we needed to do was to unhamper business and to unshackle commerce, and not to put the business men of the country in leading strings. I think perhaps that spirit has filtered down through Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope that that is not true, and I am going to conduct my argument upon the theory that it is not true; that is to say, that Senators and Members of the House feel the same responsibility to the country and to its welfare that the President feels, and that they will try as earnestly to discharge their duties in these two Houses as the President will try to discharge his. I can not think that any considerable number of Senators suspend their activities until they hear the direction of the President. I may be driven to that conclusion presently, but I will not believe it until it is forced in upon me in a way that admits of no doubt whatever.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I say further that I believe that the effort to secure some legislation looking to alleviating the labor situation by this Congress was very much injured and made almost impossible by the strike in Seattle? I think that there was a very deep feeling concerning it. I talked with many Senators about it, and they could not get in harmony with the idea of a strike going on out there and at the same time there being unemployment in the country—a strike which did not seem to be justified at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can understand how that might influence some of them, but it ought not to influence anybody; that is, it ought not to delay consideration and legislation upon the labor problem. It is so much deeper than a strike that no resentment which may arise on account of a strike, justified or unjustified, ought to suspend for a single moment our effort in proposing a plan which will compose differences in principle between labor and what is generally called capital.

I do not think, either, that we ought to wait until the President returns in order that he may give us his opinion upon the subject. I have no doubt we will take under careful consideration whatever he may have to say to us upon it; but there are many things to be learned in the meanwhile that will be of vast value to those who do the work, and we ought to go forward. I do not expect to secure any legislation at this session; but I do hope that we can create these committees, so that they can continue their work during any recess which may occur, and may be in position to report at the next session of Congress, whether it comes in June or whether it comes in December, some plan that we may pursue that will help to allay the discontent and help to cure the ills which are so apparent.

Mr. President, I do not intend to pursue this subject further. I may remark, I think, without objection, that this concurrent resolution had its origin in one introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and it became the subject of a conference between Members upon this side of the Chamber, and they seemed to be unanimously of the opinion that a concurrent resolution of this character ought to be adopted, and that these committees ought to be created, and that this work, which I regard as essential to the well-being of the Republic, should go forward, and should go forward immediately; and it is in the hope that I may secure a vote upon the concurrent resolution this afternoon that I have brought it before the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL and Mr. WEEKS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move that the motion of the Senator from Iowa be laid upon the table.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana moves to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution referred to by him.

Mr. WEEKS. Is that subject to debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator from Louisiana has moved to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I was on my feet to debate the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana first addressed the Chair. The Chair recognized the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. My motion was to lay the motion of the Senator from Iowa on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gronna	La Follette	Page
Beckham	Hale	Lenroot	Pittman
Calder	Henderson	Lewis	Poindexter
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Lodge	Pollock
Colt	Johnson, Cal.	McCumber	Pomerene
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Ransdell
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Reed
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Martin, Ky.	Robinson
Dillingham	Kellogg	Moses	Saulsbury
Fletcher	Kendrick	Nelson	Shafroth
France	Kenyon	New	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	King	Norris	Sherman
Gay	Kirby	Nugent	Simmons
Gore	Knox	Overman	Smith, Ga.

Smith, Mich.	Sutherland	Trammell	Weeks
Smith, S. C.	Swanson	Vardaman	Williams
Smoot	Thomas	Wadsworth	Wolcott
Spencer	Thompson	Walsh
Sterling	Townsend	Watson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. WEEKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is a motion to lay on the table, and is not debatable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. BAIRD], and vote "nay"

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). By inadvertence I voted without recalling to my mind the fact that I was paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I thought he was present and voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, which I transfer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bankhead	Kendrick	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Kirby	Ransdell	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lewis	Reed	Thomas
Culberson	McKellar	Robinson	Thompson
Fletcher	Martin, Ky.	Saulsbury	Trammell
Gay	Myers	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gore	Nugent	Sheppard	Williams
Henderson	Overman	Simmons	Wolcott
Hitchcock	Pittman	Smith, Ariz.
Jones, N. Mex.	Pollock	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—33.

Curtis	Hardwick	Penrose
Dillingham	Hollis	Phelan
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Shields

So Mr. CUMMINS's motion was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] made the motion which has just prevailed I was about to add a few comments to what had been said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on the subject of reconstruction. I am very glad he made the motion, because I think there were five or six Senators on the floor at that time, and as there are a few more present now, I have a somewhat better audience before which to express my views.

I have no intention of talking to kill time on this or any other subject; but in my judgment this is the most important question before the country. It is one that has been neglected to such a degree that it seems almost impossible now to get any action which will be of reasonable benefit to the country. As long ago as 1916 Great Britain had appointed committees to take up and consider every phase of the conditions which would exist after the war. As far as we know, that same condition existed in France and to a certain degree it existed in Germany, because I have here the reports from all of these countries, not as full a report from Germany as from other nations, but as indicative that every nation engaged in the war was preparing for those things which must come when peace came. Indeed, before Germany undertook the war she had made preparations for such commercial activities as would be necessary and could be undertaken after the war, assuming, of course, that it was a victory for the German nation.

Last September there was introduced a resolution which in considerable detail brought to the attention of the Senate this whole subject. That resolution has been referred to by the Senator from Iowa. Indeed, a revised resolution, prepared by the committee of which he is a member, has been submitted to the Senate. It is not a question of form or in what shape or, indeed, to what extent this resolution should carry the movement, but it is of vital importance to this country that something be done. The day I introduced the resolution—the 27th of last September, I think it was—there was a hasty gathering of the clans across the aisle.

The suggestion was made that something ought to be done about this; and a bill was prepared, which was introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. At that time both resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have no doubt that at that time there was some purpose on the part of the majority in this Chamber to take action, but for some unknown reason—which may be guessed but which I do not care to repeat—it was decided to take no action. Therefore those resolutions have been lying in the Senate Committee on the Judiciary from that time to this, without any action whatever, while we have known that every day important committees of the British Parliament and of British citizens, important committees in France, important committees in Italy, and in every other European country, were working out schemes they considered necessary, not to bring the industrial world back to the conditions existing before the war, because anyone with any judgment must have known that that would be impossible, but to prepare the world for the new industrial conditions prevailing after the war. After-war normal conditions will never be the same as prewar normal conditions.

This reconstruction resolution applied to a great variety of subjects; first and foremost, that relating to labor. As the Senator from Iowa has correctly pointed out, we have seen labor conditions developing along certain lines in Europe so surely that it must have been indicative to any sane man that we would have to face similar problems. We knew that we had three and a half million men in the service, nearly 4,000,000; we knew we had as many more war workers, who had been diverted from their ordinary occupations to manufacturing those things the Government required during the war; we knew that when the war was over the manufacturing required by the Government would stop at once; that those three or four millions of war workers would be thrown on the market without any delay; that as rapidly as possible the men in the service would be discharged, and that we would have four or five or six millions of people in the United States who would have to be transferred from one employment to another, even assuming that there were other employments ready to receive them all.

I submit to the Senate that not one single thing has been done by the Senate, or by Congress, or by the administration, to take care of these millions of American citizens who are certainly entitled to the first consideration of Congress, so that we see to-day a gradually increasing number of unemployed in every industrial center; we see these men who have been wearing the khaki, representing us on the other side, coming back here and being discharged, and no employment available for them.

How different was the course in Great Britain! As long ago as the summer of 1916 they had made a card index of every man in their military service. They noted whether or not he could go back to his former employment. They had noted what he could do if he could not go back to that employment. Every condition surrounding that man was noted on a card, so that they knew at once his particular circumstances; and they had determined not to discharge that man until he was ready to go directly into some employment, either the one he had followed before or a new occupation which might be available at the time.

The British Government was considering a great number of public developments, and many of them are being undertaken similar to the suggestion that has been made by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], similar to the suggestion for the construction of an intracostal waterway system which has been suggested on this floor. Those things could have been very easily surveyed and have been worked out. They would have required the employment of thousands and tens of thousands of men. Yet we all know from the press that in every part of the country these men are practically walking the streets to-day and no attempt has been made by anybody connected with Congress or the administration to work out their destiny.

Now let me point out very briefly some of the other things that have been undertaken by Great Britain along this line and along the lines of reconstruction—some of the different actions that have been taken there. I want to say that the leading men of Great Britain, whether in Parliament or out of Parliament, have served on these committees; they have gone into the subjects industriously and minutely, and they have submitted reports to Parliament, some of which I have here. Of course, I am not going to use them on the floor, but I am going to point out to Senators what they have undertaken to do and, in fact, what they prepared to do, and what is being done to-day.

There is a ministry on reconstruction. Early in the consideration of this subject it was decided that it would not be practicable to undertake this great work through committees. After they had worked for six months and after-war problems had been considered by various and divers committees, a ministry of reconstruction was established to assume entire charge of the direction of the committees making these investigations.

They have a committee on shipping. I am reading now from a report made by the ministry on reconstruction, which has been given very general circulation in Great Britain.

Mr. KENYON. When was that committee appointed?

Mr. WEEKS. The committee on reconstruction was appointed in August, 1917. The committee on shipping has made their report, a copy of which I have here—a report of something like 100 pages—and although the Senate Committee on Commerce has been investigating the shipping problem, while a great number of men have been suggesting this and that scheme in order to work out our difficulties connected with that problem, we know perfectly well to-day we are as much in the air in regard to shipping and what we are going to do with our shipyards and the vessels now owned by the Government as we were six months ago. We have actually made no headway during that time. We have no plan. We do not know how we are going to operate these ships. We are talking about agencies abroad, agencies in this country, about rates, and all that sort of thing in the most desultory kind of way. There is not in the mind of a single member of the Shipping Board, in my judgment, a definite plan which may not be revised, and materially revised, even if it were put in operation by himself. Yet we have hundreds of millions of dollars, I do not know but billions of dollars, invested in either shipyards or shipping.

No prudent business man, if he were to have an operation of that kind imposed upon him months before it was to be put into his hands as a finality, would go into it without months before working out carefully a systematic and scientific plan for handling the great investment that has been made in shipping. Great Britain has considered this subject, and done so with great completeness.

Raw material. Great Britain through its Provinces, through its colonies, controls a great many raw materials, none of any particular moment, except coal and some iron within the area of Great Britain itself, and yet they have worked out with great minuteness the question of raw materials, where they are going to get them, how they are going to get them, and how they are going to pay for them. They do not propose to permit British capital to go into any country to purchase raw material or anything else without a controlling hand over that capital, and when the raw materials are purchased from some other country it is intended that there shall be a reciprocity connected with it which will enable the sale at the same time of British goods.

You will recall, Mr. President, that I introduced the other day a resolution relating to the embargo that had been established by Great Britain. Incidentally I should like to say now that the embargo has already, quite likely to some degree as a result of the agitation which has taken place in this Chamber, been modified.

We sold in Great Britain in the year 1913 very nearly a million pairs of shoes—to be accurate, I should say 650,000 pairs of shoes—having a value of something like $1,500,000. Not since the end of 1916 have we sold a single shoe in Great Britain. The embargo, since the embargo resolution was introduced in the Senate, has been modified, so that we are to be permitted to sell in Great Britain 25 per cent of the number of shoes sold there in the year 1913.

These are matters of trade. Every country is going to look after itself in such trade relations. There is no animosity connected with it. I personally have none whatever in relation to Great Britain or what it is doing with its trade; but I do believe as an American Senator, supposed to be looking after the interests of my constituents, that I should enter an inquiry when some very unusual procedure is being taken by another country, and an embargo is an unusual proceeding.

I recall that one or two Senators suggested that it seemed to be an anomaly for a Senator who was a believer in a high protective tariff to make a protest or suggest a protest against an embargo. That criticism has been taken up by certain newspapers in the country and heralded as one of the unusual things that sometimes happens in politics, and it has been referred to as an element of inconsistency on my part. There is just as much difference between an embargo and a protective tariff as there can be between any two elements that seem to have to do with the same particular subject. As a matter of fact, I never advocated an embargo. I think we are placing some embargoes on the goods of other countries in the United States, but that is directly contrary to the general trend of the policy we ought to be following in the United States. We ought to be clearing up such policies and getting back to normal trade conditions instead of creating artificial conditions, which can only result in more or less temper and dissatisfaction and inharmonious relations.

That leads me to bring to the attention of the Senate something that came to me in my correspondence this morning relating to hemp. It seems that the Philippine government has recently organized a corporation of $50,000,000—$25,000,000 in gold. The Philippine government owns 51 per cent of the stock of that corporation. It has passed the Philippine legislative body and has been signed in Washington by the Governor of the Philippines. The Philippine government, in other words, has gone into a trust to control all the hemp of the Philippine Islands. It owns 51 per cent of the stock of the company which is to control and make a monopoly of the hemp of the Philippine Islands. As a result of that, the price of hemp is something like 20 per cent higher than normal. It is as high practically as it was at the highest point during the war. Yet there is an ample supply of hemp in the world, and if that embargo—it is practically an embargo, placed on this product in the Philippine Islands, of which the Philippine government is the controlling factor, were removed the price of hemp would drop at once 20 or 25 per cent.

I call that to the attention of the Senate as a step taken in connection with the trade in which our people are involved, a step which could be prevented if the President of the United States were in Washington and saw fit to do it by vetoing that bill, which he has the power to do.

Certainly some attention ought to be given to such matters, because those islands are to a great extent dependent upon us. We are users of their hemp to a large degree, and yet our people will be paying at least 25 per cent more for hemp, as far ahead as we can see because of this corporation—in effect, a trust—which has been formed over there.

Mr. President, to get back to what Great Britain has done in relation to reconstruction——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield? I wish to ask a question for information.

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. We had a very friendly discussion the other day when the Senator offered his resolution. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether the trade restrictions, using a milder term than embargo, which have been employed by Great Britain since the war, are not the result of two causes: First, because she has, as a result of the war, considerable accumulations which might be called salvage; and, secondly, she has not the means with which to purchase some of the articles which this country and perhaps other countries desire to send to her?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the embargo on shoes, to which I particularly referred—that embargo had been brought to my attention and was my reason for making the inquiry of the State Department; it did not have anything to do with German propaganda, as has been suggested by some—was put on something like two years ago, I think, in the last days of 1916. It was entirely a war measure, and established notwithstanding the fact that we were buying some shoes of Great Britain for our Army. But it has been continued since the war. Complaints have been made. No action has been taken. The replies from the State Department were hardly satisfactory. I do not know now what action has been taken. Yet since the matter commenced to be agitated in the Senate, the bars have been let down so that we may send there 25 per cent of the number of shoes we were shipping in 1913.

I have no doubt Great Britain's purpose is to keep her people at work, to get her manufacturing operations up to full capacity, and so keep them up to a condition of the highest efficiency. I have no fault to find with that. If I were in their places, that is exactly what I should do. I would not have any citizens walking the street if I could avoid it by any reasonable measure. It is possible that they had an accumulation of shoes in Great Britain. I am not sure about that, but the assigned reason was to get their manufacturing establishments back to normal and keep their people employed. I think it is a sufficient reason for the action taken from their standpoint.

The only question at issue is whether the rest of the world is being treated fairly or whether these artificial restrictions can be placed on trade without creating a sentiment harmful to friendly relations. I have none other than the most friendly feeling toward Great Britain and had none other when I asked what our State Department was doing in regard to this particular subject.

Another committee, Mr. President, in Great Britain is that relating to the allocation of materials. I am not going to read just what was done by that committee, but the subject is one of great importance. The plans are all made as to what they shall do with material. They know that in this or that place there is not sufficient material for their manufacturers and it has to come from somewhere. They have ascertained the places from which it can be obtained, know how much shall be required, and have considered every phase relating to that subject.

The committee on transportation has made a complete report on the transportation facilities of Great Britain. Every phase of that question was given consideration two years ago. Everybody knows that the question of the future policy in regard to our transportation system should have been taken under consideration just as soon as the Government took over the railroads. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or somebody should have given that subject immediate consideration, and yet without a leader who really believed in reconstruction we have been drifting along all these days, and we now find ourselves in a condition where we do not know what we are going to do with these veins and arteries of our industrial system. If we avoid getting them all into the hands of receivers, we are going to do very well.

There is a committee on demobilization and reinstatement. These subjects were considered in connection with the disposition of labor, how they should demobilize their military and war workers. They worked that out, as I have said, in the greatest detail. They knew substantially where every man was going as soon as peace was made or as soon as he could be spared from the military service or industrial service incident and necessary to the war.

Industrial organization. How could industrial organization be transferred from the war purposes for which they were being used? It must be remembered that the manufacturing capacity of Great Britain has substantially doubled since the beginning of the European war. They necessarily doubled it in order to manufacture the necessary products for use in the war. What is going to come of that greatly increased capacity? If it were kept employed it would require the entire man power of Great Britain and the entire supply of materials that could be found tributary to Great Britain. Necessarily some of it can not be kept employed; some of it will be destroyed. And yet it is important that this great industrial establishment which had been created as a result of the war should be given consideration after the war, and that has been done in that country.

Have we done so in the United States? Has any step been taken by Congress or the administration or anyone else to determine what shall be done with all this additional manufacturing capacity created in the United States for the purposes of the Government during the war? If there has been any single step taken in any direction I have not heard of it.

Then there was a joint industrial council considering plans for the coordination of the various industries of Great Britain—how one could be made to work with another, how there could be a transferral of employees from one to the other, how there could be a transferral of raw materials in different kinds of manufacturing industries. The whole question of working conditions was taken up, including the welfare conditions which have been referred to by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the whole question of old-age pensions, of health insurance, and every other welfare question troubling people everywhere in every country in the world.

We do not know what ought to be done in relation to these questions. It is possible and quite probable that some steps should be taken in every one of these welfare activities. And yet no man wants to inaugurate such policies until after a careful investigation has been made. There are two or three countries in the world where steps similar to the ones I have suggested have been taken. Reports are uncertain as to the result. Certainly what has been done, the results obtained in these countries, should be known to Congress and should be given consideration here. However, not the slightest thing has been done that I know of to provide for old-age pensions, for those who are unable to work on account of sickness, or to provide in any way for people not normal in their qualifications.

Rural development. There is nothing more important to this country or the world than the development of agriculture and everything relating to rural life, to induce people to go from the cities to the country. We have been attempting it in a haphazard way in various directions, and yet this subject has not been given the slightest consideration by Congress. The Secretary of the Interior, to be sure, has suggested a scheme to put returned soldiers and perhaps others on land now controlled by the Government, and yet all that land, so far as I am informed, must either be irrigated, or drained, or have some other action taken which will require years before it will be available for that purpose. I am entirely in sympathy with efforts to make available such lands. I am entirely in sympathy with any effort which will, along practical lines, get people from the cities back into the country. And yet we have not made any investigation whatever relating to that general subject since the war came on. That has been done by Great Britain with great thoroughness.

Problems of finance. Does anyone think the financing of this country is going to be an easy problem during the next few years, I do not care how patriotic we are? When we get the stories of these young fellows who are coming back from the other side, as every Senator does every day in the Marble Room, of the conditions which they think are unsatisfactory, we know that men are dissatisfied pretty nearly everywhere, and yet we have got to call on the people of this country to provide a $6,000,000,000 loan within the next two months. We do not yet know anything about that loan. We have taken no steps to provide for the retirement of this great indebtedness which we are steadily increasing; we have taken no concerted step to provide for the future in a financial way; and yet Great Britain has done that as completely as a country could do it without knowing just the exact amount of indebtedness it would have at the end of the war.

When I speak of Great Britain, I refer particularly to that nation, but it is not necessary for me to again add that other countries have been doing practically the same thing. I do not exhibit these reports with any intent of reading them or with any intent of doing other than bringing to the attention of the Senate the volume of matter that has been considered in connection with these subjects. Here [exhibiting] is a final report of the royal commission on the natural resources, trade, and legislation of certain portions of His Majesty's Kingdom. It is a report that takes into consideration every question of raw material, manufacturing capacity, and every other capacity of the colonies of Great Britain. There are 196 pages of it, going into these subjects in the greatest detail. Here [exhibiting] are reports of departmental committees. There [exhibiting] is a report on medical problems relating to the subject of aviation alone. Of course we know that there must necessarily be some new problems relating to the health conditions of men who are going to follow the occupation of aviation; and here we see that Great Britain has already given that subject thorough study.

Here [exhibiting] are some reports on national expenditures. There have been some seven or eight of them made. They are the most complete financial reports that I have seen issued by any country. Committees have been working on those for more than two years.

Here [exhibiting] is a report on forestry, which is as important a subject in Great Britain as it is in the United States. There are 105 pages of that report. It goes in great detail into the subject of reforestation and the question of the different kinds of wood and advocates the use of lands not available for other uses for forestry purposes. They have already planned to employ in forestation a considerable part of those who might otherwise be unemployed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts does not quote any legislative action of Great Britain, but he merely quotes reports. Our libraries are full of official reports, and every department of our Government has been making studies on these and similar questions during the last year. It seems to me that the citations which the Senator gives, referring to those reports showing activity in Great Britain, might very easily be matched by calling upon our Secretary of the Interior, our Secretary of Commerce, and our other departments of the Government, which we know have been engaged in these matters. The Senator would find similar reports and similar information gathered for us by those departments.

Mr. WEEKS. They would not be similar reports nor would similar information be gathered in this country, but I will not camouflage my reply with that statement. Here [exhibiting] is a complete statement of the legislation that has been enacted. I do not want to encumber the RECORD with it, but Great Britain has legislated on practically every one of these subjects, where legislation is desirable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will put into the RECORD at least what amount of legislation has been actually enacted, but I want to call the Senator's attention to another great distinction between the United States and Great Britain.

Great Britain had probably 15 per cent of her population in the Army and had them in the Army for three or four years. We had about 4 per cent—less than 4 per cent—of our men in the Army; we only had them in for a few months, and had only half of them on the other side. The industrial system of Great Britain was torn to pieces and has got to be reorganized, while our industrial system has hardly been touched. Great Britain to-day is full of men who are out of work; but I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, so far as my knowledge is concerned, most of the States of the Union now lack men rather than work. It may be that in Massachusetts and Connecticut, where the munition factories were concentrated, there is a percentage of nonemployment, but in the main throughout the United States, in the South and in the central West, the great problem is to find men for the work and not to find work for the men. So we have not the task that the countries of the Old World have, and we need not annoy ourselves so much about the problem.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator depreciate the important tasks we have in this country, notwithstanding they may not be as great as those in Europe?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that they are enormously exaggerated, and I think that such talks as the Senator from Massachusetts is now making tend to give the impression to the country that evils exist which do not exist. I have in my hand here a quotation from the Saturday Evening Post which expresses my idea on the subject, and, if the Senator does not object, I should like to read a few lines of it.

Mr. WEEKS. I have no objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is as follows:

A PLAGUE OF PANACEAS.

A new craze is sweeping over the country as silly, as pestilential as the dancing madness that seized the world just before the war. Everybody wants to reform everybody else and to settle everything that is wrong with anything. Our mails are choked with passionate letters, our wastebaskets are overflowing with "thoughtful" pamphlets—all touting new panaceas.

Everything from pap to dynamite is being recommended for what ails the world and the other fellow. Every method of relieving him of his pocketbook—for that is always the seat of the other fellow's disease—is being advocated. Some favor chloroforming him with taxes as an easy cure; others treating him with a piece of lead pipe as being quicker and even more merciful. Some pear-headed professors and members of the allied trades of mental shut-ins are working in shifts turning out their celebrated socialistic soothing sirup, guaranteed to cure financial corpulence and the black curse of that bourgeois home life. Bright young men who make a living shaking up bright young thoughts in bright young papers are offering their snappy-tasting Bolshevik sarsaparilla for those dull world aches. One group of ladies is brewing over bonfires a cure-all for everything, while another group denies that there is any efficacy in their medicine and wants to cheer up the plain old problems by running them with baby-blue ribbon.

There is a whole drug store—in fact, a whole chain of drug stores—filled with remedies for everybody and everything. If you don't like our sugar-coated socialistic pills, try this bottle of Russian bolshevism, it will bring tears to your eyes; or Prof. Thesis's socialistic pap, compounded for weaker stomachs.

This is the greatest era of pap, piffle, and poison that the world has ever seen. The old family doctor hasn't a chance; nobody but a quack can prescribe nowadays. But sensible people learned long ago that there is no health in the patent-medicine bottle; no way to a sound body except through sane living, simple exercise, and hard work. Throw the bottles out of the window—it won't hurt if you throw out a few of the quacks with them—and let's all go back to work.

Mr. President, I am not laying all those things at the door of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I think we in the Senate ought not to give encouragement to this pessimistic tone, to this paternalistic idea, that we in Congress have got to set the wheels in motion in the United States, when all we have got to do is to let things alone and let nature take its course. We have a great, rich, powerful country, filled with industrious and intelligent people and unlimited resources; we have a third of the gold of the world; we are the great creditor nation of the world; and have become so as a result of the war. All we have got to do is to go to work. The amount of legislation that is necessary to set the wheels of industry in motion is insignificant. Compared with the ills of the Old World ours are nothing at all, and I do not approve of the idea of lecturing everybody all the time because Congress does not do something.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, or possibly the Senator from Nebraska will feel called upon to answer.

If these matters are of so slight importance, and if everything is so exactly right, I should like to know why it is proposed to institute in the league of nations a bureau for the purpose of taking measures to settle or compose the labor problems of the world, including our own? The Senator from Nebraska is, I judge from the newspapers, a very ardent advocate of the proposed league of nations. If we are to be quiescent in the matter, why should not the league of nations be quiescent also?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I judge by the comment that has just been made by the Senator from Nebraska, if that problem were put up to him, he would lean back and yawn, and say, "Do nothing; it will take care of itself"; but if he wishes the floor to say what he would do, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. President, I will take great pleasure, as soon as I can compile the legislation which has been passed by Great Britain relating to the subject, in presenting it to the Senate. I have no desire to disturb anyone; I have no desire to deny that there is some reason in the flippant newspaper article the Senator from Nebraska has read. It is true that almost everybody seems to be disturbed, and a great many people who have had very little experience are proposing antidotes for every imaginable disease they think exists in the body politic; and yet we know perfectly well that we are never going back to the conditions of the past; that we have got to adjust ourselves to new conditions; and we do so by doing nothing, by letting everything drift, by gradually finding large numbers of people out of employment.

In this connection I wish to suggest that if the Senator from Nebraska wishes any confirmation of the statement that there are people out of employment, let him read the speeches of the Secretary of Labor or the secretary of the American Federation of Labor, or anyone else who has any statistics on that subject. Reports are being received from 150 industrial centers every week, and every week there is a large increase in the number of unemployed. I do not know whether or not there is need for labor in some village in Nebraska, but I can say that practically every industrial center in the United States has a surplus of labor, and some of the centers have a very large surplus of labor. One corporation I know of that was manufacturing for the war has turned adrift more than 20,000 men, or possibly women. There is a great surplus of labor in this country, and I can not adopt or subscribe to the policy suggested by the Senator that we should sit by and do nothing. I do not think that anything will be done until a Republican Congress is in session. Then I believe these problems will be taken up and considered; but by that time the procession is going to have passed us; the nations that do things systematically, based on scientific plans, are going to be so far ahead of us in relation to reconstruction and the trade developed as a result of the war that we will not even be in the running if we are not careful.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield the floor to the Senator from Mississippi if he desires.

Mr. WEEKS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD in connection with my remarks an editorial from the Philadelphia North American.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

WE ARE UNREADY FOR PEACE, TOO.

Measured by old standards, America's contribution to the war already has been enormous. Yet when our relative resources and economic capacity are taken into account and our effort is compared with that put forth by Great Britain and France, computation shows that we are making about a 30 per cent war. Nearly four years after the ordeal of democratic civilization began and 15 months after Germany started open warfare against us our undertakings represent not more than one-third of our capabilities.

Our national craft drifted into the war stern foremost, for we were unprepared materially and spiritually, and for a year it was buffeted about by wind and current until the gusts of threatened disaster swung it on a straight course.

The Government at last has made war its supreme business; all its thought and energy henceforth are to be devoted to that task. If the allies can hold out through the summer, substantial American aid will reach them then, and in greater volume next year; but this Nation's maximum strength will not be in the field until 1920, the sixth year.

By that time all our economic and human resources will be mobilized for and concentrated upon one thing—war—as they should be and must be. But while it is required that we shall enlist all our energies in armed defense of the world's liberties and our own, there is another task just as imperative, neglect of which will be as perilous as neglect of war. And that is the achieving of preparedness for peace.

It might be argued that a nation is justified in organizing its affairs and its life without taking into account the possibility of war, but it is axiomatic that when it organizes for war it defies reason and challenges fate if it does not take into account the absolute certainty of eventual peace. If America's giant strength is made effective in time, a lasting world peace will result. If our efforts are so belated that an indecisive settlement is forced, there will be peace just the same, even though it be temporary and insecure. In any event peace is inevitable.

Its problems will be new, vast, and compellingly urgent. Yet the Government exhibits no interest in them, while eminent leaders of the opposition sagely advise that everything will be made all right by passage of a "strong" tariff bill.

The most obvious lesson of the conflict, to begin with, is that when it terminates Europe will no longer be "3,000 miles away," as Secretary Baker lightly said. In commercial and political relationships our supposed isolation will be as mythical as our security from military aggression has proved to be.

We shall face a changed world; nothing will be, can be, quite the same as before. For example, the magnitude of the war, involving not only great nations, but groups of nations, in world-girdling alliances, has created new standards of measurement to govern the operation of industrial, commercial, and financial enterprises. Capitalizations which four years ago seemed colossal will be dwarfed by those of undertakings which will have behind them the power of mighty governments.

Already the term "billions" is taking the place in the language of commerce and finance which the term "millions" occupied a few years ago. So stupendous has been the increase in the size and scope of industrial projects that it seems as if only the great "trusts" of this country, once feared as a menace to our institutions and stability, will be powerful enough to make headway in the remorseless struggle for world trade. It is clear, at least, that it will need the establishment of a wise, strong, and comprehensive governmental policy to save the smaller units of commercial and industrial enterprise from being overwhelmed.

Our elaborate system of credits, laboriously built up during a century of development and unparalleled expansion, has been overturned in a few months. Not the banks, but the Government—necessarily so, in the great emergency of the war—now wields this power and dictates who shall and shall not be permitted to use the credit resources. When peace is restored the transition from the present to the old system will not be automatic and it can not be speedy; indeed, it may not be possible to restore more than a semblance of prewar conditions.

A Government with vision must be prepared when that time comes to vote, if necessary, credits as vast for the promotion of the enterprises of peace as have been voted for carrying on the business of war. For unless such projects are financed upon a scale approaching that attained in the supporting of war activities, this Nation's industrial and commercial projects can not maintain themselves against like forces in other countries with the backing of their governments.

The Federal power will never entirely relinquish that control of many public utilities which the exigencies of war have compelled it to assume; and a broad, effective policy must be framed that will insure improved service to the public, together with justice to the investor.

Any pronounced business depression or condition approaching panic following the war would fatally compromise the Nation's future, and averting such a peril presents a vast and complex problem. Wages, which now admittedly are at an artificially high level, must not be permitted to slump suddenly, and the necessary readjustment must be controlled so that it shall harmonize with a recession in the cost of living. Employment at good wages must be made plentiful, not only for the workers at home, but for the millions who will return from Europe to resume their places in the economic life of the country. For it is obvious that only by increased efficiency and intensified production can the Nation carry the gigantic burden of war debts.

The controversy between capital and labor as to just division of the rewards of production will be more acute then than ever before, and for equitable settlement of its manifold issues there must be established an effectual governmental policy. Multiplied productivity will be so vital a factor in re-creating stability that the promotion of it will be as much a function of the Government as is the prosecution of the war to-day.

A firm, far-seeing national policy must be evolved which will insure our new position as one of the foremost maritime nations of the world. We shall possess the greatest merchant marine afloat. But if this asset is to be permanent there must be governmental assistance to meet like expedients of other nations and preserve for those engaged in the industry the American standard of living.

A vital, if not the most important, problem of preparedness for peace will be the protection and stimulation of agricultural production. The whole world has had a convincing demonstration that food is the fundamental element in national defense, in the winning of a war; no less, assuredly, will it control the destinies of peoples in the future of peace. Then, as now, intensive industrial development will tend steadily to increase the disparity in numbers between the producers of food and its consumers, and the problem of sustaining the population will be of continuing difficulty and urgency.

We have merely sketched in the vaguest outline some of the questions which already cast their shadows across our path, but we have suggested enough to show how closely they concern our economic and national existence. And to these matters all nations are addressing themselves—except the United States. It is needless to speak of Germany, for hers is a war of money greed as well as political brigandage, and she laid her plans of commercial aggression simultaneously with her plans for military conquest; before a shot was fired she had charted her business and financial course for after the war, and with every change in the map has systematically adapted her trade program so as to be ready to exact the last possible advantage in the future contest. But Great Britain has been well-nigh as alert and efficient in strengthening the foundations of her maritime and commercial structure for the coming test. Trained experts in every line of production and distribution are ceaselessly employed in drafting plans and policies which will be ready to be put into operation when the war ceases. France, too, despite the terrible strain upon her powers, is intensively preparing for the struggle of peace.

Only in America is this great and pressing enterprise neglected, if not ignored. We have failed to discern in Washington an indication that any organized attention is being given to problems that require foresight and unremitting study and forceful action. This is a subject which does not arouse the statesmanlike genius of Senators JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS and Ollie James, the eminent spokesmen for the administration; nor of the southern committee chairmen and other leaders whose interest in "peace" helped to delay our preparations for war. We find in the extended biography of Col. House, which is now appearing, no hint that his marvelous faculties of divination and prophecy have been brought to bear upon the matter.

Perhaps there is some excuse for the indifference of the administration forces to the problems of peace, because they are just becoming genuinely preoccupied with the necessities of war. But just as barren is the record of the Republican group.

On the widest and bloodiest battle field in human history mighty military and spiritual forces are contending for mastery, and the result will determine the fate of generations unborn. It would be impossible to overestimate the gravity of the issue, the peril which failure would bring to this country, its political and material interests. Yet the menace there is hardly greater than that which lies in the fact that while the other nations are perfecting preparedness for the future, we remain unready and inert.

America drifted into the war stern foremost, and only through the efforts of others has had time to fit herself for its stern demands. But if she drifts stern foremost into peace, without chart or compass to guide, nothing can save her from the rocks of disaster.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not quarrel with the labored laudation of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] of the work of the British House of Commons. I have long since entertained the view that the Government of Great Britain, the Government of Canada, the Government of Australia, and the Government of New Zealand were very much more democratic than our own, and that the Government of each of those countries responds very much more quickly and very much more fully to popular impulse than our own does. Nor shall I quarrel with the Senator from Massachusetts about the deficiencies of the American Government. We tried to establish over here the best government in the world. I think most of us with much sense now confess that we did not succeed perfectly, but it is a pretty good Government after all, and it does not deserve quite the excoriation which the Senator from Massachusetts has given it to-day; nor does it arouse the thought in any fair mind that it can not be functioned unless the Republican Party is in power. They were in power for the better part of the last half century without causing the laudation of sensible people for either efficiency or sincerity of purpose.

I have heard a great deal of talk on the floor of the Senate about this or that or the other executive department "not functioning." I find that the Senate comes a great deal nearer not functioning than any executive department connected with the Government. I find that it chiefly does not function because of what has just been illustrated. Here is a long debate by two Senators—upon what? A proposition of absolute infantilage, infantile nonsense—to create six new committees to take over the subjects matter of which some committee or another of the Senate now has jurisdiction. I defy the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to mention a subject matter contained in this resolution of which some existing standing committee has not jurisdiction. If the existing committees selected by this body in the usual way have, as Senators say, proven complete failures, what hope is there that six new committees selected in the same way and by the same party machinery will find a way out?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes, Mr. President; but the Senator from Mississippi knows perfectly well that Senators are burdened to the limit by their legislative duties, especially under the conditions that exist in a short session of Congress. Furthermore, it is not proposed necessarily that the members of these committees or commissions shall all be Members of Congress; it is proposed to draw in the technical judgment of the country and use that in preparing the information that is deemed necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate unduly, but the resolution in part reads:

> That there are hereby created six committees, to be known as the Joint Congressional Committees on Reconstruction. Each of said committees shall be composed of five Senators and five Representatives in Congress. The members of said committees shall be selected as follows: The Senators in the manner provided in the rules of the Senate for the selection of the standing committees of the Senate and the Representatives in the manner provided in the rules of the House for the selection of the standing committees of the House.

That is the authoritative denial and answer to the Senator's assertion.

The Senators members of these six proposed new committees would still be Senators and still be "burdened to the limit by their legislative duties," and this would still remain a "short session."

The Senator says Great Britain has done a whole lot of work and we have not done anything. In that statement the Senator is absolutely mistaken. If he means by "we" merely the Government and not anybody else, we perhaps have not done all that we ought to have done; but these United States, thank God, have not reached the condition yet where business and labor and capital depend entirely or even mainly upon Senators and Representatives. The people of the United States have been reorganizing themselves for peace, and in a very rapid manner and in a very efficient manner. I am tired of hearing of the "inefficiency" of the American Government and of the American people. I tell the Senator from Massachusetts right now, that it is the most efficient Government, the most efficient business, and the most efficient people upon the surface of this globe, Germans not excepted, and we have proved it. One of the most precious heritages of the American people is the fact that they have never acquired the habit of looking altogether to the Government for organization or reorganization or anything else necessary to their prosperity. Indeed, during this war, business men from steel magnates to farmers have helped the Government more than the Government has helped business. If this Government had been forced to depend for its awakening and organization for war purposes—naval, military, and industrial—upon the Senate it would have presented to the world a pitiable aspect.

But even in so far as the Government is concerned, the Government has functioned, and in a very important—even remarkable—manner.

The Senator had a great deal to say about British vocational education. We have vocational education legislation. He had a great deal to say about finances. We have a farm-credit system and a reserve-bank system; none better in the world. The Senator had a great deal to say about restoring crippled soldiers. We are restoring them every day under a magnificent medical system, proven superior upon the fields of France and Flanders to any other system that offered itself there, whether French, Belgian, or British. There is no justification for this pessimism and there is no justification for the idea that this Republic is going to the bowwows, whether from Bolshevism or from capitalism or from anything else. It has common sense. Its sovereignty is based in the people, and the people have common conscience and common sense, and they are going to take care of their country. The only mistake about New England, and the Senator from Massachusetts as one part of it, is that from the beginning of this Government down to now they have had a sort of an idea that the Government ought to take care of the people. The balance of us have had the idea that the people were capable of taking care of the Government, and that the people were, more than that, capable of taking care of themselves to the fullest extent, provided the Government would give them fair play and equal opportunity. That is all that is required.

Mr. President, the Senator seems to be ignorant of the difference between the modus operandi in the House of Commons and in the Senate and in the House of Representatives of the United States. We attend to nearly all of our business through standing committees. The House of Commons attends to its most important business through special committees, appointed for the express purpose of taking care of particular problems. The Senator, with all his education and his information, seems to have been ignorant of that fact. He goes on here to cite committee after committee appointed by the House of Commons to deal with this particular subject and that particular subject. That is what the House of Commons always has done. We have left certain standing committees, vested with certain jurisdictions, to take care of all questions, generally described, and with no difficulty about finding out which committee is charged with jurisdiction.

The Senator referred to several things here that would go to the Military Affairs Committee, several that would go to the Interstate Commerce Committee, several that would go to the Commerce Committee—canals and waterways, and linking them up with one another and the railroads, and all that. "Cooperation permitted to increase efficiency, reduce cost, and enable the country to successfully meet foreign competition," and so on, are mentioned in this resolution. We have already passed the Webb law for that very last purpose. It is not true that Congress has done nothing.

The Senator speaks of the British Government undertaking to control prices. That has been settled with us by an act of Congress, and the Government has been controlling them to a certain extent—as far as Congress thought was right.

The Senator speaks of "Government loans to private enterprises." The Finance Corporation has been not quite attending to that, but it has been saying when private enterprises should be permitted to float their bonds, at any rate, and has been guiding the course of capitalization.

The Senator speaks of British Government "supervision of capital issues." That comes under the same heading.

I could read this whole business, run through it, and show that every single subject matter mentioned in the concurrent resolution to be dealt with by these unnecessary six committees has either been dealt with by some commission of this Government or is subject to be dealt with by some standing committee of the Senate and some standing committee of the House.

What is this infantile proposition? It is just simply to create six more committees in the Senate, with the laudable purpose upon the part of various Senators, of course, to get upon them, and to take over to those six committees entire jurisdiction of all the business of the existing standing committees of this body, because if you will read this concurrent resolution through you will find that there is not a subject matter of legislation that is neglected, except perhaps the jurisdiction that goes to the Naval Affairs Committee. That is about all that is not transferred to one or the other of these six leading committees that have been evolved from the minds of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator says that he would like to know "why the league of peace wants to deal with labor problems" if we can not deal with them here. I will tell you why, and you know why without my telling you. It is not that American labor wants to do it, but it is that European labor wants to do it, in order to bring about some equalization of compensation for labor throughout the world. Our labor does not need it. We have a higher rate of compensation for labor than any other nation on the earth, and we had it even prior to the time when this country became "the United States of America." We had it when we were separate colonies. We had it owing to the fact that we had less population and more work than anybody else. We have it yet; but it is necessary and it is right that a league of nations should deal with certain labor problems, especially in connection with the merchant marine, so as to try to drag up to the level of American compensation and treatment the sailors of the whole world, if we can, and give nobody any advantage of the others. So long as our merchant marine is forced to pay more for labor than the others pay, we can not support a merchant marine, no matter how cheaply we build it, because we can not operate as cheaply. There are a dozen other labor problems that might well be considered by a league of nations, and in a measure internationalized, provided only that we do not lower our own labor standard of living, but rather raise that of others.

The Senator asks me what definite plans we have made anywhere—"what definite plans that can not be revised," to use his language. Why, thank God, we are not asses enough to make any definite plans now that can not be revised in the future, if they ought to be revised; and if we have any sense we know they will have to be revised. Why, even when we formed the Constitution of this country we left ourselves free to revise it. My only quarrel is that we made the method of revising it a little too hard. Anybody who thinks that he can arrive at an ultimate solution of any problem does not know what human nature is. He takes no note of time, nor of evolution, nor of revolution, nor of progress. I do not want, above all things, to fix my adoption to any definite rule not subject to revision which might be constructed by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa with myself even as a third member of the committee.

He tells us what Great Britain has done about "lands and forests." In the first place, she has no lands to spare; in the second place, she has no forestry except parks, and they have been largely destroyed; and, God knows, these men from the West can tell you that if the United States has made any mistake at all upon that subject, she has made it by going too far. We have included in forestry reservations a whole lot of land that the daughters and sons of the American Republic ought to be cultivating in private ownership right now.

Then the Senator tells us that Great Britain is "controlling her raw materials," and he seems to think that, therefore, we ought to be prohibiting the indiscriminate exportation of our raw materials. The Senator shakes his head. At any rate, he mentioned the fact that Great Britain was restricting the sale of her raw materials, and he said it in a critical mood. That far, I think, he will not shake his head at me. The difference between us and Great Britain is this, that the "tight little island" of itself has no raw materials, except coal and iron, and not enough of iron to export to any great extent, except in finished products; and here is a great country filled plumb full of raw materials—cane sugar, cotton, beet sugar, hides, copper, coal, zinc—oh, I can not mention them all, because I can not think of them upon my feet at one moment; but we have them all. In the business of reorganizing herself after this destructive war—and the Senator from Nebraska was exactly right in saying that Great Britain's work of reorganization is ten times more difficult than ours is—Great Britain must, to some extent, control the distribution of the raw materials of the British Empire, so that they shall come to British industries until British industries are reorganized on a peace basis and upon their feet. We do not need to do it, because we can give our industries all the raw materials they need and have plenty more to export, from cotton to wheat and from coal to copper. But in so far as it is necessary to conserve our raw materials in the ground, if the Senator thinks we have done nothing, he is mistaken again. In fact, if there is any criticism of us again we have done too much. There is oil in the ground and coal in the ground and gold and silver and lead in the ground in Alaska and in the United States that ought long ago to have been let loose for private enterprise, which we have kept under governmental control under the plea of conservation.

It comes with rather poor grace, I think, from a Republican to talk about Great Britain putting an embargo on the exportation of certain articles. What has your party amounted to, from Alexander Hamilton down to now, except a party of restriction of international commerce? You have preached it as a virtue. The Senator tells me there is all the difference in the world between a high protective tariff upon an article and en embargo. That depends upon how high the tariff is. If you put the tariff high enough to amount to an embargo, it is an embargo, whether you call it so or not; and when you were in power I have forgotten now how many rates you had that were over 100 per cent, and that amounted to absolute prohibition. There is no difference, except one of camouflage, between that and putting an embargo upon importation of the article. Luckily the Constitution prevented his party from treating any exports as they did treat so many imports.

I agree with the Senator that Great Britain is wrong in attempting to restrict international trade. I believe that she will hurt herself more than she will help herself by it, just as I believe that we have hurt ourselves more than we have helped ourselves by it; but it does not lie in the Senator's mouth to make that objection. If we have had a right—and we have had the right as a matter of international law and a matter of international ethics—to control our own domestic affairs with whatever tariff we choose, then Great Britain has it, too, and the Senator must not forget that at two distinct periods of our history we resorted to nonintercourse and to embargo, and nobody in the world denied our international right to do it. A great many people said that we were stupid about it and that we were hurting ourselves more than we were hurting our enemies, and we were; and Great Britain is doing it now, and she will find it out.

If the Senator thinks that this little idle talk around here in the Senate led Great Britain to modify her embargo on boots and shoes, he is awfully mistaken. I doubt whether David Lloyd George and the British cabinet ever heard of these senatorial debates here upon boots and shoes. Of course, I realize where the cloven hoof comes in as far as Massachusetts is concerned. Whenever you touch boots and shoes, you touch Lynn, and whenever you touch Lynn, you touch Massachusetts, and Massachusetts would mighty near rather secede than to have an embargo on any of her favorite productions. But I doubt if the British cabinet ever heard of what the Senator said or what the other Senators said upon that subject. As I read it, they found that they needed the boots and shoes and they concluded that they had better let enough of them come in, and they did let that amount come in.

Mr. President, Mr. Wilson is in Europe—I purposely called him Mister—as the Chief Magistrate of this country, attempting to the best of his ability to bring about a treaty of peace which will be just and comparatively permanent, attempting to the best of his ability to create a league of nations which shall have some influence, at any rate, in preventing war.

So far as I can discover, over this entire world there are only three sets of people who are trying to throw cold water on him. One set are the Bolshevists here and abroad, to which neither of the Senators nor any Senator of this body belongs nor with which any Senator of this body has any sympathy. The next set are those infinitely assinine female bonfire burners in Lafayette Square. The next set are a few Senators and a few Representatives in the Congress of the United States taking every opportunity to stick a dagger under his fifth rib in the name of something else, while they profess to have no antagonism either to him or to his mission.

What is his mission? Oh, if he just could carry it out, if he just were left unhampered and uncrippled! You say it is idealism. It is. Some of you say it is visionary. It is not. Idealism in its highest form is the most practical thing in this world. It is not visionary. It is very far from it.

I have read these articles of this league of nations. My only quarrel with them is that they do not go far enough. I would not go quite so far as ex-President Taft advises, but I would go further than these articles go.

You tell me you have to make certain sacrifices of national do-as-you-please-ism if you do go that far. Of course you have. When you blockade and embargo the recalcitrant and lawless, covenant-breaking nations, if you shall be called upon to do it, you hurt an old democratic principle, because just in proportion as you punish them by the denial of your trade you punish yourselves by the denial of theirs. But there is a difference. You will be punished by the denial of only one nation's trade, and the lawless nation would be punished by the denial of the trade of all 14 members of the league of nations, which would be a different proposition.

There he is over there doing his best work as far as he can, and there is nothing more tragic, to my mind, than that he shall be there needing above all things the sympathy of his own people, and yearning that his own hands should be upheld while he is engaged in trying to consummate the highest form of international idealism for the benefit of humanity and of the world, while here you have been striking him in the fifth rib with a dagger every time, here and there, under some pretense or another.

What good were you doing to the world, what good were you doing Europe, what good were you doing humanity by it? He went over there trying to do his work. He went over to governments of parliamentary administration where a vote against the administration meant a retirement and the deprivation of power, and they could hardly understand why it did not mean that in the United States, too; he went handicapped and crippled by the result of the last election. I am not blaming anybody. The American people held the election. They had a right to hold it, and they had a right to vote as they chose. But that was the situation, and yet he has met the situation dauntlessly and has wrought out of it something that will be the beginning of a great thing.

I have never insisted upon the league of nations because I was not competent to define the league of nations until our allies had had their equal say. But I have insisted upon a league of nations, and as I said here upon the floor of the Senate once before, I would rather it would begin with 14; but if it could not begin with 14, I would rather it would begin with the 7 allies; and if it could not begin with the 7 allies, then I would rather it should begin with France, Great Britain, and the United States; and if I could not have it begin in that way, I would have it begin with the English-speaking, self-governing Commonwealths of the British Empire and the English-speaking, self-governing States in these United States rather than not to begin at all. After the beginning it will evolve itself just as this American Union evolved itself from the old New England confederacy and from the commercial agreement between Virginia and Maryland.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Mississippi mean to imply that the resolution of which he has been speaking is brought forward as a criticism of the President or as an attack upon his mission in Europe?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I do not think it has anything to do with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to be assured of that, because——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no. I am afraid I got about as far off of your resolution as your resolution got off of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not find it in my heart to criticize the Senator from Mississippi for getting a long ways from the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not think you do, but I am not further from your resolution than your resolution is from the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not take the Senator from Mississippi to account. I simply wish to be understood that this resolution could not possibly be construed into an attack upon the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think so, but I think some of the observations made about it were.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not any observations that fell from my lips——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not one.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because I am just as much in favor of a league of nations——

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I am.

Mr. CUMMINS. As the Senator from Mississippi can possibly be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have known that for a good while, and the Senator from Iowa knows that I know it.

I started to introduce a resolution this morning to suspend the Senator from Massachusetts from membership in this body for three weeks upon the ground that he really did talk about the river and harbor bill, the question before the Senate, for 10 minutes, about the intracoastal canal back of Cape Cod and Nantucket. It was a violation of the recent customs of the Senate to have talked about the matter under consideration. The ordinary course for a Senator is to start to discuss the cosmogany of the world and to wind up with a little disquisition upon the habits of the flea.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish the Senator from Mississippi to know that, so far as my remarks were concerned, they were directed pointedly to the question before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They were not. They were directed pointedly to your resolution, which was not before the Senate. The river and harbor bill was before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi is as ill informed with regard to that matter as he thought the Senator from Massachusetts was with regard to the proceedings in the House of Commons. I made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this resolution, and I directed my observations to that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. They had nothing to do with the river and harbor bill, and that question was not before the Senate when I made my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The river and harbor bill was before the Senate and the Senator moved this resolution to take its place, and I reckon he knew that the resolution was not going to take its place.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, I had the highest hope that I would succeed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You had?

Mr. CUMMINS. And I came near to doing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is a good deal like that gentleman who bought a bottle of hair restorer from a bald-headed barber. His faith was ill placed. I thought, of course, he merely wanted an opportunity to ventilate the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. I had real hopes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought he wanted to express his opinion upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had no idea he had any expectation that he would displace the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had great hope that the Senate would for a moment proceed to the consideration of this resolution. I knew that there were a good many Senators who believed it ought to be considered, and I had the profoundest hope, and indeed a great belief, that I would find a sufficient number of Senators on the other side of the Chamber who believe likewise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I apologize to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I accept the apology.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I apologize, and I submit that the definition of St. Paul about faith has been once more justified.

Mr. CUMMINS. Surely, whenever we deal with matters under these circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," but I really did not believe the Senator ever expected the resolution to pass.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Mississippi remember the vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Iowa tells me he did, that is sufficient.

Mr. CUMMINS. The motion was defeated by only a very few votes. It would have required only a moment of reflection to have caused three or four of my Democratic friends to have voted for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe it is true that there were not very many votes one way or the other in the majority, but the votes cast for your resolution, as you must know, were chiefly votes of those who wanted to shelve the river and harbor appropriation bill independently of your resolution. They were not for your resolution; they were against the river and harbor bill.

Mr. President, I did have something else I wanted to say, but owing to this dissertation upon the strenuous and unexpected qualities of faith I believe I have about forgotten what it was, and consequently I will stop now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the embargo by Great Britain, except to say that I am satisfied Great Britain will look after her own interests, and I rather admire her for doing it. If she does not look after her own interests, nobody else will. All I regret is that we do not look after our interests a little more closely. I hope that we shall.

Regarding the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, I am just going to call attention to the resolution which I introduced covering this same matter, and the difference between my resolution and the one that is reported from the committee. I wish to call attention to the fact also that the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, while it has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, is reported, I think, without any recommendation whatever. It simply is sent to the Senate and put on the calendar apparently as an act of courtesy on the part of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I explain that to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall be very glad to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I happen to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I found after a great deal of experience that I could only get it out of the committee in that way. Otherwise it would have been buried in the committee and we would have had no opportunity whatever to consider it. It was rather an unsatisfactory way to have it come out, but it either had to come out in that way or not at all.

Mr. JONES of Washingon. It is better to come out that way than not to come out at all; that is, there is some chance of getting it considered or getting action upon it when you get it on the calendar. I know that by experience. I had some connection with a measure that was before a committee which was equally divided upon it. I finally persuaded the committee to report it out without recommendation, and now it is a law. It probably would not have been a law if I had not gotten it on the calendar in that way. So I suppose that was about the situation with reference to this resolution; the committee would not report it favorably, but, out of consideration for the Senator from Iowa, they reported it out, so that it would get on the calendar and he would have an opportunity to try to bring it before the Senate anyhow.

Mr. President, with the purposes of this resolution I am in hearty accord. Something ought to have been done a long time ago looking toward preparing to meet the problems that were bound to come to us when the war closed. With a view to that preparation on the 4th day of January, 1918, over a year ago, I introduced a joint resolution in the Senate. My resolution was framed upon entirely different lines from those of the Senator from Iowa. His resolution, as the Senate knows, provides for joint committees between the House and Senate composed of Members of the House and Senate. My resolution provides for a commission to be appointed by the President of the United States. I had no hesitation about making a provision of that kind. I had no lack of confidence in the President doing what he thought would be the right thing in the selection of that commission. I did not provide for a committee of Congress or of the Senate largely for the reason that I did not believe we could expect very much from such a committee.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] suggested awhile ago the difficulty of getting committee meetings. That has been true all during this Congress. It has not been confined to the period of the war, but during the time our Democratic friends have been in control of the Senate it has been very difficult to get meetings of the committees and to get a quorum present, especially a quorum of the majority. Many of our bills must be reported by polling the committees and with no consideration at all.

Furthermore, whatever is done along the line of the objects of the two resolutions should be done promptly and should be done thoroughly. Every Senator is busy with matters from his State, from his constituents, and in connection with other legislative matters in which the people of the country are interested. They do not have the time to make the investigation, in my judgment, that ought to be made in order to determine what should be done to meet these problems. They would not have the time to study the problems and study the solution of them and propose them to Congress. They would not attend the meetings. This and that would interfere and the result would be that two or three would attend, a great mass of testimony would be taken, long essays would be read, and nothing would be accomplished.

It seemed to me if we would have a commission composed of men with practical experience in business affairs and who would devote their entire time and all their energy and ability to studying these problems, we were very likely to get some results. So, Mr. President, on the 4th day of January, 1918, I introduced a joint resolution that authorizes and directs the President of the United States to appoint a commission composed of 27 individuals, and I wish to call attention to the way I provided in the resolution that the commission should be composed.

The 27 members were to serve for a period of six months, but the term of service could be extended another six months if the President thought it advisable and necessary to have it done. What I hoped to get was as early a report as possible from such a commission. I hoped that the commission would go right to work, and, as I said awhile ago, give all its time and all its energy to the study of these problems and report just as soon as possible.

I provided that three members of such a commission should be experienced representatives of the manufacturing industries of the country. I do not care anything about their politics. I did not care anything about where they should come from. I simply wanted them to represent certain lines of industry throughout the country. I wanted them to be men of experience in a practical way along the various lines of business activity, and that was the only restriction I imposed upon the President in the selection of the members.

I provided that three members should be experienced representatives of the commercial interests of the country, that three members should be experienced representatives of the agricultural interests of the country, and three should be experienced representatives of the transportation interests of the country. All these interests, of course, are involved in the problems of peace. They were all more or less disturbed or deranged by the necessities of war. Men experienced in them could better suggest remedies to meet any ills in these operations than anyone else.

Then I provided that three members thereof should be experienced representatives of the shipping, fishing, and other marine interests of the country; three members should be experienced representatives of the mining industry of the country; three members should be experienced representatives of the export and import business of the country; three members should be experienced representatives of the banking and financial interests of the country; and three members should be experienced representatives of labor.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that I have provided representation on behalf of all of the leading interests and industries of the country upon this commission. I believe we could have gotten results from it if the resolution had been passed a little over a year ago. We should have had by this time a report from it of value not only in the material and information gathered but in the recommendations made by such a commission.

Then I provided, of course, for stenographic work, for compensation, and so on.

That resolution went to the committee, but apparently no consideration was given to it; no action was taken upon it. A few months ago the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] introduced his resolution, and it was referred to a Republican conference. I was not able to attend that conference, and so I did not have an opportunity to call the attention of the conference to the resolution which I had introduced. Personally, however, I should much prefer a resolution along the lines I suggested to the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I believe we would get better results from it; I believe we would get quicker results from it and something more satisfactory to Congress; but I am willing to support any measure that gives hope of results. As I said, it ought to have been done a long time ago. I do not know whether much can be accomplished now. It takes time to work out these things. These problems are right on us now. If my resolution had been passed when introduced, we would be ready now to legislate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will.

Mr. KING. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, and other instrumentalities and agencies of the Government have made a very thorough investigation of the subjects—if not all, of most, at least, of the subjects—referred to in the resolution just read by the Senator. They have accumulated a vast amount of information. I know that surveys have been made of many of the lines of activity, statistics have been obtained, and a great deal of information which bears upon the industrial, economic, and, indeed, the entire social structure by these various organizations to which I have referred, and it is available now for the congressional committees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no doubt that they have gathered a good deal of information, but they have not gathered it with the particular purpose and object in view of giving it consideration at the time it was gathered and of applying it to the needs of the hour. They are not prepared to submit to Congress specific, concrete recommendations as to what will meet this situation or that situation. No doubt they obtained an abundance of information, and it could be brought up here, of course, and could be considered by committees; but, if we had had a commission like this, it would have gathered all this information; it would have gathered it with the very thought in mind of determining from it what would be necessary and what could be done to meet these various problems, and it would be ready with concrete recommendations to submit to Congress.

But these other bodies have apparently not done it. We have no recommendations from any executive branch of the Government with reference to any specific problem that we must meet or in reference to any specific concrete problem already worked out and how to solve it.

I am not going to discuss the general propositions which have been submitted and urged upon us and that ought to be worked out. There seem to be, as I noticed in the newspapers this morning, three or four distinct propositions which have been urged before various bodies of Congress by those representing the administration, and it has been urged that legislative action upon these propositions is imperatively necessary. One of them is the matter of the next liberty loan. The Secretary of the Treasury says that he ought to have certain legislation; that it should be passed at once, although the liberty loan is not coming on until April. He says that Congress will not be in session, and he needs to have a blanket delegation of power that he may meet particular situations when they arise a month or two from now. He says we do not know now what the conditions will be, and so he thinks we should turn the matter over to him and go home.

Mr. President, the matters referred to in the newspapers this morning are sufficient to warrant the calling of the next Congress in extraordinary session on the 5th day of March. It ought to be called. We ought to start the work upon these things, instead of delegating to administrative officers the power and the authority to do the things that are peculiarly legislative in their character. Congress ought to be called together to discharge its duties and its responsibilities. Congress ought to go to work upon the problems which the Secretary of the Interior says it is essential to solve soon; Congress ought to be called soon to work out and meet the problems that the Secretary of the Treasury says ought to be met and must be met; Congress ought to be ready to go to work upon the railroad and transportation problems that everybody concedes ought to be worked out soon.

Mr. President, in my judgment it will be a shirking of the responsibilities of government if Congress is not called in early session to work out and solve these problems that everybody concedes must be solved in a legislative way, or else blanket authority be given to administrative officers to solve them. I do not like to stay here in session myself; but, Mr. President, the responsibilities and duties which should be discharged by Congress are higher than the pleasure of Senators. These things, in my judgment, should come first. The President should not hesitate a moment about calling Congress together just as soon as possible after the 4th of March, in order that we may organize and go to work on these problems. We are ready to do it. We want to help him meet the Nation's needs. Does he want our help? He should welcome our aid and counsel. We are ready for real teamwork. We do not want to act as Republicans; I do not want to work on these matters in a partisan way; we ought to work on these problems as representatives of the people, as American patriots, trying to do what is best for the interests of the country and the industries of the country. Everybody recognizes that there are peculiar situations confronting us and that are likely to confront us. They are situations that can be met only by Congress, under the leadership of the administrative officers of the Government. Congress should be here, and I believe that Congress is ready to come here and act upon all these matters in a nonpartisan way, with the sole desire to do what is best for the interests of the country. I am speaking for no one but myself, but if the President will give us the opportunity we will show him that our partisanship will be subordinated to our patriotism, and we will give him our best effort and our best ability to serve our common country and promote its welfare.

WEARING OF UNIFORM BY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, during the course of the debate to-day the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] made charges against the Department of Justice, and particularly against the Attorney General, which, if true, would justify the conclusion which he reached and the very serious arraignment which he made of that department. I do not see the Senator from Michigan in the Chamber, and if he is about the Senate I should like to have him summoned in order that he may hear the statement I am about to make.

I have before me the record of the address made by the Senator from Michigan. On page 2 of the stenographer's notes of that address he said:

This morning I am informed that under the directions of the Attorney General soldiers returning from abroad are being arrested in the city of Detroit for wearing their uniforms one day after they have returned, and an appeal made to the War Department says the War Department has nothing to do with the matter.

Further along in his address the notes show that he said:

Oh, Mr. President, has it come to pass that a soldier who has honored his uniform by fighting the battles of his country can not wear that uniform home with him?

And, again, the notes show that he said:

He may wear his uniform under the law from the scene of his military activities to his home not exceeding the period of 90 days. The War Department holds that he has a right to wear his uniform 90 days even around home, and the Department of Justice are hunting down these soldiers and prosecuting them and placing them under arrest, I am informed, only yesterday in the city of Detroit.

Again, the notes of his address show that he said:

The War Department takes that view, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, but the Department of Justice takes a directly opposite view, and in the enforcement of the law the Department of Justice has a wider and more important function than the War Department. * * * I do not want to pursue the matter any further. I am humiliated and saddened to think that any department of the Government would exercise this technical or arbitrary power and deprive soldiers of the uniform.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to quote many other similar statements reported in the notes of the speech made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, the Senator correctly stated the law on the subject; and I ask leave, in connection with my remarks, to put in the RECORD section 125 of the act of June 3, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The section referred to is as follows:

Sec. 125. Protection of the uniform: It shall be unlawful for any person not an officer or enlisted man of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, to wear the duly prescribed uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or any distinctive part of such uniform, or a uniform any part of which is similar to a distinctive part of the duly prescribed uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall not be construed so as to prevent officers or enlisted men of the National Guard from wearing, in pursuance of law and regulations, the uniform lawfully prescribed to be worn by such officers or enlisted men of the National Guard; nor to prevent members of the organization known as the Boy Scouts of America, or the Naval Militia, or such other organizations as the Secretary of War may designate, from wearing their prescribed uniforms; nor to prevent persons who in time of war have served honorably as officers of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, and whose most recent service was terminated by an honorable discharge, muster out, or resignation, from wearing, upon occasions of ceremony, the uniform of the highest grade they have held by brevet or other commission in such Regular or Volunteer service; nor to prevent any person who has been honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, from wearing his uniform from the place of his discharge to his home, within three months after the date of such discharge; nor to prevent the members of military societies composed entirely of honorably discharged officers or enlisted men, or both, of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, from wearing, upon occasions of ceremony, the uniform duly prescribed by such societies to be worn by the members thereof; nor to prevent the instructors and members of the duly organized cadet corps of a State university, State college, or public high school offering a regular course in military instruction from wearing the uniform duly prescribed by the authorities of such university, college, or public high school for wear by the instructors and members of such cadet corps; nor to prevent the instructors and members of the duly organized cadet corps of any other institution of learning offering a regular course in military instruction, and at which an officer or enlisted man of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps is lawfully detailed for duty as instructor in military science and tactics, from wearing the uniform duly prescribed by the authorities of such institution of learning for wear by the instructors and members of such cadet corps; nor to prevent civilians attendant upon a course of military or naval instruction authorized and conducted by the military or naval authorities of the United States from wearing, while in attendance upon such course of instruction, the uniform authorized and prescribed by such military or naval authorities for wear during such course of instruction; nor to prevent any person from wearing the uniform of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in any playhouse or theater or in moving-picture films while actually engaged in representing therein a military or naval character not tending to bring discredit or reproach upon the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps: Provided further, That the uniforms worn by officers or enlisted men of the National Guard, or by the members of the military societies or the instructors and members of the cadet corps referred to in the preceding proviso shall include some distinctive mark or insignia to be prescribed by the Secretary of War to distinguish such uniforms from the uniforms of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps: And provided further, That the members of the military societies and the instructors and members of the cadet corps hereinbefore mentioned shall not wear the insignia of rank prescribed to be worn by officers of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or any insignia of rank similar thereto.

Any person who offends against the provisions of this section shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $300, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will be noted that among the exceptions forbidding the use of the United States military uniform by anyone other than officers or enlisted men is contained the following:

nor to prevent any person who has been honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, Regular or Volunteer, from wearing his uniform from the place of his discharge to his home within three months after the date of such discharge.

The War Department has construed that paragraph in one decision, and only one decision, I am informed by high authorities in that department. That decision is as follows:

An officer or enlisted man, under a reasonable construction of section 125 of the national defense act (39 Stat., 166, 217), should proceed from the place of his honorable discharge to his home with reasonable speed, and upon his arrival there his uniform should be discarded, as it is unlawful for him to wear it longer. In no event should he take more than three months, and he may not unduly protract his transit. (Ops. J. A. G. 421, Sept. 9, 1918.)

On January 25 the War Department issued a circular in connection with the right of discharged officers and men to wear their uniforms. That circular is signed by Peyton C. March, general, Chief of Staff. I ask that that also be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator read it, instead of having it inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I will read it. It is as follows:

Circular No. 43.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C.

WEARING OF UNIFORM BY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Present law authorizes a discharged officer or soldier to wear his uniform from the place of discharge to his home, within three months of the date of his discharge from the service. Thereafter the officer may wear his uniform only upon occasions of ceremony.

The enlisted man must return his uniform within four months of date of discharge; but can wear it only as stated above.

An act is now before Congress which, if passed, will authorize enlisted men to keep the uniform which they are permitted to wear home, and to wear that particular uniform only, provided some distinctive mark or insignia, to be issued by the War Department, shall be worn.

It will thus be clearly seen that neither under existing or proposed law will a discharged soldier be permitted to wear uniforms made by civilian or other tailors. They may legally wear only the particular uniform which they have been permitted to retain.

Commanding officers of camps, posts, and stations will give the widest publicity to this information, both among the soldiers of their commands and in the local press. No person will be permitted to solicit orders for or deliver uniforms to soldiers about to be discharged. Persons or concerns persisting in selling uniforms to such soldiers, after having been warned not to do so, will not be permitted to come on or do business on the reservation.

By order of the Secretary of War:

PEYTON C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

Official:

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to be sure whether the order says "three months from the time of discharge" or "three months after arriving at home." There seems to be a misunderstanding about that, and I should like the Senator to read that portion of the circular again, if he will.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can state it; my knowledge of it is accurate, I am sure. The law is—and the construction made by the department is to the same effect—that a uniform can only be worn 90 days from the date of discharge.

Mr. SMOOT. Whether the soldier is home or on the way from the place of discharge to his home?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is another limitation in the law which was passed for which I respectfully suggest to Senators neither the Department of Justice nor the War Department is directly responsible. That limitation is that the soldier may only wear his uniform while proceeding to his home from the place of discharge. I agree with the implied suggestion of the Senator from Michigan that such a statute ought to be construed liberally and that men in the attempt to conform to the statute ought to be given the benefit of every doubt.

An inquiry was instituted by some of us who felt that, if statements made by the Senator from Michigan are well founded, then conditions are utterly appalling. That investigation disclosed the real facts; and I very much regret that the Senator from Michigan is not present to hear my statement, for I believe that, if he were present, he would realize that he has done a gross injustice to a high officer of this Government, the Attorney General of the United States, and has also done a gross injustice to the Department of Justice.

The facts are, Mr. President, that there is only one case on record where a discharged soldier has been arrested in the district referred to by the Senator from Michigan, and I think that is probably the only case on record; in any event, it must be the case which he had in mind. The record shows that in that case two discharged soldiers, falsely representing themselves to be in the service of the United States and in the performance of their duty, while wearing the uniform of United States soldiers, were importing, in violation of the so-called Reed amendment, a large quantity of liquor into the State of Michigan. They resisted search and claimed that they were acting for and on behalf of their superior officers. They also claimed that the liquor was Government property. An investigation was instituted. That statement was found to be untrue, and they were indicted for unlawfully wearing the uniform of United States soldiers and for violating the liquor laws of the United States. If the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator thinks that the conduct of those soldiers while wearing the uniform of the United States is protected by the statute which we wrote, a statute designed to preserve the integrity of the uniform of United States soldiers, he is welcome to his conclusion; but any criticism that he might make of anyone for arresting and punishing those men would have no consideration with me.

The facts are that after these men were arrested they went into a court and pleaded guilty to violating the liquor laws, and guilty, too, of unlawfully wearing the uniform, which, under their own statement, they had disgraced.

I need not argue to Senators that it is the purpose of the law to protect the brave and glorious men who have worn and are wearing our uniform from the contumely and disgrace which these two soldiers, by pleas of "guilty," admitted they had brought to it.

Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Michigan to the effect that the Department of Justice was placing one construction on this law and the War Department a different one, and that a violent clash of authority had arisen, is, in my judgment, totally unfounded. This is the only case known, according to the verbal statement of officers in the War Department, where soldiers have been arrested for violating the statute directed against unlawfully wearing the uniform. The War Department does not contend that a man who is in the bootlegging business can shield himself by wearing a soldier's uniform. No lawyer will contend that the construction of the statute made by the Department of Justice and by the United States attorney for the district in which these arrests were made, is unfair, unreasonable, or unjust.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], while I was absent from the Chamber, made a statement concerning this subject which I have read in which I heartily concur. Both he and I took up the matter with the Department of Justice. I felt that if the Attorney General had ordered his agents throughout the United States, to arrest men the day after they have returned from fighting the battles of this country in France because they are wearing the uniform—if he is arresting them the day after they are discharged, before they have an opportunity to return to their homes—the severest action which the laws of this country will justify should be taken against him. I am not willing that a charge of this sort should be made politics of; neither is the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and neither I trust is any other Senator.

The Senator from Michigan said that it is the custom and practice, the ordinary procedure, of the Department of Justice to arrest men in Detroit for unlawfully wearing the uniform the day after they have returned from France and the day after they have been discharged. The facts developed are that these men were out of the Army; they were engaged in an unlawful business; they were seeking to carry on that business under the guise of being soldiers. Can the glory of the United States Army, can the name of the Senator from Michigan, or can the name of Michigan itself be advanced in the minds of honest men by unfounded statements like that made by the Senator from Michigan?

I will read this telegram bearing upon the subject:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Detroit, Mich., February 15, 1919.

JOHN LORD O'BRIAN,
Special Assistant to Attorney General,
Washington:

Re telephone conversation this date, there have been no arrests in this district for unlawfully wearing uniform after discharge except where used as a means of committing crime, and but one case of this character, where two discharged soldiers were unlawfully bringing several gallons whisky into Michigan in violation of Reed amendment and resisted search, falsely claiming to be in military service and on duty, and that baggage was property of superior officer and Government property and exempt from search by State officials; indicted for violation of Reed amendment and unlawful wearing of uniform; plead guilty to both charges; fined $150 on first and $50 on second charge; both paid. No other arrests in this district for unlawfully wearing uniform after discharge, and none authorized or contemplated. Any statement to contrary absolutely without foundation.

KINNANE, United States Attorney.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator might have stated that one of these men had been discharged from the Army for more than nine months; the other had been discharged from the service for more than two months and a half. Both of them had ceased wearing the uniform, had discarded it, and confessed that they put on their uniforms that morning to aid them in their unlawful efforts to convey liquor, in violation of law, from Ohio into the State of Michigan.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to state that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] went to his home on account of illness. He has been quite poorly of late. I feel perfectly safe in saying that if the Senator from Michigan had been fully advised of the conditions surrounding the case as presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I am quite sure he never would have even thought of calling it to the attention of the Senate. When the statement was made, I could not conceive of such a thing happening anywhere in the United States; and yet the Senator had directly by wire the statement made by a man in whom he had absolute confidence, and giving the details as he stated they were.

I will simply remark at this time that it only shows how people throughout the country will hear a thing, jump at a conclusion, and immediately take action, without due consideration.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committtee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida what his program is. Are we going ahead with the river and harbor bill to-night, or will the Senator move a recess at this time?

Mr. FLETCHER. I wanted to make a statement with reference to an item in the bill to which the Senator from Iowa had made some objection before taking a recess to-night. After that, I shall be willing to take a recess. It will take but a very few minutes.

Mr. KENYON. We are up to the Oklawaha River item now.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Oklawaha River—that is where we are in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I shall take up some time on that item.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida if it is his purpose to take a recess in the course of half an hour?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we shall be able to do so; yes.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the bill yield for a moment? I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. FRANCE. I was called out of the Chamber, and I did not have an opportunity to ask the Senator with reference to the appropriation of $9,000 on page 8 for dredging in the Baltimore district. I desire to inquire if the engineer considered that that sum would be sufficient to take care of all of the work contemplated and mentioned on page 7, including the Elk River?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state to the Senator that the engineer informed us that he could take care of the Elk River under that provision, and that the amount mentioned in the bill would be sufficient to maintain those projects during the year. There is an amount to the credit of the projects, and we added the amount of $9,000 there, as the Senator will see, which was considered ample to take care of that project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 6, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$108,000" and insert "$113,000; continuing improvement between Jacksonville and the ocean, $125,000"; so as to read:

St. Johns River, Fla., Jacksonville to the ocean, opposite the city of Jacksonville, Jacksonville to Palatka, and Palatka to Lake Harney, Lake Crescent, and Dunns Creek, and Oklawaha River, Fla.: For maintenance, $113,000; continuing improvement between Jacksonville and the ocean, $125,000; for improvement between Jacksonville and Palatka, $9,000: Provided, That the project for this section shall be extended by the Secretary of War in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 699, Sixty-third Congress, second session: Provided further, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purpose of this improvement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Florida desired to make a statement upon the next amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is there any objection anywhere to the items in the St. John River? Then, the next item is the Oklawaha River.

Mr. KENYON. That is the one we wanted to discuss.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is the first amendment in that paragraph agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Which one is that?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the St. Johns River amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KENYON. That is all right.

Mr. FLETCHER. That brings us down to line 15, "for improvement of Oklawaha River."

Mr. President, the Oklawaha River project is a new project. It never has been adopted by Congress. It is, however, a project which has been favorably reported on by the engineers. The district engineer, the division engineer, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, a special board of engineers sent down for the purpose of making an investigation on the ground regarding the project, and the Chief of Engineers have all favorably reported it to Congress. It also was favorably considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee in 1914, reported to the House, and passed by the House. It came over here and in one of the bills it was favorably reported by the Commerce Committee, and would undoubtedly have passed before this and have been approved by both branches of Congress except for the fact that we made a lump-sum appropriation which took the place of the river and harbor bill which had that item in it. So it has gone through all the steps necessary to establish its merit. It has been passed upon by all agencies and officers and committees, and even by the House of Representatives, and I have no doubt would have been indorsed here as I said, and would have been approved and gone into law before this time except for the fact that we were unable to pass the river and harbor bill which had that item in it. I may be mistaken as to having substituted a lump-sum appropriation. I think that was the bill which did not pass Congress at all, but failed, as did other large appropriation bills at that session of Congress. The Post Office appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, and the Army appropriation bill among others failed that year, as the Senate will remember, on account of action which prevented further legislation. That bill contained this item, but the river and harbor bill, as I said, failed, as did all the other large appropriation bills that session. For that reason it has never been brought before the Senate for final action. It has passed the House.

Subsequent to the bill that failed, the Senate will remember we had been confining our appropriations to war-emergency matters as far as new projects were concerned and to maintenance and to continuing appropriations to carry on projects already adopted. We have not claimed it was a war-emergency proposition. We do claim that upon the basis of transportation, upon the basis of improving highways in order to promote commerce, this project ought to be adopted by Congress and this improvement ought to be made.

Generally speaking, let me say the St. Johns River, as is well known, flows into the Atlantic Ocean, and the Oklawaha River flows into the St. Johns River about 120 miles from its mouth. It therefore is not a mere intrastate stream. It is connected with New York. The cities and towns on the banks of the Oklawaha River and at the head of the Oklawaha are in communication with all of the great cities on the Atlantic seaboard, as far as that is concerned. The river has been navigable all the time, so far as we know. Boats have been able to operate upon it, but there is need of greater depth. For 32 miles of the river they have a depth now of 6 feet, for 4 miles of about 5 feet, and then for 94 miles the depth is varying all the way from 3 to 5 and 6 feet, but the channel is very crooked and the depth is not dependable. It can not be estimated at certain seasons of the year that they will have even that much water throughout the length of the entire stretch of the river.

The Oklawaha River, as I said, empties into the St. Johns River about 20 miles south of Palatka and the main run extends up to what is called Silver Springs Run, an immense body, in which springs an ordinary boat can be turned around. A river fairly bubbles out of the ground, affording one branch of the Oklawaha River. The water is 50 or 60 feet in depth in this spring and perfectly clear. The branch, however, which is under consideration here is the branch leading from 4 miles below Silver Springs in the direction southward toward Leesburg. Before it reaches Leesburg it reaches Lake Griffin, which is some 8 miles across. There will be need of a lock at Lake Griffin in order to control the water and to assure a steady flow of water with an ample depth throughout the stream at all seasons of the year.

Lake Griffin leads to Leesburg, and the Leesburg local interests undertake to connect Lake Griffin with Lake Harris, another large lake, connected with which is Lake Eustis and Lake Dora. So you have a chain in a region which is surrounded by orange groves, truck farms, and various other industries, among them kaolin mining and manufacturing and pulp and various other enterprises, which would all be accommodated by the improvement of the Oklawaha River.

The project is to give a channel 6 feet in depth, which is described in paragraph 5 of the report of the Chief of Engineers, as follows:

5. After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports, I concur in general with the views of the district officer, the division engineer, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that the improvement by the United States of Oklawaha River from its mouth to Lake Dora is deemed advisable to the extent of obtaining a channel 6 feet deep and 60 feet wide, in the manner contemplated by the district officer, and with locks of dimensions as proposed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, at an estimated cost of $733,000 for original construction and $12,000 per annum for maintenance, subject to the conditions of local cooperation recommended by the board and quoted above. The first appropriation should be $175,000, with subsequent appropriations sufficient to complete the work in four years.

The bill carries $100,000 for the project. It would, of course, adopt the project and would mean that the Government would undertake to complete that improvement. The report further shows the amount of commerce and the value of this improvement, but since the report was furnished there has been a tremendous development along the route of the river. The Oklawaha Valley is one of the richest valleys in the whole country. There are twenty-odd thousand acres of land along this stretch of the river from Lake Griffin toward Silver Springs Run of ninety-odd miles—20,000 acres of as rich land as can be found in the country. Since this report was made over a thousand acres of that land have been put in cultivation and it produces according to statements made to me, 100 bushels of corn per acre per annum and 200 bushels of potatoes per acre per annum, and both corn and potatoes the same year. There is not anything finer in the country. There is no speculation about it. They are the actual results. That produce has to be hauled from 8 to 12 miles to the railroad and then to the market North. All that produce would move through this waterway if the channel were deep enough and straightened sufficiently to permit of it.

I have here a letter from Mr. Gilbert D. Leach, who has been very much interested in this subject and who represented the chamber of commerce at the time of the Atlantic Deep Waterways Convention at its meeting at Miami a year or two ago. The committee, of which Mr. Leach was a member, appeared before the members of that convention and urged that they favor this project. At any rate, Mr. Leach has been thoroughly familiar with all the conditions there. He is the editor of the Leesburg Commercial. Under date of January 20, 1919, he writes me as follows. I will ask to have the whole letter incorporated in the RECORD, but I wish particularly to refer to this part of it:

You have in your committee room a long picture of a thousand-acre cornfield at Muclan Farms, on the Oklawaha River, at the county line between Lake and Marion Counties. That same field, in response to the call for more foodstuffs, was planted in Irish potatoes, and actually produced, in round numbers, I was informed by the manager, 200,000 bushels of spuds. Of this immense quantity of potatoes about 60,000 bushels were marketed. The remainder rotted in the fields.

Now, why? Because to gather the potatoes, pack and prepare them for shipment, and haul them 8 or 10 miles to the railroad and pay the freight on them from there to market involved so much expense that they could not sell them. They offered them at $1 a bushel down at Jacksonville. They could not get them to market. It is a pity, it is a shame, when we are urging people to produce food in this country that on these lands the food can be produced, and is produced, and the produce should rot in the field because of the excessive freight charges to market and the lack of water facilities to get it to market.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEESBURG, FLA., January 20, 1919.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 16th was most welcome. I felt confident you would bring up the project when the bill reached your committee.

Naturally, the development along the valley of the Oklawaha and the valley of the St. Johns has been arrested during the war, for these are a patriotic people, and they have not tried to encourage new settlers to ride on Mr. McAdoo's trains against his wishes. However, the call of the Department of Agriculture for greater production of foodstuffs caused increased acreage to be used all through that section, and the deplorable fate of one of the most important responses to that call I want to recite to you.

You have in your committee room a long picture of a thousand-acre cornfield at Muclan Farms, on the Oklawaha River, at the county line between Lake and Marion Counties. That same field, in response to the call for more foodstuffs, was planted in Irish potatoes, and actually produced, in round numbers, I was informed by the manager, 200,000 bushels of spuds.

Of this immense quantity of potatoes about 60,000 bushels were marketed. The remainder rotted in the fields.

Why?

Because the water was too low to barge them from the field on the Oklawaha River to Jacksonville, where contractors under the Government were bringing northern potatoes into Jacksonville for less freight than the railroads charged to carry them from the Oklawaha Valley to Jacksonville, and because the railroads would pay no attention to them. There was no market because it cost so much to get them there that the price would have been prohibitive. Yet here was the river draining the fields in which these potatoes were growing and flowing on right past the very cantonment where thousands of soldiers were eating potatoes brought more than a thousand miles by rail. Accompanying this are two exhibits clipped from the Commercial of June 28, 1918. The advertisement, as you see, offers the finest potatoes at a dollar a hamper. Contractors at Jacksonville were paying, I understand, $2.35 for old potatoes at that time. The combination of refusal to buy of Florida growers, lack of cars, and immense freight rates doomed the growers of these potatoes, and they lost the money they had spent for seed.

There is, as you know, about 21,000 acres of this rich muck land in one body, every acre of it capable of producing 100 bushels of corn or 200 bushels of potatoes to the acre every year without fertilizer. If water transportation is furnished through the Oklawaha, so that barge haul will place the produce aboard vessels in the harbor at Jacksonville, this one area of land can answer the call for greater "food, feed, and forage" to the tune of 4,000,000 bushels of potatoes and 2,000,000 bushels of corn per annum. And by "per annum" I mean both the same year.

During the past two years citrus fruit groves have been planted in this valley, particularly around Lakes Griffin and Harris. Between Lake Griffin, in which the Oklawaha begins as a river, and Silver Lake there is a new development of grove property that is to be 10,000 acres when completed. Several hundred acres are already set out and more are to follow as rapidly as the work can be accomplished. The rate on citrus fruit from Leesburg to Jacksonville is 21½ cents per box, and to this must be added a 6-mile haul by automobile truck. If the Oklawaha were improved, this fruit could go to Jacksonville by barge line direct from the groves.

At Emeralda Island, Lake Griffin, a new situation has developed this season. This is a great fruit-producing section with hundreds of acres of groves that bear enormously. So great has been the traffic by automobile truck carrying fruit to Leesburg from Emeralda this winter, especially when coupled with the unusually rainy winter we have had, that the road is cut to pieces. Some of this crop has had to be brought across the lake to Leesburg by makeshift water transportation (the fact that the river is too shallow for water craft making regular boat transportation on single lakes unprofitable, and therefore taking the boats away from this work) and this has cost an average of 9 cents per box. Add to this the 21½ cents per box from Leesburg to Jacksonville and you can see how discouraging it is to growers of fruits.

There is another new proposition of an industrial nature that is going to need transportation on the Oklawaha very badly. Plans are drawn and site selected for a pulp mill on the Lake Griffin Canal, paper and box-board pulp to be manufactured from sawgrass which grows in the edge of the lakes and along the banks of the river. Rights to harvest sawgrass on more than 10,000 acres of land have already been secured in the name of the Leesburg Board of Trade for the use of those who are erecting the paper mill, and it is the intention of the people who will own the mill to make this the permanent manufacturing point for finer grades of paper. As the Government has been dealing with the paper question for the past two years, and as this industry will convert a waste product into the finest grade of papyrus writing paper as well as many coarser varieties of paper, this is an industry that should be encouraged. The first mill is to turn out 10 tons daily, but will be so erected that its capacity can be increased to 50 tons daily without enlarging the buildings. To run the larger mill it will require incoming transportation of about 200 tons of raw material daily, besides the wood for fuel, and the finished product resulting will be 50 tons daily, which should be given water transportation to Jacksonville, the nearest basic freight point and the nearest ship harbor. Freight by rail for the raw materials or for wood fuel is out of the question for this industry. If the Oklawaha is improved all of this waste product from the mouth of the St. Johns to the end of the project in Lake Dora can be utilized economically and manufactured into a finished product that the country sadly needs. Without the Oklawaha improvement this industry must of necessity be circumscribed by the limitations of transportation of the raw materials and it can produce and manufacture only a limited amount of this high-grade paper so badly needed, the remainder of the waste product continuing to be waste as it has in the past. As this sawgrass renews itself in about six months after being harvested a practically inexhaustible supply of raw material will be made available where now the same quality of paper must be made of rags with a limited amount of wood fiber added. To the United States, as a whole, the benefits from this one industry here at the source of the Oklawaha River will far more than offset the first cost and maintenance of the complete Oklawaha project. Both the quality and the practicability of the utilization of sawgrass have been thoroughly demonstrated.

These are the new elements of our request for improvement of this river. The old, old facts and figures still maintain as recited to both the House and your committee of the Senate in 1916. Our need is becoming more acute and only the fact that we are not a wealthy people has kept us waiting for the slow action of the Federal Government in giving this matter the attention your United States Engineering Department asked for it eight years ago.

With the hope that these facts will assist you in presenting anew the proposition that means so much to this section of the country, I submit them with the utmost respect and regards.

Very truly, yours,

GILBERT D. LEACH.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is no guess about this sort of thing. This has been the actual experience of these people. To be sure, the Food Administration gave out orders that people were to buy old potatoes and not new potatoes. There was a quartermaster's training camp at Jacksonville, 125 miles from these fields, buying potatoes sent down from Maine, a thousand miles by water. They were buying those potatoes while these potatoes were offered to them at $1 a bushel, and, as I said, were permitted to rot in the field on these lands adjoining this river. If they had had barges with a sufficient depth of water to take them out of this river to the St. Johns River and then on down to Jacksonville by the St. Johns River, they could have been put into that market at half the railroad rate besides saving the immense expense and trouble of trucking and hauling them 8 or 10 miles by road to get them to the railroad.

The same situation exists with regard to fruit. There are thousands of acres of the finest fruit groves in the world adjacent to this river on the banks of these immense lakes, which would all be reached by the improvement of this river. The local interests will connect Lake Griffin with Lake Harris in order to connect up all the lakes of that region. All that region would be opened up and given water transportation to the markets of the world through this connection with the St. Johns River to the Atlantic Ocean.

That is the situation. Here is a stretch of 94 miles of very crooked, wandering river that in certain seasons of the year is very shallow and is not dependable, and at the head of it there are these vast bodies of waters. I would call them vast, because Lake Griffin is 8 or 10 miles in diameter. Lake Eustis is a large lake, and just beyond that is Lake Apopka, covering hundreds of acres; then Lake Dora, and along the shores of these lakes there are the most beautiful groves to be found in all the world. The larger portion of that fruit would move through this waterway.

I shall not go into further details to-day. I will ask Senators to please read the report on this project, Document No. 514, and to keep in mind that it is a project which has been indorsed by all the agencies and authorities whose duty it was to investigate it, including the special board sent down there for the purpose of going over and making an examination on the ground, that it has passed both the committees of Congress heretofore, that it has passed the House of Representatives, and would have passed, I have no doubt, if that bill had not failed as all the appropriation bills failed two years ago.

I sincerely hope that this improvement will not be longer delayed, because it means, by lack of expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money, not affording the facilities which would promote the commerce of that region and add to the transportation possibilities. It would mean not merely a local matter at all, but would mean the development of the whole region in that vicinity and add to the commerce of the whole country. The citrus fruit packers would move out along this river to the markets of the country. It means not merely a benefit to the citrus fruit growers. If the corn and potatoes that are produced there can move to market, it means not merely a benefit to the people who grow the corn and potatoes in those fields. If there is any project at all that deserves the favorable consideration of Congress in this whole bill, I think this is the project. I shall have something further to say about it if there is occasion to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall ask that after the executive session the Senate shall recess until 11 o'clock Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the motion is put, I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that I have just sent to the Document Room for Document No. 514, and there is not a single copy there. Has the Senator two copies, that I may have one to-night?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; the Senator can be furnished with a copy.

Mr. RANSDELL. The only copy we have is in this book, which we shall be glad to lend to the Senator from Utah if he wishes it.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask the Senator from Colorado to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. POMERENE. This afternoon the Committee on Privileges and Elections authorized me to present a substitute for Senate resolution 415 relating to the Michigan senatorial contest. I ask to have it incorporated in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] just before leaving asked me in case the Senator from Ohio presented the substitute to-night to request him to leave it until Monday morning.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not going to ask for any action upon it. I simply want to have it printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose there will be no objection to that. The Senator from Michigan thought the Senator might desire action upon it.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; I do not ask for action to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The substitute reported by Mr. POMERENE is as follows:

Whereas charges and countercharges of excessive expenditure of money and of unlawful practices have been made in connection with the election of a Senator from the State of Michigan, and it has been reported that certain evidence in connection therewith is liable to be lost or destroyed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and empowered—

(a) To take possession in the presence of the representatives of Messrs. Newberry and Ford, through the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and preserve all ballots, poll books, and tally sheets. The committee may also in like manner take possession of and preserve any other documentary evidence in connection with such charges or countercharges which it is shown to a majority of the committee, a quorum being present, or to a majority of any subcommittee acting in the matter, is in danger of otherwise being lost or destroyed before the meeting of the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress, said ballots, documentary evidence, etc., to be sealed and held for such use as the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress may determine.

(b) To take and preserve any relevant, competent, and material verbal testimony where it is shown to a majority of the committee, a quorum being present, or to a majority of any subcommittee acting in the matter, that any witness can not reasonably be expected to be available as a witness if called before a committee of the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

(c) To issue and enforce any necessary subpœnas, to sit during the session of the Senate, or during any recess of the Senate, at such place or places as it may deem most convenient for the purpose of carrying out the intent of this resolution.

(d) To compel the production of papers, books, or documents for the purposes herein contemplated.

The expenses incurred in the carrying out of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers ordered by the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, and approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE subsequently said:

Mr. President, in order to avoid confusion, I ask that the substitute for Senate resolution 415, relating to the Michigan senatorial contest, be printed as an amendment to the original resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 17, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 15 (legislative day of February 13), 1919.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 15, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts unto Thee, O God our Heavenly Father, from whom cometh all strength, wisdom, and purity. Impart unto us, we beseech Thee, of these things sufficient unto our needs, that with all diligence and perseverance we may do whatsoever we are called to do, with unswerving fidelity to truth and justice. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for not more than 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman want to talk about for 10 minutes?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have a bill and a resolution that I am presenting this morning, in connection with a couple of matters which I should like to call to the attention of the House. I think the matter is rather important.

Mr. FOSTER. Can not the gentleman get along with five minutes?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will try to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to proceed for not more than five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the bill and joint resolution which I have offered are as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15983) to abolish the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency and the office of Comptroller of the Currency, and authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to perform the duties thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency in the Treasury Department, and the office of Comptroller of the Currency be, and they are hereby abolished, except as hereinafter provided in this act.

SEC. 2. That the duties now imposed by law upon the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency and upon the Comptroller of the Currency shall hereafter be performed under and by direction of the Federal Reserve Board; and all employees of the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency now provided for by law shall be transferred to and hereafter be under the control and direction of the Federal Reserve Board, which board shall also disburse all appropriations for salaries and for other expenses of the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency and shall submit detailed estimates in its next annual report of the number of employees, their salaries, and of other necessary expenses for the administration of the duties hereby imposed upon it by said board.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

House resolution 578.

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of seven Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the official conduct of John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency, in his capacity as such comptroller, in the relationship thereof not only to the functions of said office as prescribed by law and by regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and by said Williams, but also in his official relationships to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of War, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to the Federal Reserve Board, to the War Finance Corporation, to the Capital Issues Committee, to the United States Shipping Board, and to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, respectively; said committee shall also inquire whether said Williams has any private banking connections or partnerships or otherwise interested in banking or brokerage concerns in the cities of Richmond, Va., or Baltimore, Md., or both, and what connection any or all of these have had in the past year with purchases or sales of stocks in International Mercantile Marine and Russian bonds or other securities, if any fiduciary or other relationship exists or has existed between such banks and the Richmond Federal reserve bank or its branch at Baltimore, Md. Said committee shall also inquire into the official conduct of said John Skelton Williams in his official capacity as Director of Finance and Purchases of the United States Railroad Administration. Said committee shall also inquire into the acquisition of sites for naval operations of any kind and report to the House whether, in their opinion, the said John Skelton Williams, while in said office of Comptroller of the Currency or in an official capacity directly, indirectly, or ex officio in connection with any other governmental office, commission, board, or agency, has been guilty of acts which were designed or calculated to overthrow, subvert, or corrupt the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof; and whether the said John Skelton Williams has been guilty of any act, or has conspired with others to do acts, which, in contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes or misdemeanors, requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of this House; and for such purposes said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and shall have the right to report at any time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire to take these few minutes to call the attention of the House to a bill and a resolution that I am putting in this morning. One is to abolish the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the other calls for an investigation of that bureau. I am prompted to do this because of several reasons. One of them comes in the form of a copy of a letter from John S. Fisher, the commissioner of banking of the State of Pennsylvania, to Richard L. Austin, agent of the Federal reserve bank at Philadelphia. He says:

A matter just came to my attention yesterday which I feel justified in mentioning to you. One of the trust companies of the State has been a depository for a number of years for one of the important railroad systems operating in the region. An officer of this company informs me that the Comptroller of the Currency has notified him that unless steps are taken by the 1st of February to convert the company into a national bank the railroad deposits will be removed to a national bank.

It seems to me that this is an unfortunate circumstance, and doubly so if it forecasts a fixed policy on the part of the comptroller. In the recent Government financial operations I am quite certain that the State institutions have done their full patriotic duty, just the same as the national banks. We are advised that there are to be further flotations of loans by the Government, and it seems to me untimely for the Government authorities to exercise any discrimination against the State institutions. If friction should arise as a result of such governmental policy, it is not difficult to anticipate that pressure may be brought to bear upon the State authorities to retaliate by removing State deposits to State institutions. In the past there has been no discrimination in this respect.

In addition to that I want to quote a letter from a banker who has this to say in regard to a similar situation just like I have outlined here in regard to the transfer of the deposits of the Railroad Administration from trust companies and State banks to national banks in an attempt to force State banks and trust companies into the Federal Reserve System. I quote:

It's going to be hard on us if he should move these deposits from the moral effect, for we have had this account for 15 years without a complaint, and if the account is moved the bank will advertise it and try to slur us, and the public will naturally start to inquire why was the account moved, which would not be hard to explain, but hard to convince the public, but something must be wrong or else the account would not be moved. We would be glad to put up securities or do anything that would satisfy the Government that the deposits in this company were just as secure as they are in any national bank, but this won't satisfy Mr. Williams. We must nationalize. We trust companies must help finance the Government's loans by buying certificates and bonds, join the Federal reserve bank, but receive no favors. Does this look right?

It seems to me that if this practice is carried out to any great extent it will mean a disrupting of our financial system in the United States and is a power and an influence over State banks and trust companies which should not be exercised by the director of finance of the Railroad Administration or the Comptroller of the Currency acting in this dual capacity.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have only five minutes, and I have quite a good deal that I should like to say. This banker that I have just quoted has been to Washington, and he has consulted with the Comptroller of the Currency and the director of finance of the Railroad Administration, and they have practically made an effort to persuade him that if he would go back home and get his board of directors to convert his institution into a national bank or come under the Federal supervision they would continue the deposits.

Now, the laws in Pennsylvania are such at the present time that many of the trust companies do not feel that they have the legal standing that they should have, and some controversy is now taking place regarding amendments in our State legislature to unify and make possible closer relations between State banks and the national system, but such action as this, however, disrupts any getting together.

Mr. GARNER. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman's bill proposes, as I gather from the proposition at the other end of the Capitol, to abolish the office of Comptroller of the Currency and turn its duties over to the Federal reserve bank?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is one of the purposes.

Mr. GARNER. And according to your own argument you are interested because Mr. Williams is trying to strengthen the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. McFADDEN. He is withdrawing funds from State banks and trust companies in millions of dollars and transferring them to national banks on his own initiative, and I understand that this is a fixed policy and is being carried out deliberately.

Mr. GARNER. And doing it, as you say, for the purpose of strengthening the Federal bank system, to force them into that system. Do not you suppose some influence has been brought to bear on Mr. Williams by the Federal reserve banks to do that same thing?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not know, but do know that he has withdrawn from one trust company tens of millions of dollars and transferred it to other banks, and they are one of the strongest and most patriotic trust companies in America. He has done this without any advance notice to them.

There are several other things in connection with this that I want to call to the attention of the House, and particularly the autocratic powers that are exercised by the Comptroller of the Currency in these matters. He is acting in a dual capacity—as Comptroller of the Currency and director of finance and purchases of the Railroad Administration. He is on the War Finance Board and the Farm Loan Board. There is an intermingling of responsibilities there which makes this power too marked.

I want also to call your attention to the fact that there have also been called to my attention cases where railroads have appealed to the finance division of the Railroad Administration for financial assistance, as provided for by recent legislation enacted by Congress, in which the revolving fund of $500,000,000 was created, and that John Skelton Williams, as director of finance, refused to grant advances to railroads unless the trusteeship under the mortgage was changed from the regular trustee of long standing to some other trustee that was acceptable to him. This is the rankest kind of discrimination, and is a stab in the back that any reputable institution would resent which had been acting in a satisfactory way for years for any railroad or corporation and for which they had perhaps worked many years to get as a customer. If such reports are true, they are subject to the most severe criticism.

The fear and anxiety of the banks of this country are manifest everywhere. I believe that unless these banks and bankers are reassured, or that if there is a continuance of this situation, it is going to interfere seriously with the cooperation of the banks in the sale of the next liberty loan. As now operated, this is complete strangulation of the finances of the country.

The system of examinations, as they are being conducted by the comptroller, seems to me most unfortunate; and right here I want to quote from two letters which I have received from bankers. I quote:

To show that I am right in my contention that I am in "the criminal class," I wish to advise that all of our directors feel that the examiners look upon them with keenest suspicion when they are here; also that an extra examiner, who had been working in city banks, coming here about two years ago, made the remark, after he had been here about 15 minutes, that he wished us to know that he did not expect to find anything crooked in this bank.

I wish now that I had called attention in my former letter to the fact that the department requires two examinations by examiners, two examinations by the board of directors, and six reports each year, so that 10 months of the year we are going through the throes of examinations.

The reports ask for information which has no bearing whatever upon the standing of the banks, and if furnished once or twice a year at utmost would be all that would be required for statistical purposes. In lending money we think if we have two reports a year from reputable parties that we can judge as to their credit. I think the burden of details could be considerably reduced and furnish the department all that is necessary for them to know as to our condition.

The second letter is as follows:

I wish that the officers of the Treasury Department would recognize the value of securing pleasant relations between it and the bankers of the country, and thus have the cooperation that should always exist in financial affairs. You are taking the proper course to have such conditions come, and a great benefit will surely result from your action.

There is one subject you touched upon lightly which I wished to come up for discussion, but there seemed to be no proper place for it, and so I said nothing. This was in regard to opposing the reappointment of Mr. Williams Comptroller of the Currency and going a step further and having the office done away with.

I have been in banking 47 years, and up to a few years ago thought it was a reputable profession, but since the comptroller's office has adopted its present policy I have felt that I might not live long enough to get out of "the criminal class" in which we are placed.

As I understand it, Mr. Williams's reappointment would mean five years more of the present policy, and my desire for recovering standing, in my own estimation at least, is not likely to be gratified.

The law provides that the Federal reserve bank can take over the work which the comptroller's office is now performing, and I trust that the day is not far distant when they will do so, as I know the bankers throughout the country will be treated most fairly and have a chance to feel that they are respectable members of society once more.

Many of the examiners who go out all over the country are from the South. For instance, the largest number of examiners from any State come from the State of Texas, and nearly all of these bank examiners are sent out to examine northern banks. Many of them are special examiners.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more. This is an important question.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, Mr. Speaker, we ought to go ahead with the regular business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not like to object, but I will object to anybody else. I think it is wrong to be taking up the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Now, in connection with my resolution to investigate the department, I hope that the Members of the House will think seriously over this matter, because there are floating around the country all sorts of rumors regarding this office and its administration under the present comptroller, and I think it is for the interest of the finances and banks of this country that these rumors should be cleared up. I am hoping, therefore, that this resolution will be given prompt and quick attention by the House of Representatives.

I need only point to the fact that during the term of office of the present Comptroller of the Currency many controversies have taken place between him and the banks and bankers all over the country. I need only to refer to the famous Riggs National Bank case and the more recent controversy with the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, and several other instances which have been called to the attention of the House—one act recently in which the abuse by the comptroller of the Government franking privilege was called in question by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. Afterwards some correspondence was inserted in the RECORD at the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]. It was stated at the time that it was not done for the purpose of making it frankable but to get the RECORD clear.

To make the RECORD clear, I insert now the remarks of Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. MONTAGUE, including the comptroller's letter, and would recall also the circumstances connected with the Comptroller of the Currency in his official capacity attempting to intimidate a reputable newspaper correspondent into silence and, if possible, into oblivion. I refer to the case of Norman Robinson, of the press gallery of this House, which controversy is mentioned in the remarks of Messrs. TREADWAY and MONTAGUE, just referred to. Mr. TREADWAY said:

I asked for time to call attention to another matter worthy of the attention of this House which appears to me to be an abuse of the franking privilege on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency, when he sends out to every bank in the United States a circular of notification that he has had some sort of trouble with a newspaper correspondent and in which circular he supports his claim for reappointment and reconfirmation upon the part of the Senate.

This statement reached me this morning from an official of a bank in my district. It had a number on the envelope showing that it was the general mailing list of the Comptroller of the Currency, and I only have time to read one or two very brief sentences showing that the franking privilege is used for the personal support of the gentleman himself. It seems to me a very improper action on the part of a Treasury official. It is headed "John Skelton Williams, the Comptroller of the Currency, to-day gave to the press the following statement." And in that statement he refers to the fact that he had called to his office a newspaper correspondent whom, he says, has written matter for the press asking that he should not be confirmed. He says that—

"A memorandum had been addressed with a view of conducting a campaign to oppose the confirmation of the Comptroller of the Currency in the event of his renomination. He (the newspaper correspondent) declined to affirm or deny his authorship of the memorandum."

Has not a representative of the press a right to send to his paper such matter as he may see fit, and does the Comptroller of the Currency have the right to call that man to his office to explain such correspondence and then send under the official frank of the Treasury Department such a letter as this of personal support of himself to every bank in the United States? The gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago called attention to the clogging of the mails from the soldiers. But if the use of the frank of the Comptroller of the Currency clogs the mails in any way for his personal aggrandizement, can not he stop it and give our soldier boys a chance to hear from the folks at home? [Applause.]

Letter inserted by Mr. MONTAGUE:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, February 1, 1919.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I thank you very much for calling my attention to the complaint made by Congressman TREADWAY to-day on the floor of the House, to the effect that the Comptroller of the Currency should have sent out, in franked envelopes, a copy of his press statement of January 23, which, in the opinion of the Congressman, was not properly frankable.

It is entirely true that copies of this press statement (embodying the proposal of a certain newspaper man which was prepared with a view to conducting a propaganda against this office and the Comptroller of the Currency) were sent by mail in the ordinary Treasury envelopes which are used for the distribution of all official mail.

Evidence in my possession showed that not only the Comptroller of the Currency personally but the administration of this bureau were being wantonly, maliciously, and unjustly attacked; and I believed it was to the interest of this bureau and its effective administration that the banks—which are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, and to which the regulations and instructions of this bureau are issued—should be informed as to the origin and character of the attacks which were being made upon it. In fact, I believed it to be my duty to inform the national banks of the sinister character of the efforts which were being put forth to destroy or impair the authority of and respect for the comptroller's office, which must be sustained if its service is to be effective, and if the results which it is expected to accomplish are to be secured.

The statement which was given to the press and mailed to the national banks showed that these attacks were being made deliberately and "disguised"; that the plan was to "get several bankers in on the deal"; that even the bankers who were to contribute to the expense fund were not to be told "who is to handle the publicity at the beginning"; and that everything was to be done "quietly at first." For supervising and conducting a shameless attack upon a public officer, against the integrity of whose administration the discredited newspaper man admitted he had never heard a complaint or criticism, he proposed—in the memorandum which accidentally fell into my possession—that his "charges" would be "$250 per week."

I do not believe that your colleagues in the House of Representatives would approve or condone for one moment such tactics, and I trust they will concur in the view I take, that the subject was one which I was justified in bringing to the notice of the national banks under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

In view of the complaint which Representative TREADWAY has made on the floor of the House, I hope that as a matter of fairness the press statement upon which he based his complaint (a copy of which I inclose) may also be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Faithfully, yours, JNO. SKELTON WILLIAMS.

Hon. A. J. MONTAGUE,
House of Representatives, Washington.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, January 23, 1919.

John Skelton Williams, the Comptroller of the Currency, to-day gave to the press the following statement:

"The origin of propaganda recently started against the Comptroller of the Currency and this office is explained by a document which came into my possession accidentally within the past few weeks, a photograph of which, in the interest of decent journalism and fair play, I feel it my duty to make public.

"The document is headed 'Memorandum for Mr. ———.' The name, typewritten in the memorandum, but which I prefer not to make public now, is that of an official of a banking institution (not national) which has been under serious criticism by the comptroller's office for months past for irregular, unlawful, and discreditable practices.

"Evidence in my possession shows that this 'memorandum' was prepared by a newspaper correspondent in Washington, who was the author of the recent stories sent out from Washington to various newspapers (to the effect that active opposition to the confirmation for a new term for the Comptroller of the Currency had been developed on the part of both Democratic and Republican Senators and criticizing the comptroller's administration) and who probably was the instigator of other articles of like tenor.

"This correspondent was sent for. He came to the Treasury last Monday and was asked whether he had sent out stories crticizing the Comptroller of the Currency. He first denied that he had done so, except to one newspaper in Buffalo, N. Y., of which he said he was the Washington correspondent; but subsequently he admitted that he had furnished the material for the story to various other newspapers in different parts of the country, including among others, the New York Tribune, the Wall Street Journal, papers in Boston, Louisville, etc.

"Although he refused to admit that he had delivered the document mentioned above to the bank official to whom it was addressed, he confessed that he had been in consultation with that official in this connection on a number of occasions and had received his criticisms of this office, and that he had been carrying on negotiations with some one whose name he refused to divulge—but who was evidently the bank official to whom the 'memorandum' had been addressed—with a view to conducting a campaign to oppose the confirmation of the Comptroller of the Currency in the event of his renomination. He declined to affirm or deny his authorship of the 'memorandum.' His refusal to disclaim may be taken fairly, under the circumstances, as confession.

"He said he had not yet received 'a nickel' for his propaganda work, but subsequently admitted that he had, within the past few weeks, gotten money as a loan from the banker to whom his memorandum was addressed and who had been secretly attacking and criticizing the Comptroller of the Currency.

"He claimed that his negotiations as to the propaganda were only under way. In response to my question whether he had ever heard any breath of criticism directed against the integrity of my administration, he declared that he had not.

"He insisted that he had not yet consummated his negotiations for conducting his 'publicity campaign' and getting newspapers to print his 'disguised' stories, although he confessed that he had already given wide circulation to the yarns he had written in the effort to injure the comptroller.

"I am a little doubtful as to whether this newspaper scribbler (a discredit to a noble profession, seeking fees to defame a Government official) or the contemptible offender with whom he was conspiring should be dignified with public notice, but I think the people should understand the nature of some of the things appearing in the newspapers, so as not to be imposed upon and in order that they may distinguish paid-for propaganda from real facts.

"The following is a copy of the 'memorandum' referred to in the foregoing statement, a photograph of which memorandum by chance, but unfortunately for its author, has come into the possession of the Comptroller of the Currency:

"'Memorandum for Mr. ———.

"'If reappointed and confirmed, the present Comptroller of the Currency will remain in office for five years.

"'All that is needed is determination on the part of two or three Republican Senators. If they assume the responsibility, the Democrats are not apt to make a serious fight for Williams in the Senate.

"'A publicity campaign should be started at once, but should be run very quietly. Several papers will print stories if the stories are handed to them disguised.

"'Full publicity can come when the name is sent to the Senate and referred to the committee.

"'In the meantime a story here and there would help the Senators along.

"'Get several bankers in on the deal. Do not tell them who is to handle the publicity at the beginning. That is a matter strictly between you and me for the present, because I will want to work quietly at first, since when I have to come out in the open I will be sure to make some enemies in high places.

"'Since the fight promises to last only a few weeks, and in handling the publicity I will be sure to incur some enmities, the charges will be $250 a week. I am sure I can do some good work for the cause.'"

It seems to me, in connection with the investigation at the other end of the Capitol in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee on this matter, that the attention of the House should be carefully directed to this situation.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that to continue to vest such powers in the hands of any one man is a mistake, and to continue this control will be a big factor in the future financing of the Government and its industrial and railroad situation and the many other operations as well in this country.

I call attention to the fact that rumors are floating around that the Comptroller of the Currency has used information obtained in his official capacity for speculations in stock and personal profits, and that he has not hesitated to pass the word around to the faithful. I call attention to the rumor floating around that there are many speculators among the people connected with private banks and bankers who get information from this source, and I think it well to look into the New York, Richmond, and the Baltimore connections which are either controlled by Williams or members of his family, and I would also point to the recent wild speculation in International Mercantile Marine stock while the Government was deciding what it would do with their tonnage.

I want to call attention for a moment to the make-up of the board of the War Finance Corporation. This corporation is now before the Ways and Means Committee asking for a continuance of this legislation notwithstanding that the war is over. I want to point out to the House the make-up of the board.

Clifford M. Leonard, of Chicago, is a director, known very little as a financial man but selected for some reason or other. Angus W. McLean is the political chairman of the Democratic State committee of South Carolina. Eugene Meyer, jr., of New York, is managing director of the board, and is a large stockbroker in New York. W. P. G. Harding is governor of the reserve board, and the other member is Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, in regard to the other motion, to abolish the office of Comptroller of the Currency, when during the year 1914 I had the honor of serving as president of the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association, in my annual address delivered at Cape May, N. J., I said the following:

I would speak of one particular phase of the Federal reserve act under which system the national banks are now operating, and that is the position which the Comptroller of the Currency occupies in connection with the Federal Reserve Board. It is undesirable to have a Comptroller of the Currency who is, in a sense, a subordinate officer of the Secretary of the Treasury, holding a position on the Federal Reserve Board. Such an arrangement not only gives two political appointees on the board, but gives the seat to one man, who is in a sense, the subordinate of another member of the same board. I am of the opinion that there are many reasons why nearly all the duties of the Comptroller of the Currency might better be exercised by the Federal Reserve Board than continue under the present arrangement, and I believe that were the several members of the Federal Reserve Board frankly to express themselves, they would hold the same view. The Comptroller of the Currency has extremely autocratic powers. It is probably necessary that he should have autocratic powers, but it would certainly be very much more satisfactory to bankers in general if such powers were vested in a board, rather than in one man.

As to the more or less technical reasons why the Federal Reserve Board could well assume the duties of the comptroller's office, there is no need for me to elaborate. Anyone familiar with the working of the Federal Reserve Board and the comptroller's office can see how readily the powers of the latter office could be absorbed in the work of the Federal Reserve Board, and how, unless that is done, there will, of necessity, be a large amount of duplication of work, and such duplication has not fully appeared as yet, because the Federal reserve banks have not taken up the subject of examinations very rigorously. And even now there is some question as to just how much of the information gained through the regular reports and examinations of bank examiners the various Federal reserve banks are entitled to receive. Under the act the Federal Reserve System, of 12 regional banks, has the right to make special examinations. This power has not as yet been exercised.

If the Federal reserve directors are not furnished with satisfactory information from the comptroller's department, in all probability the Federal Reserve System will itself, or through its 12 regional banks, start independent examinations to secure this information, and it would, therefore, seem, and I have no hesitation in saying that I believe, the absorbing of the comptroller's office by the Federal Reserve Board would be proper, and that the act should be so amended as to permit this being done.

Nothing since I made this statement has changed my mind except to make me more strongly convinced that the office should be abolished.

Gentlemen, under the stress of party power and war necessities, there has been conferred entirely too much power and authority in the hands of one man, and if continually exercised and resorted to can have but one end—autocratic power in a democracy. When we have won the war for democracy why should we continue autocratic power over the finances of this country? The people of this country are tired of it. [Applause.]

I will not take up further time of the House, but ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill 15835, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] had reserved a point of order on the paragraph about the transportation of the Army. I want to call to the attention of the gentlemen of the committee that one of the reasons why the amount is so considerable is this: During the war both England and France turned over to the Government of the United States certain tonnage. It was agreed that this Government would pay for the transportation of our soldiers to the other side, and, of course, that we would also pay for the transportation of the soldiers back to this country. The respective countries have not yet come to an agreement—that is, our country and England—as to the price that was to be paid for this transportation. This country thought that the English demand was somewhat excessive, and Brig. Gen. Hines has gone to England with the view of straightening out the matter.

It will take a very large sum of money in the next fiscal year to bring back to this country 1,200,000 men, if the Army should be reduced to that number by the beginning of the next fiscal year. Of course when the soldiers arrive on the seaboard of the United States they have to be transported over the railroad lines to the different demobilization camps, and again from those camps to their respective homes. When you undertake to carry aboard the steamships and over the railroad lines such an enormous number of men it naturally requires a large sum of money to accomplish their transportation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any estimate been made as to the cost of transportation on our own ships for the troops taken abroad?

Mr. KAHN. Not of troops, as I recall. But at the time of the entrance of our Government into the war the rate for carrying passengers was anywhere from $125 to $150 a passenger across the Atlantic.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not proposed by the British Government to charge our Government passenger rates for the transportation of troops, is it?

Mr. KAHN. That is a matter that is being worked out at this time. I do not know what the amount may be that the British Government is charging, but it is with a view of bringing about a compromise agreement as to the amount to charge for each soldier.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am informed that the British Government charged at first $50 per man for transportation and later raised it to $100, and then to $150. Is that true?

Mr. KAHN. I am not informed as to that. I believe that the testimony before the committee was that no agreement had been reached, and that the entire matter was still in process of settlement; that is, both Governments are trying to reach an agreement, and no money has been paid as yet for transportation of our soldiers across the Atlantic Ocean.

I want to say in all frankness that this Government took the position that the amounts that were suggested by the English Government were rather excessive. Because a great deal of tonnage had been destroyed by the time we got into the war, the amount fixed by our Government for passenger traffic across the Atlantic was so much more than had been charged for a good many years before we did go into the war that more than that former price seemed excessive.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the high rate that was charged by the British Government of $150 per man, or according to what I have heard they attempted to collect from our Government, was based largely upon marine risk which would arise by reason of the transport of our troops across the sea.

Mr. KAHN. Possibly to some extent that was the cause, but the scarcity of tonnage, the absolute scarcity of ships, caused the rates to rise all over the world.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and were those ships controlled by the British Government?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were they British Government ships, or were they privately owned ships subsidized by the British Government?

Mr. KAHN. They were privately owned ships, and whether they were subsidized or not I do not know. All of the English ships are privately owned.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they had been commandeered by the British Government for war purposes.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that they were virtually, at the time of their use by the American Government for the transportation of our troops, British Government controlled ships.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes; they were controlled by the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the claim is a claim that the British Government makes against our Government, rather than a claim that private shipowners make against the Government.

Mr. KAHN. That is very true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman furnish the committee with what proportion of this extremely large amount, $449,000,000, was supposed to be used for transportation?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California will yield, I have the figures here.

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of the total of $449,000,000 it is proposed to use $106,000,000 for the charter of vessels, $156,800,000 for the maintenance and operation of vessels, $31,000,000 for reimbursement for losses of chartered transports, $27,000,000 for shore establishments, which means debarkation and embarkation, I imagine. They want $30,000,000 for the purchase of ships, and an item of $5,000,000 for the purchase of harbor boats. These are the principal items which make up the big item.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any appropriation carried in the bill for the purchase of additional horses and motor trucks?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What is the need of that at this time?

Mr. ANTHONY. We have a provision, I think, for $100,000 for the purchase of horses. We figure that the Army has perhaps sufficient horses, more than enough, and they are now selling surplus horses; but there are certain types of horses that they want to continue to buy, such as young animals for the remount stations, where we train them for a year or two until matured, and we want to keep a supply of young animals passing through.

Mr. KAHN. Besides that, the Government has agreements with the farmers who produce horses for the Government that it will take them off their hands after they obtain a certain age.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; of that type.

Mr. SNELL. That is, regardless of the number they may have on hand?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What is the provision for additional automobiles and automobile trucks carried in this bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. My understanding is that none of this money is to be used for any large purchase of automobiles or automobile trucks. They intend to develop and standardize certain types, and will probably use a small amount of the appropriation in that way, but there is a tremendous surplus of automobile trucks and automobiles.

Mr. SNELL. That is what caused me to wonder why it was necessary to buy any more.

Mr. ANTHONY. They want to experiment and standardize types, and I think the gentleman can feel assured that the department is sincere in its promise that it has no intention of making any more large purchases.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman know what is going to be done with all of these new trucks now here in the vicinity of Baltimore at the present time, and the ones that are continuing to be delivered?

Mr. ANTHONY. They will be placed in storage now.

Mr. SNELL. Are they in storage now?

Mr. ANTHONY. Gen. Goethals told the committee that he had no knowledge of the conditions that had been stated in the House by the Member from South Dakota, and that he did not believe there were any great number of trucks standing outdoors exposed to the elements that the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I have some personal knowledge of what has been done at Camp Holabird, near Baltimore, where these trucks are kept. All of the trucks that were parked there during the summer, waiting shipment or call for service, are being knocked down and boxed up and prepared for storage, and a large number of our soldiers are being used for that work, and have been for the last two months.

Mr. ANTHONY. Did I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to make the point of order on the purchase of ships?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have reserved the point of order on the whole paragraph.

Mr. ANTHONY. It covers the item of the purchase of ships?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say to the gentleman in regard to the item of $5,000,000 for harbor boats that I have never believed there was the slightest necessity for the appropriation for such boats, for the Navy must have hundreds of small boats and auxiliary craft that can be utilized for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. With other services like the Coast Guard Service, they come to Congress for a special authorization for additional boats.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then why should we make a blanket authorization here and make available half a billion dollars, virtually, for the purchase of transports and replacements when there are Army transports that have been used for years?

I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to his summary of the estimates. In the estimates he gave there is accounted a total of $355,000,000 out of $449,000,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are a great many other items in the bill——

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the balance of $94,000,000 you have not accounted for to be used for?

Mr. ANTHONY. The transportation of the Army in this country runs into tremendous figures.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly give us the amounts?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is an estimate of $5,000,000 for troops changing stations. Impedimenta and organization of property accompanying troops changing stations is a question of a million or more. I will not give the very small items, but just the larger ones.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not agree with the gentleman that $1,000,000 is a small item.

Mr. ANTHONY. They are in these times. Transportation of recruits——

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly it is not in peace times.

Mr. ANTHONY. Transportation of recruits, $7,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Transportation of applicants for enlistment, $2,000,000; transportation subsistence stores, $1,900,000; transportation of miscellaneous quartermaster stores, $11,000,000; transportation of ordnance and ordnance stores and small arms, $1,000,000. I am just giving the big items.

Mr. KAHN. What have they for railway transportation?

Mr. ANTHONY. Here is another item I overlooked, sailing of public transports, $33,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is included under the general phrase "sailing of transports"?

Mr. ANTHONY. I imagine that covers the entire expenses of the operation of public transports.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the Navy had that.

Mr. KAHN. The Navy furnished the crews, and the Army runs the transports and always has run the Army transports. They are called Army transports.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, this $33,000,000 is the actual operation of Army transports and provides for fuel and maintenance of ships, whereas the personnel is furnished by the Navy and paid for by the Navy?

Mr. KAHN. In most of the transports I imagine they still have some of the old men on the transports who were there before we got into the war and who are civilians.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say further to the gentleman that, in my opinion, it is impossible to itemize all of the expenses of the return home of the troops in France, and this item is intended most largely, probably 85 per cent of it, to be devoted for that purpose, and the real facts are that regardless of the paper plans of the War Department, and even if we vote all the money carried in this bill, we are going to be called upon for a large deficiency to make up the expense of bringing back our troops in France, for the maintenance of the large number of men we know will be in France at the beginning of this fiscal year, and, in my opinion, the committee is largely wasting its time in cheeseparing or criticizing items in this bill, all of which I think are bound to be widely exceeded before we get these men back and conditions in the Army are restored to normal.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I can not place myself in the enlarged frame of mind of gentlemen on the Committee on Military Affairs and agree when I seek information as to a half-billion-dollar item and attempt to reduce it by $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, that that is cheeseparing. I know that the Committee on Military Affairs has been living for the past two years in extravagant expenditures of billions of dollars, and the Committee on Appropriations have been lately trying to cut down those authorizations, and that is my present purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that when an item of about a billion dollars comes in in next year's military deficiency, even after this money is voted, he will perhaps understand the point I am trying to make——

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I will not understand, because I will not be here, and I will not be charged with that responsibility.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Has the gentleman any information as to the basis of charges for the transportation of troops on the interned German ships?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can give the gentleman, perhaps, some information as to the status of the capacity with which we will be able to bring troops back from abroad. Col. Bettison, of the Transportation Department, tells me that we have bunk capacity in American bottoms to-day for 160,000 men, but, on account of the fact they can not make a turn around within 30 days—within a month—he says we can bring back 120,000 only each month in American ships; but they hope to be able to close arrangements with the British Government by which they will secure a capacity of about 50,000 more men, for which we are to pay, not the price that the gentleman from Wisconsin suggested, $150 or $170, as the English Government tried to charge us, but we are going to pay the exact cost of the service, which is to be figured out by boards which will be appointed for that purpose. Then, in addition to that, negotiations are under way for a capacity of 11,000 from the Italian Government, and it is very nearly closed——

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Monthly?

Mr. ANTHONY. Monthly. Then, we are making arrangements for 11,000 with the French Government and for a capacity of 11,000 with the Scandinavian countries, which brings the total monthly capacity to about 180,000, as I had it figured. That brings us to the question of how much capacity we are going to get from Germany. Right now boards are at work in the harbor of Bremen surveying German ships to see if we can get an additional capacity of 70,000, but I am informed we will not be able to get up anywhere near that, but that we are going to get some German capacity. Those ships will be taken to England, the German crews will be taken off, and American naval crews will be put aboard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. And all this tonnage will give us a total capacity, in my opinion, of about 200,000 men per month with which we will be able to return troops from France. The War Department, optimistic as usual, thinks it can handle 300,000 men per month, but I believe my estimate of 200,000 per month will prove nearer right.

Let me carry this a little further and say that within the next four months we can get back over 800,000 men. That will leave us a million men in France on July 1, and there is the absolute certainty that these appropriations, as large as they are, are not going to take care of the expenses for the maintenance of our Army in France, in this country, and in our insular possessions the next fiscal year. All the criticism which has been leveled at this bill for being too lavish falls to the ground, because it is a dead certainty that, whether we want it or not, we will have more men in service next year than even this bill provides for. It is a physical impossibility that it be otherwise.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The question is concerning these interned German ships. Who is operating them and at whose expense?

Mr. ANTHONY. The interned ships in this country are operated by the American Government now.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. By the Navy Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. By the Navy Department. This appropriation goes to pay the expense of their operation, but they are in charge of naval crews and naval commanders.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Just the actual expense of the navigation?

Mr. ANTHONY. The actual expense of the navigation and the expense of their operation.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. It is charged up against the War Department, and the War Department accounts to the Navy Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. The War Department pays the bill. We have a department of embarkation and transportation. All the Navy Department will pay will be the salaries of the naval officers and pay of the naval crews.

Mr. McKENZIE. The statement shows that the department cost per capita will be $70 to the Navy.

Mr. SNELL. I want to get some more information in regard to these trucks. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says they are bringing them over to near Baltimore and taking them apart and storing them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Camp Holabird was the large station on the Atlantic coast——

Mr. SNELL. I know all about that.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). For the stores of the Quartermaster's Department and the collecting point for all these automobiles that were manufactured by the respective concerns of the country where they have collected for shipment abroad. Large numbers of them were there at the time of the armistice, parked about the premises, consisting of several thousand. Those are being knocked down and put in crates so that they can be stored for future use.

Mr. SNELL. If we are knocking them down there and storing them, why do we continue to manufacture them at the present time?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is something I can not answer, and I do not see any warrant for their doing it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that on a large number of contracts there were trucks and automobiles coming there with probably a large percentage toward completion. It was not deemed wise, it was explained, to absolutely stop the work on these vehicles, and they will be probably allowed to be completed and be delivered to the Government.

Mr. SNELL. Why would it not be easier to box them up and store them where they are at the present time than to put them together and drag them to the Atlantic department and erect buildings in which to store them again?

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill carried $50,000,000 for inland storage, which will be largely for the storage of quartermaster's supplies, where our immense surplus of material accumulated through the war contracts can be safely taken care of until they can be disposed of.

Mr. SNELL. There are several thousand of these trucks that have accumulated there at the present time. I was so informed a few days ago.

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly there has been the wildest extravagance.

Mr. CRAGO. This bill does not provide a cent for anything of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say to the committee that 1,000,000 troops will be left in Europe by the 1st of July, and he nods his head in acquiescence.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the case.

Mr. FREAR. I ask the gentleman if he has heard the statement that Gen. Foch requested Gen. Pershing that 1,000,000 men remain in Europe until further directions from him?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I have not.

Mr. FREAR. I have had that brought to me, coming from Army sources, and I ask if any member of the committee has heard it or has received any information on the subject that the House can have?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is the intention of the War Department, so far as we can get it, to bring our men back as fast as they can bring them home, but it is physically impossible to get them all back before the beginning of the fiscal year, and there will be a million men of our Army in France next summer whether or no.

Mr. FREAR. If that be true, will the gentleman inform the committee why these letters that we all receive from different camps in the country that the men are not brought back, and that the officers refuse to discharge them, and state that they will put them in the guardhouse if they make those complaints? I have such statements in my pocket now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the figures will show that the Army in this country is now being demobilized at a fairly rapid pace. The bad conditions spoken of have undoubtedly existed heretofore, but the War Department, yielding to the criticism that it has brought upon itself, is now demobilizing in this country at the rate it should have begun last November.

Mr. FREAR. Does it require the weight of criticism to have the War Department carry out its own orders?

Mr. ANTHONY. It requires, I fear sometimes, more than that. While we are on that point, I wish to say that since this debate started I have noticed the tendency of gentlemen in the House, particularly on the majority side of the Chamber, to vent their criticism of Army delinquencies on the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, this committee is certainly not responsible for the conditions pertaining to the failure to demobilize in this country as fast as should have been done and as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has set forth. Those who are attacking this bill should remember that this committee has nothing to do except to recommend legislation. We have nothing whatever to do with the executive administration of the Army and its affairs. And what is more, I want to say to gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that they should be open enough and straightforward enough in making these criticisms to place them where they properly belong, namely, on those responsible for the administration and discipline of the Army. Their President is the Commander in Chief of the Army, and their Secretary of War is the one who carries out the Executive orders.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I want to say that he has been pointing to the opposite side of the Chamber, so that it will be understood in the House what is meant by his remarks.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want the criticisms to go where they rightfully belong.

Mr. FREAR. Is it not true that the President of the United States has asked to have these troops demobilized as quickly as possible and that the Secretary of War, in pursuance of that duty and order has transmitted that request down the line, and yet we all have in our pockets requests from men in the South in these various camps who are unable to get their discharges, and the discharges are refused by men in charge of those various camps and detachments? That is true, is it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I would like to get some information about these automobiles. I have received letters and telegrams asking if they are to be sold. Can the gentleman give me any information on that subject?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think our surplus automobiles and trucks are ultimately to be disposed of. The department says it does not believe it wise to throw them all on the market at one time; that it would demoralize the automobile industry. They will probably be disposed of just as rapidly as conditions justify.

Mr. EMERSON. The gentleman has no definite information about it?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House whether the War Department has made any effort with the manufacturers of these half-completed or almost completed automobile trucks to take them off its hands, and have the manufacturers dispose of them to the trade? That, it seems, would be a practical business proposal to get rid of this large number of trucks that were ordered for emergency war purposes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that the statement here shows that contracts for trucks and automobiles were canceled widely all over the country on November 11. The process of adjustment on these discontinued orders, of course, will go on between the heads of the department and these companies, and eventually the contracts will be settled on some equitable basis.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not answered my inquiry. My inquiry is whether the War Department has made any effort to have the motor trucks taken back by the automobile manufacturers themselves, perhaps at a reduced price, and allow the private manufacturers to dispose of them to the commercial trade.

Mr. SNELL. It has been intimated by the manufacturers that none of these trucks are to be disposed of in the open market. I would like to know whether that is true or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. My suggestion, I believe, would be a solution in a practical way, for the manufacturers to take them rather than have them sold in wholesale quantities.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have some figures here which show the view of the Army in regard to the number of men—the average number of men—that will have to be provided for in this appropriation bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said yesterday that there was bound to be a deficit, and I understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to make the same statement this morning. I think the War Department should have the figures placed before the House, the figures which the department has submitted, which show that as a matter of fact the average number of men under arms during the next fiscal year will not be 500,000 men.

I have figures here, which I will ask leave to put in the RECORD, showing the demobilization, beginning November 11, week by week. It is shown that on February 1 there were 991,133 men demobilized. The figures up to to-day, which, however, do not include all the figures, because all these reports come in gradually—the figures for demobilization up to to-day total 1,272,000.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I would like to get these figures in, and then if I have the time I shall be very willing and glad to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield or not?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Just so I get the time to make the Army's explanation, to which I think they are entitled, I will be glad to yield to all these gentlemen.

The total demobilization up to date, so far as the reports have come in, indicate 1,272,000 men, of whom 229,000 are men who have been brought home from France. The figures for the last week of officers discharged were 5,000, making a total of 66,000 officers that have been discharged. Of the men who were brought from overseas, 39,620 were brought last week; that is, the week ending February 7. I have the figures here of to-day, but they are imperfect. I will take the next perfect figures, which are 39,620, which make 215,749 men. Here is a chart showing the progress made.

Now, Gen. March stated before the committee, and the statement was also made by other officers before the committee, that the demobilization was necessarily very slow in the beginning. It was very slow because they have been bringing home the wounded men, and they can not bring them home with the same rapidity, because they can not bring the same number of men in a vessel. They are also going to get increased facilities by the use of the German ships and by the use of a German port, where they can be very much more readily loaded.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, that applies to the troops in France. But what is the reason given for not demobilizing the troops in this country?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They demobilized 85,000 last week.

Mr. GARNER. But even if they did demobilize 85,000 last week, that still leaves 700,000 here. They gave out the statement some time ago that in 30 days' time they would demobilize all the soldiers who were in this country. That statement was made by Gen. March or some other officer before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not understand it.

Mr. GARNER. I have never found anybody able to give the explanation why they do not demobilize all troops in this country.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Of course, the gentleman from Texas must realize that to demobilize the troops in this country every one must first be examined, and that takes a long time.

Mr. GARNER. He made that statement, and, having made it, why should he not do it?

Mr. DENT. He was making a too optimistic statement.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is there not a fear entertained that too rapid demobilization would flood the labor market?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No. All the officers, including Gen. March and the Secretary of War and all the men who have in charge the demobilization business, every one of them, makes the positive statement that they are demobilizing just as fast as they can possibly do so.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not believe that, so far as this country itself is concerned, does he?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I have nothing to go by except the statements of the officers who are in charge of it.

Mr. EMERSON. Can the gentleman tell us how many have been demobilized in this country?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. One million two hundred and seventy-two thousand have been demobilized.

Mr. EMERSON. I understand that something over 200,000 have been brought back.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Two hundred and twenty-nine thousand have been brought back from France.

Mr. EMERSON. Have they been demobilized?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They have been demobilized.

Mr. EMERSON. Does that include the wounded?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; that includes all those who have been brought back from France who could be demobilized.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman stated that up to date 66,000 officers had been discharged from the service. What is the total number of officers remaining in the service? I ask that so as to show the proportionate number who have been discharged since the armistice.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. About 175,000.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The gentleman from Vermont says about 175,000. The gentleman from Wisconsin will have to ask some of the older members of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not those figures?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; I have not. As I say, the statements of the officers before this committee were that the Army would be demobilized just as rapidly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The statements of the officers before the committee and to me personally were that they proposed to bring back the soldiers from France, without regard to the army of occupation or without regard to any sort of obligation that now exists, just as rapidly as they possibly can, and that they have a reasonable expectation of bringing home 300,000 a month.

Mr. EMERSON. Who says that?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Gen. McIntyre told me this morning, and Gen. March made a statement before the committee to that effect.

Mr. EMERSON. Has the President been consulted?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The President gets his information from the same source that we do—from Gen. March, the Chief of Staff.

Mr. EMERSON. The President is Commander in Chief of the Army, and I would rather take his word than that of some subordinate.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. He takes the word of the same men that we do, and gets his information through the Chief of Staff.

The wounded men in France are to be brought back first—the men who are in the hospitals. The wounded men and the men who are sick will be brought back before the other soldiers are brought back. On the 1st day of July, as the gentleman from Kansas has said, according to the figures of the War Department, there will be in France 625,000 men. Of the men in the camps, there will be 400,000, making a total on the 1st of July of 1,025,000 men.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I did not quite get the figures. How many do the department say will be in France on the 1st of July?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Six hundred and twenty-five thousand.

Mr. MANN. That is based on the idea of bringing back 300,000 a month?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They estimate that they will bring back this next month 200,000, and then in the succeeding months will bring back 300,000 each month.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether he believes that will be done?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; I do. I have no reason to doubt it. Gentlemen may laugh, but I do not understand on what theory they do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Merely on past experience; that is all.

Mr. DYER. In the demobilization of the men in this country, or in the bringing back of the men from the other side, have they kept their promises in any case?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. This last week they brought back 39,000, and each week is now showing an increase. They are beginning to secure additional facilities by which they can bring these men back. The only thing I can go by is the statement made by the officers in charge, and certainly the Committee on Military Affairs is justified in having confidence in the statements made by the highest officers of the Army.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. There is one means of bringing them back that I do not believe has been referred to. The gentleman will recall that it was stated to us that they were changing over certain cargo ships and putting on temporary construction that would enable them to bring soldiers back in cargo ships.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. That would increase the facilities somewhat each month. It is hoped to do that.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Not only that, but they hope to increase the available ships in other ways. As I say, they are going to get certain of the German ships, by which they propose to bring back these men. Now, if you start out with a million men in the Army on the 1st day of July, and demobilize them at the rate of 300,000 a month, and enlist at the rate of 25,000 a month under the authority that we give in this act, you will find that the average number of soldiers during the 12 months from the 1st of July, 1919, to the 1st of July, 1920, will approximately be about 325,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. We had 3,700,000 men in the Army when the armistice was signed.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Somewhere near 4,000,000 men.

Mr. MADDEN. We have only discharged some 1,200,000 men so far.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. That would leave some 2,500,000 men in the Army to-day.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; but they are discharging them now as fast as possible.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says that we will reduce them to a million men by the 1st of July. Are we reducing them in any such proportion?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. We are not now, but after we get the ships the War Department calculates to get we will.

Mr. MADDEN. We do not need any ships to discharge the men in this country.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; but they will keep up the average.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman said they were discharging them at the rate of 30,000 a day, but the figures that he gives makes it a little less than 15,000 a day.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The highest week of discharges was just before Christmas.

Mr. MADDEN. If they did not discharge more than 15,000 a week, and the same on the other side, we will have more than a million men in the Army on the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman—I am not sure that I caught it correctly—that the basis on which they start is a million men on the 1st of July. According to the gentleman's figures, the average would be 335,000, and that is a different table from the one published in the hearings.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. What we did was to be certain we were appropriating for a sufficient number and obviate the possible deficiency which the gentleman pointed out to us might occur.

Mr. MANN. The table in the hearings, on page 92, in the statement by Gen. Lord, starts with a million men on the 1st of July and makes out an average of 500,000 men. This is a more recent table, is it?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. These are figures that I got this morning from the War Department.

Mr. MANN. These are the newer figures.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; figures brought down to date.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit this suggestion: I think my colleague was stating the difference between the tables, and that while the decrease in the Army is going on we are increasing enlistments by 25,000 men.

Mr. MANN. This takes that into account. The figures give an average of 500,000 men, and the gentleman seems to think by the addition of 25,000 men a month it would reduce it to 335,000.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am trying to make the distinction between the two tables.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The men in the service, which anybody can figure out on the 1st of July, will be a million men according to the statement of the War Department. Of course, we can discount that, but the military officers came before the committee and we had to go by some guide, and we could only be guided by these statements of the men who had charge of these matters—Gen. March and Gen. McIntyre—men who have the whole Army's interest in their keeping.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I was struck by almost the last statement that the gentleman made before he was interrupted, that the week of the highest demobilization was just before Christmas.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; just before Christmas.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In this country?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; in this country. I think they tried to get the men home for Christmas.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How much was the demobilization last week?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I have not got the full figures for last week, but the week before it was 78,000. This week, so far as reported, it is 32,000; but I understand that the figures when they come in will carry it up to the average.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What was the demobilization the week before Christmas?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The highest week that they had? One hundred and ninety-four thousand men.

Mr. KNUTSON. And the War Department is saving the balance for next Christmas. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That may be a witticism, but I am trying to give these facts and figures.

Mr. MAYS. I understood the gentleman to say that the average was 335,000 men.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. According to the figures given here.

Mr. MAYS. You are appropriating for an average of 500,000 men.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. We could not tell; we are doing the best we can with the figures before us.

Mr. MAYS. Did the gentleman's committee consider limiting the appropriation so that it would compel the reduction?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have been frequently interrupted, and I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman has not answered my question. Has the committee considered the proposition of so limiting the appropriation that it would compel the reduction of the forces in accordance with the wishes of Congress?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They are compelled by the terms of the enlistment. The other day I started to put before the House the statute, but I did not have it in my hand at that time.

Here is the statute under which these men are held:

That the service of all persons selected by draft and all enlistments under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be for the period of the war unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise.

That is followed up by another provision that says that whenever the treaty of peace is signed they must be returned to this country within four months.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I do not think the gentleman quite caught the point of the question of the gentleman from Utah. The question propounded was why we were appropriating for 500,000 when the revised figures show there are only about 350,000 men?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. These are not revised figures, but brought down to date.

Mr. DENT. I wanted to make this suggestion: Is it not a fact that the figures which the gentleman has read to the House, which he has just recently secured from the War Department, limit it to the line of the Army, and, in addition to that, there is an enlisted staff corps?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; I think this shows all.

Mr. KAHN. Has it not been the gentleman's experience on the Committee on Military Affairs that the War Department is inclined to be rather optimistic as to what it can accomplish? For instance, they had the statement of the Secretary of War that he would build 22,000 airships in one year, and we have not built 2,000.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. What I desire to get in concrete form is this: Even though the figures of the War Department may be optimistic, there is provision made for that optimism by the difference between 335,000 and 500,000, and, according to figures which I think are entitled to respect on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs and the committee of the House, they will have on the 1st of July 1,000,000 men under arms, and if they reduce that at the rate of 300,000 men by demobilization every month and increase it by enlistment of 25,000 a month, we will not have over 335,000 men in the service.

Mr. MANN. That is, on the average?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. On the average. I do not wish these figures that I have made here to be considered as revised figures. They are just the estimates I have made from the figures that the War Department gave me this morning. These figures are on the demobilization. I got them from the War Department this morning.

Mr. MANN. I mean showing the average in the Army.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Here is the way those figures were obtained——

Mr. MANN. Are these the figures that the gentleman just described as having been obtained from the War Department or are they an estimate of his own?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Virtually an estimate. I went over them with one of the men in the staff office.

Mr. MANN. Does the staff office indorse the idea that the average for the Army will only be 335,000?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They said that that was what they hoped.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. According to the statements given to us in the testimony before our committee and according to the statements that any man on this floor can get from the Chief of Staff, there is reasonable expectation, very reasonable expectation, that the average number of men under arms during the next fiscal year would be less than 500,000 men. The Members of the House must take into consideration that this appropriation does not go into effect until July 1 next. The appropriations that we have made for 1918 carry the troops up to the 1st of July, 1919, and they will be paid out of an appropriation already made. Therefore we are appropriating for an average of 500,000 men from the 1st day of July next. Immediately upon the declaration of peace these men are entitled under this law to their discharge. No one can say when that declaration of peace will be made, and that provision not only applies to the regular force but it applies to the National Guard. The National Guard was a supplementary force that was provided by the national-defense act in addition to the Regular Army, and very few States have organized the National Guard. The temporary army provided for in this bill is the force that we intend to raise in order to enable the States to reorganize their National Guard, and to enable the Army to be recruited under the national-defense act to the number of 175,000 men.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks of the National Guard. I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the National Guard on the border of Mexico, in service for many months there, to-day are over in Germany, and that there is no possibility of their being returned, and whether they are not the army of occupation? Why is it that the National Guard, the members from Michigan, Wisconsin, the Rainbow Division, are held there and not brought home?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They are being brought home just as rapidly as the ships can be furnished.

Mr. FREAR. Is it not true that they have taken the other officers and soldiers——

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They are bringing home the wounded men first, as I have said, any they are bringing the men home just as rapidly as ships can be had—at the rate of 40,000 a week now, with a reasonable prospect of 300,000 a month.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I must decline to yield.

Mr. FREAR. I want to know if any order has been made retaining the National Guard of the various States in the army of occupation, and when they will be discharged?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I am not advised of the orders of the Army. I am not in the confidence of the General Staff. I take it for granted that they have no prejudice against the Rainbow Division or any other division. They are securing ships just as rapidly as they can. They are bringing the men home now at the rate of 40,000 a week, and they will bring them home at the rate of 300,000 a month. That is all the Committee on Military Affairs knows, and that is on the information and statements of officers who are experienced and trusted.

If we can trust men's lives over there in Europe to these officers, I can not imagine why we could not trust them in making estimates for the Army they may need temporarily. As I say, with the declaration of peace, with a small number excepted, all in the Army will be entitled to discharge by the terms of their enlistment and the statute I have read. We propose under this bill to allow the Army to be recruited up to the strength of the national-defense act. We go right back to the national-defense act. This committee is standing by that act. We provide for a temporary army in addition to the 175,000 men authorized by the national-defense act. Temporarily, in the period of unrest, in the period of uncertainty, we have provided for this temporary army under temporary enlistments, under a temporary appropriation, to hold the situation until we can reorganize the Army on a permanent basis and the States can reorganize their National Guard. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The following tables contain the figures to which I referred in my remarks:

Orders have been issued to date (Feb. 14, 1919) for the demobilization of approximately 1,501,000 men, as follows:

Troops in the United States	1,272,000
Overseas troops returned to the United States	229,000
Total ordered demobilized	1,501,000

Later returns will bring the returns for the week ending February 15, 1919, to at least the number discharged for the week ending February 8.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve it for the time being to allow the gentleman from Illinois to proceed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the figures given us by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] are very interesting. They are based on figures furnished by the War Department. I did not criticize in the remarks I made yesterday either the amount carried as an appropriation nor the legislative proposition for an Army of half a million men, but made an inquiry which, if anything, is more forceful under the figures submitted by the gentleman from Virginia than they were under figures furnished in the hearings. In the hearings the War Department estimated an Army of a million men on the 1st of July, 200,000 at the end of the fiscal year, and an average of 500,000 during the year, then asked an appropriation equivalent to pay an Army of 500,000 men for the year. Now the gentleman from Virginia has figures recently coming from the War Department estimating an Army of a million men at the beginning of the year, I did not understand how many at the end of the year, and an average of 335,000 a month during the year. So that there would be a much less Army during the year than the original figures submitted by the War Department. When I asked yesterday the question—and I repeat it now—if the Army is estimated on a million men at the beginning of the year and an average of 500,000 a month during the year, or at a million men at the beginning of the year and 335,000 a month average during the year, what is the necessity of authorizing an enlistment of 510,000 men for a year's time? [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. We start out with a million men.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. And we can not demobilize them all at once, but we demobilize at the rate of 300,000 a month; but we can not enlist all of the 500,000 at once, but we enlist at the rate of 25,000 a month.

Mr. MANN. Very well, suppose we enlist at the rate of 25,000 a month, you can not bring the average down to 500,000 a month, much less 335,000 a month, if we need authority to enlist half a million men. Anybody who can add two and two and make four, and not make five, can see that if you start with a million men and have an average for the year of 335,000 a month you do not need to authorize the additional enlistment of 500,000 for the year, and it does not take a mathematician to figure that out; a boy in almost the primer grade can figure that out. I do not say you ought not to authorize 500,000—that will come up later—but there is no occasion to do it unless you contemplate a deficit in the appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was wanting to suggest to the gentleman, if it is not true that this average of 335,000, or whatever it may be, includes not only those who are in the Army who are going out but all those who are coming in, so you have to add both those figures in order to get the average?

Mr. MANN. Of course, an average is a conclusion. If we only have an average of 500,000, and much more stronger the reason an average of 335,000, for the year, starting with a million men and making a gradual reduction, you do not need authority to enlist 500,000 for a year to keep up that average.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the knowledge that it is problematical the number of men we will be able to bring in and the probable number of men we will be able to enlist, does not the gentleman realize it is almost impossible to bring to an actual mathematical certainty the number of men we will be able to maintain?

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be, but the trouble is the gentleman on the Committee of Military Affairs and the War Department have endeavored to bring it down to the point of mathematical certainty in order to convert the House, and I am showing the fallacy of their mathematics.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit, when we do get the average down to 300,000, what authority will there be in existing law to hold it above the 175,000 that are founded upon the national defense act, unless we have a legislative provision in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I do that in order to take up another matter. I think the War Department has done great work, and I am not sure all the boys in France ought to be returned at once.

I am inclined to think we ought to maintain something of an Army in Europe until the German Army itself is demobilized and out of the way. How soon that will be done I do not know, but I hope it will be done speedily. But speaking of transportation, I have an illustration here of what seems to me to be, to say the least, a gross negligence or impropriety on the part of the War Department. Here is a letter written to me from Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, where a man was enlisted as a captain of Engineers at Honolulu October 4, 1917, and who was discharged on his own application by an order dated December 31, 1918. And with this statement, "Stations to which officers are entitled to travel pay." Answer, "Honolulu, H. I."

He applied for transportation on one of the Government transports, not receiving pay in cash for the transportation. He was awarded, with his wife, second-class transportation, which may have been all the Army could well have furnished at the time on the transport. He was obliged to sail, on account of his business, and accepted the second-class transportation. He writes to me:

My wife, with four other wives of officers and ex-officers, were assigned to one second-class cabin (four bunks and a settee), and I was one of five officers and ex-officers assigned to a similar cabin. Occupying first-class cabins were at least a dozen lieutenants, traveling under order, and a captain, Quartermaster Corps, on leave of absence, all without families. I suggested to the field clerk in charge at the San Francisco office that the five ladies in cabin No. 54 be given first-class cabins and that the lieutenants above mentioned be assigned to the second-class cabins, but no action was taken.

The cabin to which these ladies were assigned was on the "orlop" deck, which is so far down in the ship that the second-class steward in charge refused to open the portholes for fear of seas entering. There was also no bell service.

Special Orders, No. 264, Camp Kearny, covering my discharge, states that I am entitled to travel with pay to Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii. This was furnished only to San Francisco, and I was required to pay for my own subsistence ($8) on the transport. (See copy of orders and receipt attached).

My case is but typical of scores of others relative to men going into active service from Hawaii and the Philippines.

I know of one other case of five men who enlisted, or were drafted, in Hawaii, were ordered to the mainland, and were discharged at San Francisco on December 7, 1918 (two days after the transport had sailed). These men were left to live 30 days in San Francisco on what was left from their last month's pay after allotments, insurance, etc., had been deducted, and when they did get aboard the transport they were required to pay for their food en route to Honolulu. An appeal was made to headquarters, Western Department, but they were refused admittance to see the commanding general, and were directed to the charities department of the Red Cross for relief.

This man was required to pay in cash for his food on board the transport. Think of it, gentlemen. Men taken into the Army, either by volunteering or by draft, from Hawaii, given under the law the right to be transported to the place from which they came, discharged at San Francisco, and practically told to walk home or beg. With the great Government of the United States, which wants to treat its soldiers well—and the people do—with men in the War Department so calloused or so careless—it makes not any difference which—these men, first, are required to beg of the Red Cross charity that they may keep body and soul together while awaiting a transport to take them home, and then, as to these officers, their wives compelled to live down below or at the level of the water on the ocean, with quarters on the outside of the vessel, five people in a cabin, while some bright, nice, clean, young second lieutenant is occupying the cabin on the upper deck.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert this letter in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter in full:

HONOLULU, HAWAII, January 22, 1919.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I was called to active service as a captain of Engineers at Honolulu, Hawaii, on October 4, 1917, and after serving on staff duty at headquarters Hawaiian Department, United States Army, at Honolulu, was ordered to Camp Lee, Va., and served at several mainland posts, finally being discharged at Camp Kearny, Cal., on December 31, 1918.

On or about December 10, when I decided to ask for discharge from the Army, I wrote to the depot quartermaster, San Francisco, requesting transportation for my wife and self on the United States Army transport sailing for Honolulu on January 6, 1919, and was advised that, as I was not traveling under orders, I should apply to the director of transportation, Washington, D. C. This reply was received after I had reported at Camp Kearny. The matter of transportation for myself back to Honolulu was taken up with the post authorities, and I was advised that they could do nothing in the matter, and that I should take it up personally with the Quartermaster General. Accordingly I wired the Quartermaster General at my own expense and, in reply, was advised that reservation had been made for my wife and self in second-class quarters with first-class dining and deck privileges on the U. S. S. Sherman, sailing from San Francisco January 6, 1919.

On December 23, 1918, I wired the Chief of Engineers, Washington, D. C., inviting his attention to the fact that I had been called to the colors at Honolulu, etc., and requesting that I be ordered to Honolulu for discharge. This wire was not even answered. There was nothing in Army regulations or orders which would have prevented the action requested in my telegram being taken.

Inquiry at steamship office resulted in the reply that no first-class bookings on liners to Honolulu were available previous to about the middle of February, and, as my personal business affairs required my immediate return to Honolulu, my wife and self accepted the second-class quarters offered on the Sherman.

My wife, with four other wives of officers and ex-officers, were assigned to one second-class cabin (four bunks and a settee), and I was one of five officers and ex-officers assigned to a similar cabin.

Occupying first-class cabins were at least a dozen lieutenants traveling under orders and a captain, Quartermaster Corps, on leave of absense, all without families. I suggested to the field clerk in charge at the San Francisco office that the five ladies in cabin No. 54 be given first-class cabins and that the lieutenants above mentioned be assigned to the second-class cabins, but no action was taken.

The cabin to which these ladies was assigned was on the "orlop" deck, which is so far down in the ship that the second-class steward in charge refused to open the portholes for fear of seas entering. There was also no bell service.

Special Orders, No. 264, Camp Kearny, covering my discharge, states that I am entitled to travel with pay to Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii. This was furnished only to San Francisco, and I was required to pay for my own subsistence ($8) on the transport. (See copy of orders and receipt attached.)

My case is but typical of scores of others relative to men going into active service from Hawaii and the Philippines. I know of one other case of five men who enlisted, or were drafted in Hawaii, were ordered to the mainland, and were discharged at San Francisco on December 7, 1918 (two days after the transport had sailed). These men were left to live 30 days in San Francisco on what was left from their last month's pay after allotments, insurance, etc., had been deducted, and when they did get aboard the transport they were required to pay for their food en route to Honolulu. An appeal was made to headquarters, Western Department, but they were refused admittance to see the commanding general, and were directed to the charities department of the Red Cross for relief. Should you so desire I can furnish you with the names of men who have suffered from this unjust treatment and the details in each case.

I am bringing the matter to your attention, as previous to my coming to Hawaii in 1912 I was a resident of Havana, Ill., and a University of Illinois man.

Very respectfully,

G. K. LARRISON,
Manoa and Cooper Rds.,
Honolulu, Hawaii.

U. S. ARMY TRANSPORT "SHERMAN,"
Jan. 14, 1919.

Received from G. K. Larrison, ex-capt. U. S. A., eight dollars —— cents for meals from Jan. 6, D, to Jan. 14, B, 8 days, @ $1.00 per day.

N. E. BURNS,
Quartermaster Agent.

San Francisco to Honolulu, H. T.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the following words: Page 32, line 5, the word "purchase," and in line 11 the words "purchase and."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama concedes the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his reservation of the point of order against the paragraph, and the gentleman from Missouri renews it.

Mr. DYER. Unless the chairman desires to discuss it, I will make it.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the entire paragraph?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I would like to know what the ground for that is.

Mr. DYER. I make it on the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a minute?

Mr. DYER. For a minute; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is quite aware that this item provides for the transportation of our soldier boys from overseas home. It is the only item that provides for transportation from the camps and cantonments to their homes also. I do not believe the gentleman wishes to make a point of order to the very means for providing for the transportation of our soldiers.

Mr. DYER. I do not.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman mean thereby to declare his intention to keep the men in Europe?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman's own party, the Democratic Party, and the administration are the ones that have charge of bringing the men home.

Mr. GORDON. They have not done it.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] would charge me with not wishing to have the boys returned. I have been trying to get the men home and doing my best; and it is because the Government is not doing its duty and has been lying to Congress and to the people that I am making this point of order, in order that we may find out if they really want to bring the men back.

In this paragraph, Mr. Chairman, provision is made for the purchase of other motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for transportation of troops and supplies. The Motor Transport Corps is now loaded up with vehicles of this kind, and they are rotting in the rain, in the weather, and they have more than they need; and to appropriate more money for the purchase of motor vehicles, to be wasted and to lie out in waste, is only for one purpose, as I can see it. The Motor Transport Corps, now inefficient and incompetent, as it is in various camps of this country, are doing nothing with reference to these vehicles except to give officers commissions to stay there, and to make the enlisted men do laboring work of the commonest sort, and I do not propose to support an item for the purchase of any more motor vehicles unless I know that they are needed. I am willing that the paragraph shall be amended so as to furnish transportation money to bring the soldiers home from France and bring those home that are in this country, but not for everything that is in this section.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he seems to have missed the point that my point of order was the elimination of authority to the department to purchase automobiles of any character at all. That point of order has been sustained, so that the objection that the gentleman raises to this item has been cured by the point of order. On page 32, line 5, the word "purchase" has been stricken out, so that it now only provides for operation and maintenance. On line 11, as to the purchase of ships, I made that point of order with the approval of several members on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DYER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. If this section is adopted as now written, with the point of order made by the gentleman sustained, will there be any authority in the War Department to purchase any more motor vehicles for the use of the Transport Corps anywhere else?

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. RUCKER. It does not prevent hiring. Can they not go ahead and hire them?

Mr. STAFFORD. There might be a necessity in some cases to hire conveyances to transport our boys to the railroad stations. There might be such an exigency.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not want them to be compelled to walk there. The gentleman's logic might go to the word "hire" also. There might be some cases where the Army has not purchased these vehicles.

Mr. STAFFORD. They can be transshipped to those places where they are needed.

Mr. RUCKER. I think if the word "purchase" is not left in there the word "hire" ought to be left in.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the point that the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Wisconsin makes is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not give the gentleman indefinite range.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I ask unanimous consent for recognition in my own right.

Mr. DYER. I have the floor. I would like to retain it for two minutes, so that the gentleman may ask me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The report made to the committee shows that the War Department has on hand now $214,000,000 worth of these motor-propelled vehicles, so that the point is well taken that we do not need to authorize them to purchase any more of them. In the hearings, where they asked $18,000,000 of the $449,000,000 to be used for that department, the statement shows that it is for the repair of those things that go to the operation of the machine. There is nothing in the report that shows that they need any more automobiles or that they intended to purchase any more.

Mr. DYER. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska, whose judgment I value very highly, I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 32, line 19, by striking out "$449,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$411,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] withdraws his reservation of a point of order, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Line 19, page 32, strike out "$449,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$411,000,000."

Mr. DENT. I accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Alabama accepts the amendment. The purpose of it is to reduce the estimate of the amount provided for the purchase of ships and tugs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD: Page 32, line 19, at the end of the paragraph, insert:

"Provided further, That no part of said appropriation or any other appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, or operation of any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle in the District of Columbia."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the expenditure of Government money to buy and maintain automobiles for the use of officials of the War Department. There are from 260 to 275 passenger automobiles being used by Army officers at the expense of the Government in the District of Columbia.

I see no reason why the officials of the War Department should have automobiles furnished them any more than that officials of any other department of the Government in Washington should have such luxuries furnished them. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the gentleman's amendment eliminate the maintenance and operation of the automobile of the Secretary of War?

Mr. FLOOD. It would not; no. That automobile is specifically appropriated for in the legislative appropriation bill, as are the automobiles for the use of other members of the Cabinet. That is right, because Congress has considered that matter and determined upon the wisdom of the appropriation for that purpose. But here are a great number of automobiles assigned by Army officers to themselves and for their own use and paid for from a lump-sum appropriation made in this bill. There is no authority in law for such a use of these funds; it is a perversion of the appropriation and is an abuse that should be stopped. This amendment will stop that abuse.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would not the gentleman's amendment apply as well, if so worded, to other cities as well as Washington? I have information that I can give the gentleman as to their use in exactly the same way in other cities as the motor-propelled vehicle service is used here in this city. Why specify Washington solely?

Mr. FLOOD. I think the gentleman is right. We ought to prohibit their use in other places as well as in Washington; but I had not accurate information except as to the District of Columbia, where there are 275 high-class automobiles, paid for by this Government, costing the Government probably $2,500 a year apiece for maintenance, or $600,000 or $700,000 a year, and used by Army officers for their individual use, or to carry other Army officers from their places of residence to their places of business and back, and for other purpose of convenience and comfort to these officers.

This is done in other places, such as New York and Philadelphia, and I will be glad to enlarge the amendment so it will embrace other places as well as Washington.

Mr. SNOOK. When I go to the State, War, and Navy Building, I have noticed that they have a large number of automobiles standing out there, and that they run a regular hack service for the officers.

Mr. FLOOD. I understand that is done.

Mr. SNOOK. Is that included in this?

Mr. FLOOD. That is included in this, and as far as my information goes, this amendment will eliminate every passenger automobile now used by Army officers for their individual use or for their community use in the District of Columbia; and, with the enlargement of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the country.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not only are these automobiles used by Army officials, but are they not driven by private soldiers who do nothing else except wait on these Army officers, and who ought to be discharged so that they may get back into some legitimate line of business?

Mr. FLOOD. As the gentleman says, each one of these 275 automobiles is driven by a private soldier, rendering menial service to some officer who may be in many respects inferior to the private who is driving for him. It is an outrage to impose menial service on men who volunteered or were drafted in the Army of the United States to fight the battles of this Nation. [Applause.]

I voted to send our boys to war to fight, to suffer hardships, to make sacrifices, to risk their limbs and their lives, and, if need be, to die for their country and the cause of liberty. I cast my vote gladly, willingly, because I knew my country was right and needed soldiers to defend her rights and her honor, but I did not vote to place the brave, patriotic, upstanding boys of this country in the ranks of the Army to act as servants for any man, and I protest against the use of soldiers for such purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. If this amendment is agreed to it will also relieve the congestion by furnishing considerable parking space around the State, War, and Navy Building for other automobiles of people who have business there.

Mr. FLOOD. And it will give considerable space in the streets of Washington for people to travel in safety who pay for their own automobiles. [Applause.]

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman aware that some seven or eight garages are being maintained for the care and repair of these Army officers' automobiles?

Mr. FLOOD. About eight of them, I believe.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman's amendment eliminate those?

Mr. FLOOD. It will eliminate the necessity for some of them. This amendment applies only to passenger automobiles. It does not apply to truck automobiles.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to his amendment, applying it to passenger automobiles of Army officers anywhere in the United States?

Mr. FLOOD. I will be glad to accept such an amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I observe that the gentleman's amendment applies to all motor-propelled vehicles used in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FLOOD. Passenger vehicles.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Passenger vehicles. The gentleman is aware that many privates as well as officers are hauled back and forth to maneuvers, and necessarily by the transport service, and would not the gentleman be willing to have this amendment limited to the commissioned officers and not apply to the private soldiers?

Mr. KNUTSON. We do not need any maneuvers now.

Mr. FLOOD. This abuse has grown up. There is no authority in law for the assigning of 275 automobiles for the use of officers here.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FLOOD. It has grown up as an abuse by these Army officers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman ought to confine his amendment to the officers.

Mr. FLOOD. I will accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to his amendment by adding after the words "District of Columbia" the words "or elsewhere"?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman's amendment cover the $250 a day that we are spending for gasoline on these automobiles?

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, certainly it does.

Mr. BUTLER. Can we not cut them out for the next four months as well as for the next fiscal year? We ought to stop them from using these automobiles now.

Mr. FLOOD. That would make the amendment subject to a point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I submit this amendment to the committee. It is in the interest of economy. The time has certainly come when we should economize. We appropriated money and it was spent with a liberal and maybe a reckless hand when we were in war and no one objected, and no one will now honestly criticize such expenditures, because they were often made when men had to act so quickly they did not have time to think. But the time has come when we have time to think and to consider every item, when we owe it to the country to retrench wherever possible and certainly to cut out every unnecessary and wasteful expenditure. This amendment will save $2,000,000 a year that is being spent for no useful purpose and without authority of law. [Applause.]

To adopt this amendment we would at least relieve 275 soldiers of work that they should not be doing and enable them to return to their homes, and it might hasten the War Department in demobilizing the thousands and thousands of other soldiers that should be released from the Army without delay. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS. I ask the gentleman if he will restate the main points of his amendment?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be concluded in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withhold that request for a moment?

Mr. SUMNERS. I want the gentleman from Virginia to restate the substance of his amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. The amendment prohibits the use of any funds in this bill for the purchase or maintenance of passenger-carrying automobiles for the use of the Army in the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

Mr. KNUTSON. Or elsewhere?

Mr. FLOOD. Or elsewhere. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. It is in the interest of economy; it is in the interest of decent and orderly government, and it is in the interest of our Military Establishment itself, because this unauthorized and unjustifiable use of a lump-sum appropriation is one of the things that has cost many of our Army officers the confidence and affection of people, who would like to feel differently to all who wear the uniform of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close at 1 o'clock.

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, I have no disposition to discuss it, but I want to offer an amendment by adding after the District of Columbia the words "or elsewhere in the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto terminate at 1 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, two gentlemen over here on this side want five minutes each.

Mr. DENT. I will make it five minutes after 1 o'clock.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will not the gentleman make it 10 minutes after?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. How is the time to be distributed?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] wants five minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] wants five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I want three minutes.

Mr. DENT. And the gentleman from Nebraska five minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHLOE] one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close at the expiration of 19 minutes, the time to be divided as stated. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close at 10 minutes past 1.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the different gentlemen included in the proposition for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] cutting out the special privilege to Army officers using automobiles almost indiscriminately in the city of Washington at Government expense. The same practice is evidently carried on in other cities. I have made a slight estimate of the daily maintenance of the cost of these cars here in Washington alone, which I think is ample evidence that we should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

As stated a day or two ago, I have a letter, dated February 8, from Brig. Gen. Drake, chief of motor transportation, in which he informs me that there are 260 passenger automobiles assigned to the District, 152 in operation in the general service in this city, and the daily consumption of gasoline for all passenger automobiles enumerated above is 1,068 gallons per day. There are similar cars in operation in New York City to the number of 120 and in Philadelphia 40.

It is therefore safe to assume that there can not be less than 600 or 700 passenger automobiles operated throughout the country for the pleasure and convenience of a few Army officers.

Now, here is the daily expenses in the District. Allowing gasoline to be sold at 25 cents to the Government, which is less than the individual can buy it, the gasoline consumed here daily would be over $250. There is a chauffeur with each one of these cars who is a private and receives $1 a day and upkeep, so that these chauffeurs would be an expense of at least $500.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the gentleman if, in view of the fact that the appropriation does not start until June 30 of this year, he does not think that there should be an amendment covering the period between now and July?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the abuse should be canceled now; but that is another matter, as the machines are now being operated under a previous appropriation. Let us fix it so that they can not be run after July 1. We are powerless up to that date and will have to accept it. There must be a large element of wear and tear. A conservative estimate for tires and other expenses would be $250 more.

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. It is estimated that each soldier in the Army costs the Government $1,400 or $1,500 a year. These automobiles take all the time of a private soldier, so that the automobile is costing the Government for each chauffeur $1,400 or $1,500.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is true, but I was not putting that in; I was only putting in the payment in wages and the sustenance, trying to be conservative. There is no question, gentlemen, but that the cost would run much higher than the figures I am giving. The wear and tear of the cars can not be less than $250, making a total of $1,000 a day the Government is paying for allowing these officers to go around the city in Government-owned automobiles. These are the circumstances, and it is indicative of the reason for the gentleman's amendment. Such extravagances as these account to some extent for the large tax bills we are asked to pay. Unless action is taken to check this and similar extravagances taxes will continue to soar skyward.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, at the end of the paragraph, as an amendment to the amendment, add "and elsewhere in the United States, except those used for the transportation of enlisted men of the Army when upon military duty."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that the Clerk read the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 19, at the end of the paragraph, after line 19, insert:
"Provided, further, That no part of said appropriation or any other appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, or operation of any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States, except those used for the transportation of the enlisted men of the Army when upon military duty."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not necessary to except those that may be used on reservations in the United States, and should not the language be "transportation of enlisted men of the Army for military purposes"? It might not be military duty to transport men from the station to a camp, but it would certainly be for a military purpose.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by striking out the words "of the Army when upon military duty," and inserting the words "for military purposes," so that as amended the amendment will read:
"Provided further, That no part of said appropriation or any other appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, or operation of any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States, except those used for the transportation of the enlisted men for military purposes."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. This is in the time of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. RUCKER. Would it not also be wise to insert the words "or hire" after the word "purchase"? I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], who has given this matter attention and who has offered this amendment, informs me that he will accept my amendment to it.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the provision seems to allow enlisted men to ride and not officers, would it not be a good idea to allow the officers to have roller skates, so that they could hang on behind? They have got to go around Washington to the various places where the War Department is situated.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think if we carry on this matter of allowing officers of the Army to have vehicles we will soon have a legless Army, and I am in favor of developing their legs as well as the legs of the men.

Mr. SANFORD. Roller skates would develop their legs.

Mr. SNELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Would the fixing of the time for debate include the offering of amendments to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; because gentlemen must get the floor in order to offer an amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. That can be done when the time expires, can it not?

The CHAIRMAN. There would be no difficulty in so arranging for that, but not under the order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, there was no agreement of the House by which certain gentlemen were to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. No; there was not. There was a unanimous-consent agreement which was defeated by the objection of the gentleman, and then the motion was put and agreed to and the Chair stated at that time that he would recognize those gentlemen who had been named in the unanimous-consent agreement, and the Chair will do that. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion here about the trucks and automobiles now being used in the Army, the new ones on hand, the number yet to come on unfilled orders, and the future disposition of the same. I have been making some investigation along this line and believe this information should be given to the House and to the country. I want the country to know the enormous number of motor vehicles we own and have on hand, both used and new, at the present time, as well as the large and almost unbelievable number yet to be delivered on unfilled orders. I call your attention to this at this time because I believe Congress should force the War Department to adopt some policy immediately in regard to the disposition of these motor cars, that are not needed and probably never will be needed by the War Department. A great many people are asking whether they are for sale or not. I am informed that to some inquiries the department has said they were not for sale, to others they were not for sale at present, and still another Member has just told me he believes that in some cases they are selling them. The armistice was signed nearly four months ago, and I maintain some one, somewhere should know by this time what we are going to do with the billions of dollars' worth of valuable material we have on hand that is no longer used for Government purposes.

On February 5 the Assistant Director of Purchase and Storage informed me that there were approximately 51,000 motor trucks, 8,500 ambulances, and 8,600 passenger cars in the hands of the American Expeditionary Forces.

The number of new or used cars in this country, both truck and passenger, I was unable to get, as they did not have the information in the department at that time; but every man knows there are countless numbers of them in every part of the country, and most of them are just burning gas and using up tires and not producing anything at the present time.

At the time of the signing of the armistice there were on orders and still undelivered to the Government 138,424 autos and trucks; 96,952 of this amount were canceled, and the balance, or 41,472, were to be delivered at a future date.

On January 9, 1919, two months after the signing of the armistice—and this is the last tabulation made up to the present time—there were still to be delivered to the Government autos, trucks, and motorcycles as follows:

9 C. M. 1-ton ambulances	1,834
8 C. M. Standard 1-ton trucks	4,921
1½-ton Standard trucks	3,090
Standard 3, 4, and 5 ton trucks	9,068
Special 2 and 3 ton trucks	7,782
Limousines	15
Motorcycles	9,408
Standard 1½-ton trucks for domestic use	563
Standard 3-ton and heavier trucks for domestic use	1,371

Below is given a complete list of orders at the time of signing of the armistice, the number canceled, and number to be delivered by each contractor and the expected date of delivery, although I have been advised by the department that the time of some of these deliveries has been further extended:

I regret I am unable to give accurately the unmber of new cars already delivered to the department and are now being stored in various places, and I am informed that by far the greater number are standing outdoors and exposed to the wind and weather during these winter months. However, I can give the actual number so stored in the vicinity of Baltimore at Camp Holabird:

Motor cars	804
Trucks	2,874
Mortorcycles	1,014
Side cars	873
Bicycles	8
Trailers	90
Auto bodies	1,810

I am told the War Department intend taking these cars apart, boxing them up, and erecting buildings to store them in, and that it costs at least $100 per car to take them apart, to say nothing of the cost of land and buildings to store them in.

Mr. Chairman, what I want to know and what the country wants to know is, if we have no need for these cars, what earthly excuse is there for us to continue making these cars in every part of the country, driving them at a large expense to Baltimore, then hiring men to take them apart and store them and put them away to be forgotten and actually lost, as far as any real value is concerned?

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WISE. Under this amendment as adopted, which provides that no gasoline shall be furnished or used through the funds of this appropriation for the use of these machines in Washington or elsewhere, Gen. Pershing in France would have to buy his own gasoline.

Mr. SNELL. I was not speaking of that amendment. I am simply calling attention of the Members to the number of trucks now on hand and the number yet to be delivered, in order to see if we can not get some information from the department as to what is to become of the trucks and what is going to be their future policy in regard to them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Are any of them being sold?

Mr. SNELL. I can not find out definitely that there are any being sold or that they are going to sell any of them. It is privately whispered about that there was an arrangement between the automobile manufacturers of the country and the War Department that none of these trucks or machines that are now abroad would ever be sold over there or ever come back from France, but would be scrapped, and that none of these that the Government has on hand at the present time would ever be sold to the consuming public. That is what I want to find out, and I want the people of this country to know the enormous number of trucks that we have on hand and are yet to be delivered, and then see if public sentiment or Congress or something will not force the department to take some definite action to get our money out of this property that is slowly and surely going to waste at the present time. We can never get as much money out of these cars as at the present. The market has been short of small trucks and still is, and if the Government would go at it in a businesslike way I have no doubt but what a large number of these cars could be turned into money at once with little or no loss. Even if they sell them at some loss it would be better than to pile them up in an open lot to rust and decay.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. SNOOK. I will state to the gentleman that I had an inquiry from a gentleman from my district who wanted to buy one of these, and he addressed a letter to the War Department, and they informed him that they had none to sell and were not going to sell any, and all they had to spare they were going to turn over to the Post Office Department.

Mr. SNELL. That is the subject I was coming to in a few minutes, and I am glad the gentleman brought it up. It has been whispered about also that all of these trucks would be used in connection with the Post Office Department at a certain time.

If the Post Office Department has any use for any of them, let them have them at once, but as far as using these trucks for general parcel-post delivery throughout the country, there is nothing to it, for our post roads are not in condition to use them. One trip with a 3-ton truck over our average country roads after a rain delivering parcel post would put an end to it.

Now, the only sensible thing to do is not to buy land and buildings to store more trucks, but to stop buying immediately. Adopt some definite business policy and sell the trucks and cars we do not need to the consuming public. I do not mean to glut the market and disrupt business in this line, but distribute in such a way and in different sections, so as to not materially affect general conditions, but give the public an opportunity to buy these cars at the market value or enough less so the Government can clean up on them with as little loss as possible.

I think the time has come when we should take some definite action here if we have any control over what is going to be done with all this enormous amount of property. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, when I asked for the minute I did not desire to speak long about this at all, but the purpose of my asking for it was to offer the amendment which the gentleman from Nebraska and I have agreed upon, except I notice in his amendment there he does not use the language, "other parts of the United States." I think that ought to go in there, because I do not think that officers in Europe ought to be deprived of the use of these automobiles, and if the gentleman will agree to it I will ask unanimous consent that the words "United States" be inserted in his amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I accept the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it shall read, "elsewhere in the United States."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understood that that was it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that his amendment should be modified as indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. "Or elsewhere in the United States." In drawing the amendment I left out those words. I wrote it twice, but gentlemen came up and I wrote it very hurriedly. However, I now understand that it is already in there.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then I withdraw my request. The only purpose I had was to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, very likely several gentlemen in the House, perhaps most of you, feel that the abuse which has grown up in this District needs to be stopped and yet feel, perhaps, this is rather drastic. I surely am one of that class. I want to suggest to you, however, this fact—and it seems about the best language that hurriedly can be framed to meet the situation—that it will have this good result, it will compel the immediate consideration of this question and the bringing in in another body of a properly drawn and framed amendment that will stop the vice with as little hardship to the Military Establishment as possible. There is going to be some hardship worked by this if literally adopted and applied. Proper legislation can be proposed by the War Department, and doubtless will be, if some provision is now adopted.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have only a minute, but I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why can not these officers use motor side cars if they have legitimate business to transact for the Army?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. A motor-propelled vehicle includes a motorcycle. Of course, there are Army officers engaged in military work who need to have automobile service, and should have it, but how to frame legislation that will give needed authority and yet abolish this undoubted vice is difficult to frame.

Mr. MANN. If this amendment goes through, will an officer located at a fort quite a ways from transportation have to walk to Washington?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They would walk or take a train.

Mr. MANN. They can not take a train there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am inclined to think, like the gentleman from Illinois, that one of the most valuable things we could possibly do would be to stop some of the running about from camps to the city on the part of a great many of these men. It might facilitate demobilization.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think we ought to strike out the words "carried in this bill," and make this provision immediately effective?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I favor that, but that makes it subject to a point of order, but if some one will offer later the proper language I shall certainly approve of it in that form. This abuse has come to be colossal. It works for inefficiency in the military service. It works for extravagance in government, and it works for everything that is not healthy in the public service. Many officers have themselves been guilty of conduct that brings this drastic action. The higher Army officers are responsible for its existence, and I do not refer to the general in charge of the Motor Transport Service; he has nothing whatever to do with it. Most of you know he is a splendid, high-grade man. The responsibility does not rest there. All he does is to turn over the transportation as orders come to him for such transportation to be delivered. It rests with the highest authority in the War Department. It rests with the Secretary of War's office or somebody in the Secretary of War's office. Now, I want to say to you, you have not cured all the evil by this amendment even. This will not touch a large part of the Quartermaster's Corps, and in the Quartermaster's Corps and depot quartermaster's office in this city you will find automobile abuses that have become serious. It is a vicious system that has grown up, perhaps without any person's willing it, certainly without any authority stopping it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

There is an amendment pending and an amendment to the amendment, and of course the latter must be disposed of before additional amendments are offered. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of the amendment the words "carried in this bill."

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia and the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska thereto be again reported.

The amendments were again reported.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there was only one amendment reported by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk advises the Chair that he read the amendment to the amendment in.

Mr. MANN. We do not know whether it was done or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report specifically the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHALLENBERGER to the amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD: At the end of the Flood amendment insert the following: "and elsewhere in the United States except those used for the transportation of the enlisted men for military purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARKLEY: Add at the end of the amendment the following: "And from and after the passage of this act no part of any appropriation heretofore made for the maintenance of the Military Establishment shall be used for such purpose."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. MANN. The amendment as offered relates to appropriations in this bill, while the gentleman seems to have extended it to other appropriations, which is clearly not in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to suggest simply this, that this amendment will reduce expenses. There is nothing speculative about it. It is intended to and will accomplish that purpose, and while it applies specifically to appropriations heretofore made it does not repeal any general law on the subject. It simply limits the expenditure of money heretofore appropriated by Congress.

Mr. MANN. We are dealing with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. We are dealing with a different appropriation, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Kentucky. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER: After the word "purchase" insert the word "hire," so that as amended it will read:

"Provided further, That no part of said appropriation or any other appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for the purchase, hire, maintenance, or operation of any motor-propelled vehicle."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "bill" and inserting the word "act." Even then it will be crude enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "bill" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word of the Shallenberger amendment, "and," and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Shallenberger amendment by striking out the word "and" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "or."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that can not be done by a motion. The Shallenberger amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be offered.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to demonstrate what crude methods we were adopting in enacting important legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] asks unanimous consent that this be done. Without objection, the amendment presented by the gentleman from Connecticut will be agreed to and inserted by the Clerk in the amendment. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require it to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto, for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing; for hire of employees, $5,000,000.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. FREAR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if this appropriation includes expenditures for this purpose at military cantonments which have been entrusted to take care of the men raised under the provisions of the selective-service law, or whether it is simply for military forts and reservations?

Mr. DENT. It includes those cantonments that would be in existence during the next year. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio, by direction of the Committee on Pensions, presented for printing under the rule the conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1071).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 7, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 27.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, 13, 17, 22, 25, 26, 28, and agree to the same.

JOHN A. KEY,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.
T. J. WALSH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependents of such soldiers and sailors, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of said amendments, viz:

On amendment No. 1 (Sarah B. Green): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 2 (Edward Blackmer): A correction.

On amendment No. 3 (Annie Neate): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 4 (Fred A. Angelo): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 5 (Samuel E. Spencer): Grants $17 a month in lieu of $12.

On amendment No. 6 (Edith V. Bowman): Strikes out provision for pension.

On amendment No. 7 (Grant H. Hill): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 8 (Lindley Herrington): Strikes out provision for pension.

On amendment No. 9 (Genevra M. Lamb): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 10 (Charles A. Walter): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 11 (Edward P. Aler, alias John P. Edwards): A correction.

On amendment No. 12 (Emma L. Green): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 13 (James P. Dooley): A correction.

On amendment No. 14 (Frances L. Young): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 15 (Fred F. Newell): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 16 (Susan E. Brown): Restores rate of $25 in lieu of $20 proposed.

On amendment No. 17 (Henry A. Jaegle): Grants rate of $17 a month in lieu of $12 proposed.

On amendment No. 18 (Mary A. Lawson): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 19 (Mary O. Barbee): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 20 (Carrie E. Dennis): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 21 (Lafayette Martin): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 22 (Walter Sewell): Strikes out provision for pension.

On amendment No. 23 (Addie Burns): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 24 (Mary E. Wainright): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 25 (Rebecca Strouther): Strikes out provision for increase of pension, as she is now pensioned under special act of Congress.

On amendment No. 26 (Belle R. Reid): Strikes out provision for increase of pension, as she is now pensioned under special act of Congress.

On amendment No. 27 (Alice A. Thorburn): Restores provision for pension.

On amendment No. 28 (Wesley H. Crockett): Strikes out provision for pension.

JOHN A. KEY,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KEY of Ohio, by direction of the Committee on Pensions, presented for printing under the rule the conference report and statement on the bill (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Harlan W. Jenks, H. R. 9434, Sixty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has the floor.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, with reference to my inquiry, do I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs states that the cantonments which have been constructed are known as posts or stations? Is that a correct designation of them?

Mr. DENT. You mean temporary camps during the emergency?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DENT. Some of them are called cantonments and others are called National Guard camps.

Mr. WALSH. I notice in other sections of the bill provision is made for telephone service and the like at posts, camps, cantonments, depots, arsenals, and so forth, but this item is apparently restricted to military posts and stations. My inquiry is whether any of this money would be expended, or would be available for expenditure, at these cantonments, or whether it would be confined to military posts and stations established before the emergency, and of a permanent character?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that of course if any of these cantonments happen to be in existence after the 1st day of next July, this appropriation by law would apply to them. But the committee cut the appropriation more than half in two on the theory that it ought to be confined to permanent military posts in the country.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that quite a generous appropriation, $5,000,000, for water and sewers and the purchase and repair of fire apparatus?

Mr. KAHN. They asked for $12,000,000, and the committee cut it to $5,000,000. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the statement made by Gen. Marshall, on page 204 of the hearings, in which he says:

> At many of the Regular Army posts, and at certain of the cantonments which it is supposed will be maintained for permanent occupancy by troops, it is necessary to purchase water from public-service corporations, and it is estimated that the necessary expenditure for this purchase will amount to $1,799,542, which is 20 per cent of the amount appropriated in the Regular Army bill for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. WALSH. That is very true, but the last prewar appropriation for this very purpose was $1,500,000. Here we have jumped it to $5,000,000. Now, if we are going back to a prewar basis——

Mr. DENT. Where does the gentleman from Massachusetts get those figures? I have the figures before me for 1917. It is $2,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. It was referring to the 1916 item.

Mr. DENT. This was the 1917 appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Well, even with the 1917 appropriation of $2,000,000 it seems to me that without some specific explanation and without its being shown that this is to apply to some cantonments which are located an increase of $3,000,000 is somewhat excessive.

Mr. DENT. That was the reason for the increased appropriation, because it is possible that it might have to apply to some of them.

Mr. WALSH. "It is possible." That is one of the explanations of contingent or possible action.

Mr. KAHN. The department asked for $12,000,000 for this item, and the committee thought by cutting it to $5,000,000 they were acting fairly to the soldiers and to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, the committee has acted fairly and with due generosity, but it seems to me the House ought to know how the money is to be expended and how many of these cantonments are to be made military posts or stations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman from Alabama reading from the Army appropriation act of 1917, in which $2,000,000 was carried for furnishing water for military purposes?

Mr. DENT. I am reading from the appropriation bill approved May 12, 1917.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That was for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Many of these cantonments then had already been built.

Mr. DENT. Not at the time this act was passed, but during that year.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You were making appropriations for that year, and carried only $2,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. DENT. I will call attention, Mr. Chairman, to page 733, part 2, of the hearings before the committee, in which a detailed statement is given, showing exactly each item of the appropriation asked for, as follows:

Water and sewers.

Item.	Amount.	Division making estimate.
Water systems:
237. Procuring water	$2,080,700	Construction.
237a. Purchase of water	1,799,542	Do.
237b. Sterilizers and filters		General supplies.
238. Introducing water to buildings	190,475	Construction.
239. Installation and extension of plumbing	1,837,153	Do.
Fire apparatus:
240. Purchase of	100	Do.
241. Repair of	418,421	Do.
Fire-alarm systems:
242. Purchase of		Do.
242a. Repair of	10,000	Do.
Sewage:
243. Disposal of	490,962	Do.
243a. Expenses incident thereto		Salvage.
243c. Incinerators, purchase, etc	66,272	Construction.
244. Toilet paper	609,500	General supplies.
245. Water systems, repairs to	1,808,402	Construction.
246. Sewer systems, repairs to	735,082	Do.
247. Plumbing within buildings, repairs to	1,677,760	Do.
Total	11,724,369
Cut	609,500
Total	11,114,869

It will be noticed that the total amount there is $11,114,869, which the committee cut down to $5,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any sequence in the large appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purchase of water in view of the adoption of the constitutional amendment?

Mr. DENT. Well, I believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself agree that that amendment ought not to have been adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thoroughly agree. I wondered whether this water was to be still used as chasers for the benefit of those who happen to have stores in their possession after the law becomes effective.

Speaking seriously, what is the need of such large appropriations as $1,000,000 for the purchase of water?

Mr. DENT. I confess to the gentleman, as I have plainly stated to the committee all during the consideration of this bill, that in the present state of the Army situation and the uncertainty of it, appropriations like this are largely a matter of guess, and that is all you can say in regard to them.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire on another subject which has been considered in a way by the Committee on Appropriations, or, rather, it was referred to in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations: Did the Committee on Military Affairs give any consideration to the purchase of the land on which these cantonments are located, as a permanent policy, or did they merely continue the present proposal to have them under lease?

Mr. DENT. I think I stated on yesterday that the committee had hearings. The Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Crowell, appeared before the committee and stated that the policy of the War Department was to purchase all of these various cantonments and to abandon all the National Guard camps except two, one in South Carolina and one in California, for the purpose not of using them as permanent military posts, but of reselling the property, thinking that thereby they could save some money. They asked the advice of the committee, and the committee declined to give any advice on the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do we understand that under existing law the department has authority to go ahead and purchase the land on which these cantonments are temporarily established?

Mr. DENT. It was so claimed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the committee has not taken any stand in either canceling that authorization or approving it?

Mr. DENT. The committee has taken no action whatever on it.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$5,000,000" and to substitute "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FREAR offers an amendment on page 33, line 4, to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the House fully appreciates the position in which we are being placed during the discussion before the committee. Here is a bill reaching $1,117,000,000, ten times as great as any bill prior to the war, and we have a one-page report on it, that is all; and the House is supposed to gather from that the necessity for this $1,000,000,000 bill. Then we ask the committee, "What informattion can you give us?" And then a member of the committee refers to some general statement. For instance, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], whom we all highly respect for his knowledge about this general subject says, "The department wanted $12,000,000 for this item, but we held it down to $5,000,000." "It used to be how much?" "A few hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. KAHN. It used to be $2,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. I am asking that it be made $2,000,000 now.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. If I can have more time.

Mr. KAHN. That was based on an army of 100,000 men.

Mr. FREAR. But, Mr. Chairman, this paragraph has no reference to 100,000 men or 1,000,000 men. It says:

For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require it to be brought from a distance.

They might spend $100,000,000 on that item on the same argument in the judgment of these men who have reported or suggested these various items to the committee. Who are to determine the amount at this time when we are demobilizing men or seeking to do it, when we are trying to abandon some of these cantonments and posts? At a time when we have just had placed before us and passed a $6,000,000,000 revenue bill it is said the estimating officers wanted $12,000,000, and the committee advised the officers by saying "We can not give you $12,000,000, but we will give you $5,000,000," a reduction of about 60 per cent. For what? To include bringing a water supply 50 miles, if desired—to bring water down to any of these cantonments or Army posts. My inquiry is, Why should it be done this year any more than during any prior year? Why should this burden be put on the people this year more than any other year?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have just reduced the last item $38,000,000. It has been stated to the House that $214,000,000 has been invested in motor vehicles. It is needless to discuss the enormous waste in these motor vehicles. That is the same department which asks us to appropriate $5,000,000 for water and sewers. I ask you who is going to pay for these extraordinary expenditures? Here is a bill appropriating $1,117,000,000, as I said before, with one small page containing the entire report upon it. Think of it! Why does not the committee give us the information as other committees do on other bills? Then, when we ask about the necessity for the expense, what do we get? I cast no reflection on the members of the committee, who are acting on the advice of the officers who made the estimates, and the chairman of the committee says it is a "mere guess." He just made that statement to the committee. Of course it is a mere guess.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. No; not at this moment. I will later. This is the first time I have spoken on the bill, and I want to use my time. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interfere with any necessary appropriation, but we have not any information here on which to base the expenditure. I want to say that I would go as far as anyone in support of what the War Department has done in carrying on the war. I appreciate all that our Army has done to win the war, and during the war voted for everything, but now I believe we should economize.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Not unless you give me more time.

Mr. McKENZIE. We will do that. If the gentleman has no information, how does he have the courage to offer this amendment?

Mr. FREAR. Just because the gentleman from Illinois has failed to give us information, time after time, when he has risen to his feet and has attempted to do it. He has attempted to do it, but he has not given us any positive information. It is a guess even which comes from the chairman. We can not get the information from the committee, because the chairman of the committee says it is a mere guess, as we know it is. Then, why do you say you want $5,000,000 when it is a guess? I had much sympathy with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] last night when he was offering inquiries on this bill, which only has a one-page report for this, a billion-dollar bill. A few days ago we passed another bill appropriating $747,000,000, with an authorization of $400,000,000 beyond that. Who is going to pay all these enormous expenditures? The people; and we are asked to put a tax on them based on a mere guess. Now, I do not know about the necessity. If there is a necessity, it has not been shown. If this provision and the appropriation was good yesterday, it was good 10 years ago. And why this great increase at this particular time? You say we may have to go 50 miles away or 10 miles away to put in this water-supply proposition.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman offers an amendment to make this $2,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Is that a mere guess?

Mr. FREAR. A mere guess; and so was $12,000,000, first proposed to the committee; and then the committee guessed and cut it down to $5,000,000. Of course, $2,000,000 is a mere guess.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. KAHN. The committee guessed, because it realizes that we must have a supply of water for the various camps for an average of 500,000 men during the year. Before the war we only had 100,000 in the Army all told. We have to buy this water from the municipal water companies all over the Union where camps are located. That is the reason why the committee concluded that we would have to give the $5,000,000 that the committee decided on. But water is only one feature; there is the fire control which has to be established in cantonments, and they are going to be used for some years. The item includes a number of features, and the committee predicated their estimate on the number of men that we have to take care of.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama, read to us, and I kept track of the figures, $3,700,000 for this one item of water supplies, and $12,000,000 for the paragraph was the basis of that estimate. The committee cut it down to $5,000,000 for all purposes. The gentleman from California says we are estimating for 500,000 men a year. Well, I will say to him that some Members of this House are not willing to have 500,000 men for the Regular Army, and they want to demobilize the men as quickly as possible. The officers may want to keep them in camp, but we have requests from all over the country to let the men go home.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman recognizes the fact that the men when brought here from the other side have to be sent to the camps and have to remain until they are demobilized, and that during that time they have to drink water.

Mr. FREAR. That is true, but I do not suppose they are to be sent all over the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, pending that request, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that after five minutes debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Let me say that if the chairman and other members of the committee take my time I shall not have a chance to say much, but I am glad to yield to any member of the committee.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman know that the War Department sends these soldiers who come back from the other side to the various cantonments to be demobilized?

Mr. FREAR. That was the suggestion of the gentleman. I know a case where officers were brought back from the other side, landed at Hoboken, and told to pay their own way home.

Mr. KAHN. That was the case of an individual officer.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; of individual officers. Let them put the men in the first and nearest camp and demobilize them as soon as possible, and not send them to southern and western camps, where there is no water supply.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Well, now I want a few moments; you will not give me another five minutes under the restriction. You gentlemen have talked hour after hour, and this is the first time I have spoken on the bill.

Mr. KAHN. But the gentleman is making a misstatement.

Mr. FREAR. I have made no misstatement. I say it is true you can not send men to California and demobilize them. We want them demobilized as quickly as possible, and it is not necessary to spend $3,700,000 to get water supplies brought a good many miles to cantonments and camps, and we know it. That proposition is as sensible as a great many other propositions in this bill. Of course, I know no more about the necessity than does the chairman of the committee or the members of the committee. The committee has cut down the estimate of $12,000,000 to $5,000,000; why not cut it $3,000,000 less in this item and make it $2,000,000, as it was before? If we are going to enact legislation, put it at the amount it was before the war. We have got 10 times as much for this bill as we had prior to the war, and it is about time that we began to economize somewhere along the line.

Mr. McKENZIE. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FREAR. I would be willing for the gentleman to interrupt me if he could give me any information.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman can not, I am afraid, because the chairman could not do it and the gentleman from Illinois has not done it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wish to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin who I know desires to be fair——

Mr. FREAR. Quick, quick—give me the question—I have only five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The Committee on Military Affairs felt that we would not have 500,000 men in the Army from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920, and we therefore cut this appropriation.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; and we ought not to have over 100,000 men here, or 200,000 men in the Army, and the average man in this House if you give him a chance to vote will say that; and we are not going to get our men back from Europe and we know it—a million men will be there for many months to come. Yes; you will have them there on the first of July, and much longer, and we know it; no matter what promises are made on this floor, and we may be sure of it. I asked a member of the committee a question this morning whether it is not true that Gen. Foch asked Gen. Pershing to keep 1,000,000 men over there, and gentlemen shake their heads, that it is not true, but they do not know any more about it than I do. I hope it is not true and if true will not be done. We know this, that 175,000 men were demobilized in three months according to the statements of the Military Committee chairman, and at that rate it will take two years and a half to bring these men back from Europe—it is purely a matter of computation. We want the men back, we do not desire these big cantonments. We may want them for other purposes in the future, but the people to-day I feel sure do not care to spend $5,000,000 for water supply and for other purposes.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I would like to, but I can not yield. Think of the absurdity of coming to this House, an intelligent committee as you are—and we will not question the individual or collective capacity of the committee—and bringing in a one page report on a bill carrying $1,117,000,000, when we only appropriated $100,000,000 before the war!

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Ten times as much as it was before the war, and then when we ask what are the facts in a particular case, what do we learn? You read from the report and say: "This is the guess," and the guess here is $5,000,000 largely for a water supply. Let us leave out these new water supplies, bringing water from a long distance, and let us continue the work of demobilizing our troops, and reduce the military establishment as rapidly as possible. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman makes his comparison constantly with the peace establishment—the peace basis.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am sure the gentleman's sense of proportion does not warrant him in abiding by his own word.

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield for an argument.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think you can; I think you have proved it conclusively.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, well; the gentleman wants to make an argument in my time as other members of the committee do. I am asking for information and seeking to prevent the riot in expenditures which is apparent in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLOTHING AND CAMP AND GARRISON EQUIPAGE.

For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the purchase and manufacture of clothing for the Army, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army regulations; for payment for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipment and repair of equipment of laundries, dry-cleaning plants, salvage and sorting storehouses, hat-repairing shops, shoe-repair shops, clothing-repair shops, and garbage-reduction works; educational propaganda in connection with reclamation; for equipage, including authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers' and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment, and issue of housewives to the Army; for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizens' outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; to each enlisted man convicted by civil court for an offense resulting in confinement in a penitentiary or other civil prison; and to each enlisted man ordered interned by reason of the fact that he is an alien enemy, or, for the same reason, discharged without internment; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $4,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. VARE and Mr. KNUTSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the committee adopted an amendment curtailing the expenses in respect to the use of automobiles upon the part of officers, especially in the District of Columbia. Judging from my observations in Philadelphia and elsewhere, we ought to go considerably further in this curtailment of extravagance. I wish to read to the House a part of a letter from a soldier in France which I received from one of my constituents. He inclosed to me a letter written to him by his son, dated December 12, 1918. The son is in the Motor Transport Service. I wish to read a part of that son's letter:

To show you the waste, the commanding colonel, Hageiman, had a special car made, all but the engine. The whole body is aluminum; inside of the coupé is the best Russian calf leather, special heating apparatus, Goodyear cord tires all around, Cadillac eight motor. It certainly is a magnificent job; makes everything I have ever seen yet look poor. It is easily worth $9,000, and the whole car made by the men in the shops here—all privates, too, which shows the ability of the men working here. He can have all the luxury, and the men who do the work are compelled to live and eat like hogs. Just had a bath opened here. Been here since last April, and no washing or bathing facilities. Yet the colonel and all his officers can live like kings at the Government expense. What I have seen here convinces me this war has made a bunch of rich men and a bunch of thieves. It certainly is a crime to see all the waste where it is not necessary.

The young man who wrote that letter has been serving in France during the war.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have an amendment which I would like to offer to the bill, but after looking at it I am convinced that it is not germane. However, I introduced a bill covering the situation which I have in mind in relation to these soldiers, sailors, and marines who have been wounded. We are going to settle our moral obligations with the contractors, and I think we owe a moral obligation to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who were wounded or injured. I have introduced a bill to provide for the payment of certain sums of money to those who were injured in the line of duty.

We have voted to settle our moral obligation with the munition manufacturers and mineral producers who remained safely behind the firing line, and the question now is whether we are going to settle our moral obligation with the soldier who went 3,000 miles from home and went over the top and was injured. Will we be as good and generous to him as we have been to the fellows who remained at home?

The soldier asks nothing but a square deal at your hands. Soldiers freely offered their lives for their country, and now some are dead and have left dependents; some were wounded, lost arms, limbs, eyes, hearing. Some are nervous wrecks and will never recover their health. Some are blind and never will see again. Some will never be able to work and earn a living. Do not you think we owe a moral obligation to them that we ought to settle? Their bravery ended the war much sooner than it otherwise would have ended, and saved billions of dollars to this country. Will Congress be as generous to these maimed and wounded men as it has been to the contractors? Will we give these men help as freely as we voted to give $100,000,000 to the people of other countries? I hope so.

We have voted to settle our moral obligations with the munition manufacturers which will cost over a billion dollars. We have voted to settle our moral obligations with the wheat grower, and that will cost, so it is stated, another billion. We have voted to settle our moral obligations with the mine owners that will cost a good deal. Congress is getting so that it does not like to pass a bill that does not carry at least a billion dollars. How are we going to adjust the moral obligation we owe the man who lost his hand, his arm, his limb, his eyes? Are we going to settle with him?

I have introduced a bill that I hope will pass, that will give to each wounded soldier in addition to his war-risk insurance benefits sums ranging from $5,000 for total disability down to lesser sums for lesser injuries. This would give him an opportunity to set himself up in some business. This would give him an opportunity to buy a home or a farm located somewhere near civilization. This country can never repay these men for what they have done for their country, but we should go as far as we can in placing them statu quo.

Would anyone take the chances they took for $5,000? They did. It seems to me it is very poor pay for taking such chances. Many of these men left dependent widows and orphans. How are we going to settle our moral obligation to them? My idea is to pay to these injured men a lump sum as a gift to them for what they did, just as we are going to pay a lump sum to contractors for what they did do, but in some instances did not do.

There is talk of getting a farm and giving it to the soldier. How can a man with no legs operate a farm, or how can a man with no arms operate a farm?

I think people were under the apprehension that when their soldier relatives were killed they got the total amount of the insurance at once, but such is not the case. Let us give to the dependents of the soldier who died for his country the sum of $5,000. Let us give to the soldier who lost both legs or both arms or both eyes the sum of $5,000. Let us give the soldier who is totally disabled the sum of $5,000. Let us give the soldier who suffered a lesser loss other sums, and when we have done this we have in a small way paid a small sum on the moral obligation we owe the soldier who went over the top.

Had these men been in civil occupations they could have protected themselves against accidents and protected their families. Many of these wounded men will soon be discharged from the hospitals as nearly well as they ever will be. Are we going to throw them upon the world to compete with whole men? What they receive under the war-risk insurance will not be enough to keep them, and they will have to go to work, and they will have to compete with whole men.

It would be a national scandal if we settled our moral obligations with everybody but the man who went over the top. It is no time now to count the cost, for it would have cost more had they not turned the enemy back. They saved democracy; they saved civilization; they saved the honor of this Nation. I know of no more moral obligation this country owes than its debt to these immortal men. We can never pay it entirely; let us try to pay it in part.

The following is a copy of an act introduced by me to-day:

A bill to allow certain sums to soldiers, sailors, and marines who were injured in the line of duty.

Whereas Congress has now under consideration measures for the relief of manufacturers, contractors, and corporations of various and divers production and construction to compensate them for losses claimed by them through the unexpected signing of the armistice; and

Whereas the moral obligation we owe to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who went "over the top" in order to save not only our Nation but likewise the corporations now seeking adjustment of large claims: Therefore

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in addition to any sums paid or to be paid soldiers, sailors, and marines under an act entitled and known as the war-risk insurance act, or any other act, there shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated the following sums to soldiers and sailors and marines who were injured in the line of duty, and to the dependents of those who were killed in action or died while performing their duty:

First. To the dependents of a soldier, sailor, or marine who was killed in action the sum of $5,000.

Second. The following sums shall be paid for total or partial disability: For total disability, the sum of $5,000; for loss of both hands, the sum of $5,000; for loss of both feet, the sum of $5,000; for loss of sight of both eyes, the sum of $5,000; for loss of sight of one eye, the other having been lost before enlistment, the sum of $5,000; for loss of one hand and one foot, the sum of $4,000; for loss of hand or foot, the sum of $3,000; for loss of arm at or above the elbow or leg at or above the knee, the sum of $5,000; for loss of either a leg at the hip joint or an arm at the shoulder joint, or so near as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, the sum of $3,000; for loss of leg at hip joint, $3,000; loss of arm at shoulder joint, the sum of $3,000; for loss of or total disability of both hands, the sum of $5,000; for total disability in both feet, the sum of $3,000; for total disability in one hand and one foot, the sum of $4,000; for total disability in one arm or leg, the sum of $3,000; for total disability equivalent to loss of hand or foot, the sum of $3,000; incapacity to perform manual labor (first class), the sum of $5,000; incapacity to perform manual labor (second class), the sum of $4,000; frequent and periodical, not constant, aid and attendance, the sum of $4,000.

This act shall be carried into effect by the Secretary of the Treasury through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 33, lines 16 and 17, what is the necessity for the language, "educational propaganda in connection with reclamation"?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that that will not go out; and I would like to be heard for a minute, because I know something about what is being done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am seeking information; I withhold the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the gentleman going to make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless I can be convinced that it is really necessary.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not want to talk just to hear myself talk. If gentlemen are determined to make the point of order, it is useless to say anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am reserving it to obtain information which the gentleman from Minnesota has in his possession.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, Congress has been thinking about enacting legislation that will produce important benefits to the discharged soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy. The Secretary of the Interior has recommended a piece of legislation most comprehensive in outline. It is being considered at both ends of the Capitol, I believe. To promote this project is possible under this language, and work of this character is now being undertaken in a proper way. The purpose is to acquaint the soldiers with their rights and opportunities under such laws of the character indicated as will be passed.

Now, it is wholly ineffectual to enact legislation that is of the comprehensive character contemplated if the beneficiaries are never going to find out what their rights and privileges may be, and it seems to me that the work that is proposed to be done under this will be directly beneficial to the soldiers. The purpose is to do something of a practical character to help the returning soldiers. That is all I have to say. It calculates to bring to discharged soldiers and sailors the knowledge of the terms of the laws and the rights which they have under them. It is proposed to meet the men as they disembark, meet them in demobilizing camps and similar places, to inform them relative to the opportunities existing under contemplated legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand existing practice, the War Department has ample authority to bring to the attention of soldiers all orders, regulations, and other information they seek to convey?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This is, of course, extraordinary; this is not confined to the ordinary——

Mr. STAFFORD. This is propaganda; it is not information.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, that is true; but propaganda is nothing but information properly distributed.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It may be just the opposite.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the information furnished by the gentleman from Minnesota, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota make the point of order against the entire paragraph?

Mr. STAFFORD. Against the clause contained in lines 16 and 17, page 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page, 34, line 10, after the figures "$4,000,000," insert:

"Provided, That any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war may, upon honorable discharge and return to civil life, permanently retain one complete suit of outer uniform clothing, including the overcoat, and such articles of personal apparel and equipment as may be authorized, respectively, by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and may wear such uniform clothing after such discharge: Provided further, That the uniform above referred to shall include some distinctive mark or insignia to be prescribed, respectively, by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, such mark or insignia to be issued, respectively, by the War Department or Navy Department to all enlisted personnel so discharged. The word 'Navy' shall include the officers and enlisted personnel of the Coast Guard who have served with the Navy during the present war: And provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall apply to all persons who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the present war honorably discharged since April 6, 1917. And in cases where such clothing and uniforms have been restored to the Government on their discharge the same or similar clothing and uniform in kind and value as near as may be shall be returned and given to such soldiers, sailors, and marines."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order. This bill has passed the House once and has passed the Senate. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist upon his point of order?

Mr. DENT. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to make a statement if I can.

Mr. FOSTER. I demand the regular order. The bill has passed the House once.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Does the gentleman make the point of order of no quorum?

Mr. KNUTSON. I move to strike out the last word, and I withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order of no quorum.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is high time that we realize that the war is over, and the time for making huge expenditures without question or examination should be a thing of the past. For 19 months I sat in this Chamber and voted for every dollar deemed necessary by the administration for the successful prosecution of the war. We all did, for we wanted to do everything possible to gain a speedy and glorious victory. But, my friends, hostilities have ceased and the war, to all intents and purposes, is over. I want to vote every dollar necessary, but from now on I shall demand to be shown the necessity for every appropriation asked for. As the representative of a quarter of a million of free people who will have to help pay these enormous debts by sweat and toil and sacrifice, that is my plain duty, and it behooves every Member of the American Congress to help cut out all unnecessary appropriations.

Let us see what kind of a start we are making toward getting onto a peace footing. Here we are asked to make an appropriation of nearly $2,000,000,000 to be expended upon our Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. Think of it, gentlemen, $1,916,000,000, or more than the entire cost of maintaining the Government during the year preceding our entrance into the war. We are also asked to authorize a standing army of 500,000 men and 28,000 officers. True, it is only to be temporary, or, at least, we are so told; but, my friends, I have noticed that most, if not all, of these temporary arrangements become permanent.

We have to-day in this country a powerful clique who wish to perpetuate militarism in the United States. A large standing Army means what? It means the annual expenditure of millions of dollars that could be better used in building good roads and for other internal improvements; also in reducing our enormous national debt.

My friends, the American Army has been Prussianized, and it fairly reeks with injustice. Within the past two days Congress has been wrought to a white heat over the astonishing revelations of injustice and brutality existing in the courts of the Army as made before the Senate Military Committee by Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army. His testimony showed that a most glaring condition of injustice exists, and I desire in my brief time to refer to some of them, as reported from the hearing by a Washington newspaper:

DEATH FOR REFUSING TO DRILL.

Here are a few, not isolated, cases cited by Gen. Ansell as disclosing the system of punishment followed by the Army during the war:

The death penalty was imposed upon an American soldier in France who pleaded guilty to a charge of refusing to obey an order to drill. The soldier insisted he was ill and physically unable to obey. The military authorities in France demanded execution of the man, but he was saved by Executive clemency.

A court-martial sitting in this country ordered the death penalty inflicted upon a soldier who went to the bedside of his dying father without leave. He returned to duty as soon as his father died. The man was saved by interference from Washington.

FORTY YEARS OVER CIGARETTES.

A sentence of 40 years was imposed upon a young soldier by a court-martial a few days ago because he refused to give up a package of cigarettes to his superior officer, a second lieutenant. "A company row" was the way Gen. Ansell characterized the incident, blaming the officer practically as much as the soldier.

A soldier convicted of having a pass in his possession was sentenced to dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of pay, and imprisonment for 10 years. This was later reduced to three years. The soldier has already served two months, and Gen. Ansell recommended the suspension of the remainder of his sentence.

Dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of pay, and 40 years' imprisonment, afterwards reduced to 10 years, was the sentence pronounced upon a man for absenting himself without leave.

FIFTEEN YEARS FOR SEEING SICK BABY.

A private who went home without leave to see his wife and sick baby, in destitute circumstances, was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. This was later reduced to three years.

While the Secretary of War was insisting upon a strict adherence to the system which made such sentences possible, according to Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, a policy of the utmost leniency was being applied to "conscientious objectors" who refused to fight.

Senator FRELINGHUYSEN told the committee he was receiving large numbers of letters from troops in the camps complaining that the conscientious objectors were being dealt with lightly; that they were being discharged and sent home with "a new suit of clothes and a bouquet in their buttonhole."

WANT BAKER TO EXPLAIN.

"What has been the policy of the War Department toward the conscientious objectors?" asked Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

"May I be excused from answering?" asked Gen. Ansell. "It would be embarrassing."

"The Secretary of War can tell us about it; we'll have him up here and ask him," Senator CHAMBERLAIN said.

"Maybe he'll have objections," commented Senator KNOX, of Pennsylvania.

"Conscientious, I suppose," observed Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

Gen. Ansell's testimony brought to light a bitter feud which has been raging in the War Department for many months over the powers of the Judge Advocate General's Office to review and modify the findings of courts-martial.

DISPUTE OVER AUTHORITY.

Gen. Ansell asserted that the cases of injustice became so numerous and flagrant during the war that he made a careful reexamination of the powers of his office and discovered an old law, passed in 1862, which he interpreted as giving him authority of revision and review.

Gen. Crowder, the regular Judge Advocate General, disagreed with him in this view, holding that the Judge Advocate General had no such authority, and the Secretary of War sustained the position of Gen. Crowder. Gen. Ansell presented several briefs to uphold his contention and admitted that he had found it necessary "to break away from the practice which the strict ruling of the Secretary would have required."

ACCUSES STAFF OF ABSOLUTISM.

In one of his briefs he charged the General Staff with "professional absolutism" and called the system of dispensing justice "an anachronism."

"That is rather broad language," the general said to the committee, "but justice required that I fully state my views."

What finally forced the issue in the War Department over the powers of the Judge Advocate General's Office in court-martial cases was the instance of 12 noncommissioned officers dishonorably discharged and sentenced to imprisonment of three to seven years each because of a minor dispute with a young lieutenant just out of West Point, the general explained. He declared the procedure in this case "unfair."

ANSELL SHOCKED BY SENTENCES.

The general told the committee that the Judge Advocate General's Office was "full of strange inconsistencies," and that its practices were "without thoughtful consideration of the law."

Gen. Ansell stated that he could recall several instances where his recommendations in court-martial cases were turned down by the General Staff and the Secretary of War. The courts-martial, he said, were dominated by the commanding officer which convened them.

"Sentences have been imposed," said Gen. Ansell, "that have shocked my every sense of justice. Some of them have reached the very height of injustice, bearing no reasonable relationship to the offense committed."

SYSTEM CREATES BOLSHEVISTS.

Gen. Ansell related the case of a young soldier, enlisted on October 28, who was tried by court-martial on November 23, less than 30 days after he had entered the Army. The soldier had been detailed to kitchen duty. A second lieutenant caught him smoking a cigarette, which is against the rules while a man is on kitchen duty. He ordered him to turn over the entire pack of cigarettes. The soldier demurred in rather vigorous language. He was tried by court-martial and sentenced to 40 years' imprisonment.

"Any system that will permit a thing like that is absolutely un-American," burst out Senator THOMAS. "It will make Bolshevists out of all that man's relatives."

Gen. Ansell said he hoped when the convening authority saw his recommendation in the case he would take some rather drastic action. But, he added, he knew of an equally flagrant case where the court refused to reduce below 10 years an original sentence of 40 years.

MEN EXECUTED WITHOUT APPEAL.

While the controversy was raging in the War Department over the extent of the Judge Advocate General's authority, men were actually being executed without the slightest opportunity for an appeal for clemency. As an instance of this, Gen. Ansell cited the case of the Houston riots. Negro troops were tried in several groups. The first group of 15 was tried and executed a few hours after sentence of death had been passed. No notice of the action of the court-martial was given to the Judge Advocate General's office.

The general was asked for a comparison between the American court-martial methods and those of the armies of other nations.

He declared they were much harsher than those of Great Britain and France; in fact, he said, they were harsher than any except the armies of Russia, Prussia, and Spain. He called the methods "intolerably severe."

DEATH FOR VISITING DYING FATHER.

When Gen. Ansell gave his list of horrible examples of injustice in the findings of courts-martial, he was frequently interrupted by indignant outbursts from Senators. One convening officer, he told the committee, gave himself credit with great leniency because he reduced from 40 to 10 years the sentence of a soldier convicted of being absent without leave for several days.

"Very tender-hearted gentleman," commented Senator THOMAS.

The general related in detail the case of a young soldier who went home without leave to see his dying father. He hurried back to camp as soon as his father died, and was sentenced to death. The sentence was not carried out because of Executive clemency.

MOST INJUSTICES IN UNITED STATES.

"You should have court-martialed the court-martial," said Senator KNOX.

"The court-martial couldn't see the human facts behind that case," said Gen. Ansell.

"What ever became of that boy?" Gen. Ansell was asked. He didn't know.

"His mother probably has joined the Bolsheviki," said Senator THOMAS.

"And his father probably has, too—in another world," commented Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

Most of the instances of injustice occurred in the United States, but the general cited some from France, too.

THIRSTED FOR MORE POWER.

He told the committee the American military authorities in France were dissatisfied with their powers in court-martial proceedings and wanted the War Department to enlarge the number of cases under which the death penalty could be inflicted without reference to Washington.

Two men in France were tried for sleeping at the post of duty. They had been on duty all night for five consecutive nights and could not sleep in daytime because wood was being chopped in their dugout for the commanding officer's quarters. They were sentenced to death and were saved only by the narrowest margin because of the insistence of the military authorities in France on carrying out the sentence.

DEATH SENTENCE ON OWN PLEA.

Two other men were sentenced to death because they refused to obey orders. One of them refused to obey an order to shoulder his rifle for drill. He declared he was physically unable to obey the order because of illness. The other man merely pleaded guilty and was sentenced to death on his own plea, the general stated.

The Judge Advocate General's office has examined between 18,000 and 20,000 court-martial cases.

We went into this war to "make the world safe for Democracy." Democracy, indeed! That phase, as employed by the War Department, is an empty and meaningless one. According to Gen. Ansell, who, by the way, appears to be one of the very few men high in military authority who possesses a heart, the court procedure in our Army is much harsher than in that of Great Britain and France; in fact, it is comparable only with that of Russia, Prussia, and benighted Spain. A fine comparison, indeed, and one that is only too true, I fear.

My friends, this bill may pass because it carries some very necessary items of appropriation; but if the proposition to provide for an Army of 508,000 men and 28,000 officers were put up to this Congress in a separate measure it would fail of passage by a large majority. The American people fear militarism above all things; and if this Congress votes to fasten it upon them there will be many new faces in the Sixty-seventh Congress. Militarism is the one thing we went into this war to crush. They feel that our geographical situation is such that a National Guard Army is the thing for us. It is more democratic and is devoid of the heartlessness of the Regular American Army. The War Department has studiously tried to do away with the National Guard, and it has about succeeded in its purpose. Secretary of War Baker, that man who has been heralded over the land as a man of the people, is one of the greatest autocrats in the annals of American history. His heart swells with sympathy for the "conscientious objector," but the fighting men who went through all the horrors of the Gehenna in France can appeal to him in vain.

The time has arrived to democratize the American Army—better still, replace it with the National Guard, so far as possible. If we do that we will make an important step in retrenchment of our expenditures.

But, gentlemen, I have been digressing. I started out to speak of the enormous expenditures we have been making and the necessity for pruning all appropriations down to the bone. I propose to do my share by my vote. I voted against the appropriation of $100,000,000, which it was alleged was to be used to feed the starving people of Europe and which has been charged was to be used to relieve the food manipulators. I voted against the Naval appropriation bill for the reason that it provided for the needless expenditure of several hundred million dollars, and if I live I shall vote against this bill, if the provision for an army of a half million men is retained. The entire bill is largely guesswork on the part of the War Department. It seeks unnecessary authorizations to buy cantonment and camp sites, automobiles, and God knows what not. Right here in Washington we daily see scores of Army automobiles—yes, even limousines—containing high officers, going about at break-neck speed, a soldier at the wheel. All this is a useless expense. We have enough camps and cantonments to fill our every need. If these officers wish to go joy riding, let them do as the rest do—hire taxis or furnish their own.

There is another matter of which I would speak. Mr. Chairman, there are in this country thousands and thousands of young men in the Army who are needed at home to put in the crops, to work in shops and stores, and many more who gave up their studies to don the uniform. It is my firm conviction that the boys under arms in this country should be demobilized forthwith. They wish to leave the service, and their retention is a useless expense and works a grave injustice. I have in mind the case of a young man stationed in a southern camp who held a responsible position in a bank before entering the service. Some two months ago the officers of the bank petitioned for his discharge, saying that his services were badly needed in the bank, and it would not be possible to hold his old position open for him much longer. The application was rejected, the young man's position has been filled by another, and when he returns from the service he will find his job gone. I ask you, Is that giving our soldiers a square deal? Another case: A widow living on a large farm in central Minnesota. Before the war she and her two sons ran this farm. One of the boys was drafted, the other remained on the farm. Last fall the latter died from influenza. She wrote to me asking if her soldier boy could not be discharged so that he could return home and help with the farm work. I immediately wrote his commanding officer but to no avail. The War Department tells us that under circular No. 77 such cases will be favorably acted upon. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the officers in command want to hold onto the boys so they can hold onto their jobs, and they can get away with these tactics so long as we continue to make appropriations to carry on the work.

If we are a democracy, let us proclaim it in deeds rather than by empty, meaningless phrases. Let us also have a little of that "pitiless publicity" of which the Democrats spoke with so much feeling during the campaign of 1912 and of which we have seen so very, very little since March 4, 1913. Let the administration remember what Abraham Lincoln said about fooling the people all the time. It still holds true, and the day of reckoning is not far off. Personally, I will welcome with all my heart the day when the mask is torn aside and we shall behold things just as they are. Let us give just a little more consideration to the American people, even if it be at the expense of aliens.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of the item "$4,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 10, strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I trust I may have at least one minute without being disturbed by the members of the committee, who, I know, understand all about the subject, according to their own judgment.

We have $4,000,000 proposed in this paragraph. The last item that was agreed to first asked for $12,000,000, and it was cut to $5,000,000 by the committee. This paragraph provides for educational propaganda in connection with reclamation, and for equipages and including the issuance of toilet articles, barber tools, and so forth. And turning to page 34 we find:

Each enlisted man convicted by civil court for an offense resulting in confinement in a penitentiary or other civil prison, and to each enlisted man ordered interned by reason of the fact that he is an alien enemy.

I do not know whether or not this relates to the item for the support of the men who have been confined in Leavenworth, and concerning whom the Senate committee is trying to ascertain what they were sent there for. I do not accept without question the judgment of a department that permits men to be sent to Leavenworth and kept there over and above the protest of the man who wanted to pass upon the courts-martial's findings, Gen. Ansell. I do not accept their statement without some question in my mind. Men have been sent to Leavenworth for 15 years, aye, practically for life, for trivial offenses by these same officials, and the War Department, according to the investigation, has refused to permit a review, excepting through certain channels, and that investigation is going on to-day, and my attention has been called to it by the fact that men who are at Leavenworth——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. For a question.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has the gentleman ever heard of a single case that has been reviewed and the sentence imposed reversed?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know as I have. I read on the floor of the House the other day of a case where a boy went home to see his dying mother. I read it here. And a man who served on the court-martial wrote me—a man who served at Chateau-Thierry and bravely fought there—that he was the only man that voted against sending the boy to Leavenworth for 15 years. The Senate is revealing these cases constantly. I have asked to have this item of $4,000,000 cut in two. There may be a guess coming, as was suggested. But with a bill that is ten times as large as any bill prior to the war, it seems to me we are entitled at this time to question some of these items.

Let me read briefly just one paragraph from a letter which came to Mr. GALLIVAN from Germany, and which comes from two boys from my home State, who wrote him complimenting him upon his work here on the floor of the House, and which has resulted in good. They say:

We have been in France over one year and have been at the front from May, 1918, until the signing of the armistice. We realize that all can not be the first to reach the United States, and we are willing to abide our time in the true American spirit if we knew that a fair system of discharge was established whereby those longest in service and who have suffered the hardest experiences may be the first discharged.

The policy seems to the contrary. These officers suggest it is an honorary distinction with the army of occupation or Rainbow troops. But I think I can safely say they want to get home and can not get home. Letters come every day from relatives asking for their return, and from men themselves. The policy seems to be to hold these Wisconsin and Michigan men and these Illinois men, the Rainbow Division, over there as a mark of distinction and honor. They have served their country and have helped to win the war. They fought well. They should be brought home as a testimonial of their distinguished service and among the first troops that should be returned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HORSES FOR CAVALRY, ARTILLERY, ENGINEERS, ETC.

For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts for officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges and for the Indian Scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $100,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster Corps and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horse below the standard set by Army Regulations for Cavalry and Artillery horses, except when purchased as remounts or for instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for polo ponies except for West Point Military Academy, and such ponies shall not be used at any other place.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to obtain more information than was given by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], when a question relative to the session was asked by the Member from New York.

I do not understand why $100,000 should be appropriated to buy horses, when there are now 90,000 for sale, as the Government advertised. Let me read two or three lines:

The animals offered for sale are being disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder, and sales are being conducted on account of the fact that the surplus on hand is far in excess of the number required for the needs of the Army during times of peace.

One bureau claims in time of peace we do not require more horses. And yet at the same time the Military Committee has reported a bill carrying over a billion dollars for war purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a fact, I may state from my own personal knowledge, that the Government has sold thousands of horses for about one-quarter, and sometimes even more than one-quarter, of what it paid for them.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I have no doubt of that. We are appropriating $100,000 to buy horses, possibly from the same persons who purchase them from the Government sales.

Mr. DENT. I can answer the question, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DENT. It was not intended, although the language is carried authoritatively for the purpose—because that is the usual language in the bill—to make any purchase. The reason the committee limited this appropriation to $100,000 was simply to expend that money for breeding purposes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It does not say so. It gives the Secretary of War authority to buy horses at the camps. He can expend all of the $100,000 if he deems wise, and buy back horses that are sold by the Government. It does not seem to me that the committee has given much attention to the philosophy of political economy.

Mr. DENT. Of course, the Secretary of War could do a lot of things here that he ought not to do and will not do.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for five minutes in my own right, if the gentleman has finished.

Some years ago it was almost impossible to get good Army horses, and therefore the military officers in charge of that branch of the service negotiated with the farmers of the country to raise for the Army horses that could be utilized for military purposes. They told the farmers that if they raised the right kind of horses the Government would buy them when they became 1 year old. After they were bought, the colts were sent to the various remount stations of the War Department and trained for military purposes.

Now, this provision is intended simply to enable the Government of the United States to carry out its promise to the farmers. That is all that there is in this provision. Under the agreement that the Army officers have made these horses will be tendered to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Under what authority did the Army officials or the War Department enter into contracts?

Mr. KAHN. As I recall, about the time that the question of securing military horses became acute there was a provision inserted in the Army appropriation bill, or some other bill, which allowed the officials of the Government to enter into agreements to buy the colts. What is more, some public-spirited gentlemen turned over to the Government a number of valuable stallions that could be loaned to the farmers for breeding these various horses.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I deny that there is any such contract with the Government.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If my colleague will permit me, there is a provision carried in the regular annual Agricultural appropriation bill which takes care of the breeding stations. There is one in my district, at Weybridge, Vt., and that seeks to furnish suitable horses of the Morgan type for military purposes.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I believe the item has been carried in the appropriation bill for allowing the breeding of those horses, and the War Department has been getting the colts for military purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This is to correct an error in the bill. On page 34, line 21, I think the word "purchases" should be changed to the word "purchased."

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a misprint.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that the word "purchases," in line 21 of page 34, be changed to the word "purchased."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 34, line 21, strike out the word "purchases" and insert the word "purchased."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer, which will take 10 minutes if I can get the extension of time.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. DENT. Then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. DENT. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I think I shall need 10 minutes if the chairman can let me have it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will make it 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama amends his request and asks that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, a few days ago I read into the RECORD a copy of some resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of my home city, Grand Rapids, calling for the immediate recall of the American troops in Russia. I hold in my hand some petitions signed by between 600 and 700 citizens of Holland, Mich., which is also in my congressional district, along the same line. I will not ask to have the names on these petitions inserted in the RECORD, but I would like to read into the RECORD the caption of the petition. I read:

We, the undersigned parents and citizens of this country, respectfully petition the United States Government that it use every possible means for the speedy return of our soldier boys who are stationed in Russia. We are interested in their welfare, and realize that under present conditions in that country, our boys being outnumbered by the opposition, they are not able to stand the strain. We sincerely trust that the Government will do its utmost to heed our request.

As I said, there are something over 600 signers to these petitions. The State of Michigan is unusually interested in the American forces in Russia because the bulk of the forces there come from our State, and a great many of them from the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. It is a matter in which we are so much interested that I take this way of bringing it to the attention of Congress.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman inform me whether mail communication is at all frequent; for instance, between constituencies in Michigan and the American troops in Russia?

Mr. MAPES. My understanding is that the Red Cross says there is mail going in and out twice a week. But the fact is I have received many letters from the parents of the boys over there saying that they have not heard from their boys for months and months.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If a letter from Michigan went out, when would an answer be anticipated?

Mr. MAPES. It is very difficult to tell. It would take several months at best before an answer would be received.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman permit me to read just briefly from Frazer Hunt's report? He was sent over to Russia by the Chicago Tribune. In his report he says:

The American troops were put under an absolute imperialistic command, being handled in a way that was against every tradition of the Army and country. They were put to doing a king's business, and to do whatever task was assigned to them by the British.

The resolution introduced in the Senate yesterday on this subject lost out by a tie vote, the Vice President voting against it.

Mr. MAPES. I am familiar with the report referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why does not the gentleman have it inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. FREAR. I shall be very glad.

Mr. KEARNS. Why not have these boys brought back from Russia?

Mr. MAPES. If there was any way of getting a resolution before the House to that effect I would like to have it considered. As the matter stands now, it is entirely in the hands of the President. I have considered the constitutional power of the President to send them there. I suppose he has the power and the right to send them there as Commander in Chief of the Army, and certainly if he had the right to send them there he has the right to bring them out.

Mr. KEARNS. We have not declared war against Russia, have we?

Mr. MAPES. No; and if we could get Congress to declare some policy on the subject, the President might be inclined to follow it.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will yield, I have also here a list of the casualties among the American troops in Russia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. It is obviously out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, can a point of order be made against an amendment until it is read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Speaker has decided that where it is apparent from what has been read that an amendment is out of order the point of order may be made before the whole amendment has been read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order, so that the matter can be discussed?

Mr. GORDON. I will not. There has been altogether too much time wasted on irrelevant matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this identical amendment was offered last night and held out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Page 35, line 14, after the word "place" insert:

"That article 11 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 11. Appointment of judge advocates: For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a judge advocate. No person shall be appointed judge advocate for a general court-martial unless at the time of his appointment he is an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department, except that where an officer of that department is not available the authority appointing the court shall appoint an officer of the Army recommended by the Judge Advocate General as specially qualified, by reason of legal learning and experience, to act as judge advocate. The officer appointed as judge advocate for a general court-martial shall not be a member of the court, but shall sit with it at all times in open session and shall fairly, impartially, and in a judicial manner perform the following duties and such others not inconsistent herewith as may be prescribed by the President in virtue of article 38 of the Articles of War.

"'(a) Rule upon all questions of law properly arising in the proceedings;

"'(b) Advise the court and the convening authority of any legal deficiency in the constitution and composition of the court or in the charge before it for trial;

"'(c) At the conclusion of the case and before the court proceeds to deliberate upon the finding sum up the evidence in the case and discuss the law applicable to it, unless both he and the court consider it unnecessary;

"'(d) Take care, equally with the court, that the accused does not suffer any disadvantage in consequence of his position as such, or of his ignorance or incapacity to present his own case, and for that purpose the judge advocate, with the permission of the court, may call and examine such witnesses as may appear to him necessary or desirable to elicit the truth.

"'His rulings and advice, given in the performance of his duties and made of record, shall govern the court-martial.

"'If the judge advocate dies, or from illness or any cause whatever is unable to attend, the court shall adjourn and another judge advocate shall be appointed by the proper authority, who shall act as judge advocate for the residue of the trial or until the judge advocate returns.'

"SEC. 2. That article 17 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 17. Appointment of prosecutors: For each general or special court-martial the authority appointing the court shall appoint a prosecutor, and for each general court-martial one or more assistant prosecutors when necessary. The prosecutor of a general or special court-martial shall prosecute in the name of the United States and shall, under the direction of the court, prepare the record of its proceedings. Such prosecutor may be an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department. In all court-martial proceedings the accused shall have the assistance of and be represented by counsel of his own selection. Such counsel may be either a civilian lawyer or an officer of the Army. If military counsel be not selected by the accused, the court shall assign military counsel to assist in his defense if such counsel be reasonably available.'

"SEC. 3. That articles 22, 30, 33, and 116 of the Articles of War are hereby amended by substituting the word 'prosecutor' for the words 'judge advocate' wherever they appear in the said articles, and by substituting the words 'prosecutor or any assistant prosecutor of a general or special court-martial' for the words 'The judge advocate or any assistant judge advocate of a general or special court-martial' wherever they appear in the said articles.

"SEC. 4. That if the authority authorized to appoint general courts-martial has an officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department present for duty on his staff, he shall not refer any charge to a general court-martial for trial unless the said officer of the Judge Advocate General's Department shall indorse in writing upon the charge that in his opinion an offense made punishable by the Articles of War is charged with legal sufficiency against the accused, and that it has been made to appear to him that there is prima facie proof that the accused is guilty of the offense charged.

"SEC. 5. That article 18 of the Articles of War is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'ART. 18. Challenges: Members of a general or special court-martial may be challenged by the accused, but only for cause stated to the court. The court shall determine the relevancy and validity thereof, and shall not receive a challenge to more than one member at a time: Provided, That if the accused at any time before the arraignment shall file in the proceedings an affidavit of prejudice alleging specific grounds to show that the court by reason of matters touching its constitution or composition can not do justice, the court shall proceed no further in the case, but shall report the matter to the appointing authority for his decision.'

"SEC. 6. That when a court-martial shall find the accused not guilty upon all charges and specifications it shall not reconsider, nor shall the appointing authority direct it to reconsider, its findings; but the president of the court or the summary court shall immediately inform the accused and the officer by whose authority he may be in custody of his acquittal, and such officer shall thereupon immediately release the accused from custody, unless he is in custody for reasons other than the pendency of the charges of which he has been acquitted.

"SEC. 7. That section 1199, Revised Statutes of the United States, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1199. The Judge Advocate General shall receive, revise, and cause to be recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions, and perform such other duties as have been performed heretofore by the Judge Advocate General of the Army. The power to revise the proceedings of courts-martial conferred upon the Judge Advocate General by this section shall be exercised only for the correction of errors of law which have injuriously affected the substantial rights of an accused, and shall include—

"'(a) Power to disapprove a finding of guilty and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when the record requires such finding;

"'(b) Power to disapprove the whole or any part of a sentence;

"'(c) Power, upon the disapproval of the whole of a sentence, to advise the proper convening or confirming authority of the further proceedings that may and should be had, if any. If upon revision, under this section, all the findings and the sentence be disapproved because of error of law in the proceedings, the convening or confirming authority may lawfully order a new trial by another court-martial.

"'Sentences involving death, dismissal, or dishonorable discharge from the service shall not be executed pending revision. If in any case a sentence though valid shall appear upon revision to be unduly severe, the Judge Advocate General shall make a report and recommendation for clemency, with the reasons therefor, to the President or the military authority having power to remit or mitigate the punishment.'

"SEC. 8. That the Judge Advocate General of the Army shall prepare and submit to Congress, at the earliest practicable date, a revision of the Articles of War consistent with the provisions of this act, and shall also prepare and submit to Congress a draft of regulations providing for the procedure of general courts-martial.

"SEC. 9. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

No one but an incurable optimist would insist on trying to amend the military bill now under consideration so long as it is apparent that the administration is not in a mood to do anything to assist the common, ordinary doughboy; but I insist on coming up smiling every time the administration steam roller flattens me out, secure in the knowledge that after March 4 this "outfit" will receive a good many new replacements, and that after March 4, 1921, there will be two or three platoons of replacements here that will have some sympathy for the men in the fighting branches of the service.

It is easy for me to understand the reason for the lack of interest that this administration has in the doughboy, because, so far as I have been able to find out, and I am familiar with the facts, not one relative of anyone connected with this administration was ever allowed to become one.

At that point I want to draw a distinction between the administration and the boys from the great southern part of the United States, because the flower of the South enlisted in the Army just as soon as war was declared. They did not care what war it was, but wanted to fight on the side of the United States against any enemy, and the record will show that these fighting southern boys were real men and patriots. The records are the same from every State. Time is too short to mention them all, but I want to call attention to the Fourth Alabama; a fighting outfit which took a great deal of boche artillery at St. Mihiel. These boys just loved to fight, and were so full of vitality that if they could find no one else to argue with they would dispute among themselves. It has even been said, and I believe truthfully, that they threw offensive French hand grenades at each other just to keep in training for the big "parties." I saw a bunch of these Alabama boys at Base Hospital 23 at Vittel, and the only thing that worried them at that hospital was the fear that they would not be able to get back into the fighting line. This was just as true of the boys from Virginia, the Carolinas, Mississippi, and every southern State, and no man who ever saw them operate could fail to realize why it took the North so long to subdue the South—it was necessary to smother it by numbers. [Applause.]

The flower of the South was in the war, and the families of the names that are familiar among the Confederate veterans were all represented. The sons and brothers of governors, Members of Congress, and State officials were there, and I love them and praise them for the good things that they did. [Applause.]

Sometime when the soldiers of the North and the soldiers of the South are gathered together in the organization, which they will inevitably form to keep alive their recollections of this great war, I hope some men from the North will open the doors of that organization to the daddies of these southern boys who fought for the Confederacy, because their blood helped to win this war; and then I hope that some soft-voiced southern boy will open the door to the members of the G. A. R. who fought for the Union; and then we can see these gray-haired men in their fraternity of spirit fighting again the battles of liberty with their sons. [Applause.]

But, I repeat, that it is impossible to get anything from this administration for the doughboy, because no son or relative of anyone intimately connected with this administration was allowed to fight. This is a broad statement, and I am waiting here now for any of these spokesmen who always represent the administration to point out one relative of anyone closely connected with this administration who was there or who appears on any casualty list. Facts are facts, and you might as well meet them, and it is a shame that these clean-cut American boys were prevented by their fathers or mothers and the administration here at Washington from getting into the fight as they would have preferred to have done. It is an outrage that they were not permitted to make the same record that the rest of the boys of this country could make. Some of the relatives of the wives of the Cabinet officers were wonderful men and performed wonderful service, and I desire to eliminate them from this statement.

One of the Cabinet members who has been very prolific in his statements that the world must be made safe for democracy allowed his son to chase submarines on Chesapeake Bay, and finally, on September 3, landed at Bordeaux, France, and was sent to a town 40 miles from there for training. I know this boy, and he is a real boy and wanted to get in it and fight; but would they let him? I should say not. Within a week after his arrival that great colonel of the American Expeditionary Forces, Col. House, wired for him to come to Paris and go on the colonel's staff. His pass expired in a few days, and he returned to his outfit, but again this doughty colonel ordered him to Paris, and after a short trip to Germany to secure souvenirs he is now carefully guarding the person of the colonel from any intrusion.

Another bright and capable son of a Cabinet member has been retained in this country and not even allowed to put to sea. I know of that young man, and know that he would be a fighting man if he had the chance. His father or mother or the administration were careful to see that he was never taken on a destroyer or allowed to get in danger. Yet, to be fair, I will say that there is one exception, in the son-in-law of our President, who enlisted in the Y. M. C. A., and, if I remember correctly, was somewhere in France for a week or two, and the newspaper reports that a shell fell within a few yards of him, greatly jeopardizing his future career.

And then to expect that this administration would do anything for the doughboy except to preach to him. Why, they would not even allow my friend Ollie Newman, one of the bravest young men that ever wore the uniform, and whom you all remember as a former Commissioner of the District of Columbia, to get within smell of powder. They sent him as the official chaperon of the President's daughter when she began singing for the doughboys.

There surely were some rough spots in this war for the poor doughboy, and he will never forget it.

I dislike to criticize, because it is so easy; but I can not help but realize that there are but two royal families in the world who never suffered nor appeared in the casualty lists—one was the royal family of Germany and the other the royal and reigning families of the United States. If I am wrong, I hope some one will stop me and set me right.

I was not allowed to offer the amendment reforming court-martial procedure which I desired to offer, and I will close simply by saying that if these official gentlemen are not willing to take the chances, or allow their sons to take their chances in the war, they ought to allow the men and their relatives who were interested in this war and took some part in it to have reform in the court-martial procedure in the United States. It is a vital thing. Some of you may have read the testimony given before a Senate committee by Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, of the Judge Advocate General's office, a few days ago. I simply want to say that he did not go far enough in his statement, and I want to serve notice at this time that if anyone in the War Department or anywhere else takes exception to his statement or desires to start any course of action which will bring any punishment upon Gen. Ansell, there is one man, in addition to a lot of others in this Congress, who will resent it and will see that appropriate action is taken. [Applause.]

Any time that under that system of procedure a soldier can be sentenced to death or to 40 years' imprisonment for refusing to drill, the system should be remedied. When a poor boy is absent without leave for a few days to see his dying father, and can be sentenced to 40 years in the penitentiary for that offense, that system should be changed. When a poor boy who has only been in the service 23 days refuses to turn over a package of cigarettes to a second lieutenant who has no right to them, and gets sentenced to 40 years' imprisonment for that, that system ought to be changed. That second lieutenant had no more right to ask for that package of cigarettes than I would have to go over to Uncle JOE CANNON and try to pry out of him against his will the cigar that I know he has in his pocket. When a poor private soldier can be sentenced to 40 years in the penitentiary because he happened to have in his pocket a pass that belonged to some other boy, that system ought to be changed.

Whenever you can sentence a man to 15 years in the penitentiary for going home to see his sick baby, that system ought to be changed. These are facts and only a small part of them, and we ought to act now while these men are in Fort Leavenworth, although I am prohibited by the administration from bringing in an amendment before the House so that we can send some little ray of hope to the boys confined there. They will get no relief except that which will come to them by the commission appointed by the Secretary of War.

I am not attacking the Secretary of War, for I do not think he is responsible for the system. The system grew up and made it possible for these boys to be sentenced, and makes it possible for thousands of other boys in France and the United States to be sentenced as these men were. Why? Because the administration which controls the legislation at this time will not let it come before this House for a vote. And so you will never get done hearing of this amendment, and the amendments introduced yesterday for the good of the fighting men will plague you until 1920, and you will all be so sorry they were not considered that you will wish you had never heard of them before. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 34, line 20, strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "ten thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Page 34, line 20, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because there has been no evidence that the Government has written contracts with farmers or breeders of horses to purchase animals for remounts. It has been stated by a distinguished Member of the House that such a contract does not exist. We have for sale at Camp Fort Bliss 5,702 horses; at Camp Bowie, 2,456 horses; at Camp Hovey, 3,811 horses; and thousands more at 26 other camps. This amendment will save $90,000 to the taxpayers. It will not be very much, but it will be a commencement in the proper direction toward economy, and will leave $10,000 that can be utilized for the purchase of horses for special need. Therefore I hope my amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DENT) there were 33 ayes and 18 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BARRACKS AND QUARTERS.

For barracks, quarters, stables, storehouses, magazines, administration of office buildings, sheds, shops, and other buildings necessary for the shelter of troops, public animals, and stores, and for administration purposes, except those pertaining to the Coast Artillery; for construction of reclamation plants; for constructing and repairing public buildings at military posts; for hire of employees; for rental of the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, on duty with the troops at posts and stations where no public quarters are available; of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, including enlisted men of the Regular Army Reserve, retired enlisted men, and members of the enlisted Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty; for grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and for buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops, for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes; for the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War; for wall lockers in permanent barracks and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents, and for the National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $4,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. FREAR. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what is the necessity for constructing public buildings at military posts?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 21, page 34, the words "constructing and."

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and make another.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the entire paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the chairman what is the necessity, on page 36, line 6, "for ground for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and for buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops," and so forth? I assume that that means in addition to what has already been acquired. Are they going to build more cantonments?

Mr. DENT. No; this is only intended for repairs.

Mr. WALSH. But the bill does not say for repairs.

Mr. DENT. The hearings so state it.

Mr. WALSH. I know; but the bill is the product of the committee after the hearings have been held. It is not in the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I interject an inquiry at this point?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if the construction of barracks at Panama is not still in progress, and some of this appropriation is to be utilized for that purpose?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I understand so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then the words "for construction" ought to be retained in the bill. I know these barracks were under construction a short time ago, and I assume that they are still under construction and should be continued.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the gentleman from Alabama would answer the question I propounded.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Alabama has stated that some of this is to be used for the purpose of continuing the necessary barracks at Panama Canal Zone, and if that is so, the words "construction and" should remain in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman is mistaken in his statement.

Mr. WALSH. The Panama Canal construction does not come within this paragraph.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It might.

Mr. SHERLEY. There was an estimate submitted for certain barracks and quarters at Panama before the Committee on Appropriations. They used to be carried in the sundry civil bill. We threw all those matters in connection with the defense of the Panama Canal into the fortifications bill, and there is in that bill something like $4,000,000 for the construction of barracks and quarters at Panama.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I was mistaken in my statement.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I gather from the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky that all expenditures for building in the Panama Zone—hospitals, barracks, and so forth—are provided for in the fortifications bill and not in the military bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I would not make the statement that broad; but the barracks and quarters that I recall—and I have not had charge of the fortifications bill for more than a year past, and my memory is not, therefore, very fresh—have been appropriated for through a bill brought from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Barracks and quarters for the Ordnance Corps only.

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

Mr. MANN. Carried in the fortifications bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. They were carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. Provisions for barracks and quarters have been carried for years in the sundry civil appropriation bill, relating not only to Panama but to many other places, and this year those relating to Panama were thrown, along with the fortifications estimate, into the fortifications bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman assure us that in the fortifications bill there will be an item continuing the construction of the necessary barracks at Panama?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is an item, but for nothing like the amount asked for. They ask for something like $12,000,000. I think the subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is a member, allowed something like $4,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Four million dollars for barracks and quarters for two regiments of Infantry.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, on page 35, line 21, to the words "for constructing and," and, on page 36, lines 6 and 7, 8 and 9, to the words "for grounds, for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes, and for buildings or portions of buildings for occupation by troops for use as stables, storehouses, and offices, and for other military purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order and wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the necessity for the authorization for the construction of reclamation plants which is to be found in lines 20 and 21, on page 35.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman insists, I am perfectly willing to have the words go out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order against them.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the Quartermaster Corps has organized a new feature of its service. Instead of throwing away old shoes and old clothes, they are turned in and are reclaimed. They are renovated and then they are reissued, and I take it that these buildings are necessary for the work of reclamation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, upon the information furnished by the gentleman from California, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just to say to the gentleman that the various Congressmen who have gone abroad say that the English reclamation plant is one of the most wonderful plants in the whole army and saves an enormous amount of property. I suppose this is designed for the same purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. The wording led me to believe that it had something to do with what is known generally as reclamation projects in connection with irrigation. On a previous page there was a provision for educational propaganda in connection with reclamation, and perhaps that may have related to irrigation or may have related to this very proposal of salvaging material.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama, in charge of the bill, if the War Department has adopted any policy with reference to the existing cantonments. What are they going to do with them?

Mr. DENT. I made that statement once this morning.

Mr. LEVER. I am sorry I was not here; and if the gentleman made the statement, I shall look it up.

Mr. DENT. I would be very glad to repeat it.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$4,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000" at the conclusion of the paragraph on page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 18, strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have been studying this report very carefully to find something in regard to these various propositions, and while I admit the page is very enlightening in some respects, I have not discovered anything in regard to polo ponies, for which we appropriated in the last paragraph, for the use of West Point Academy. We have just adopted an amendment in respect to the use of automobiles by the military officers here in the city and elsewhere, preventing such use. We all have had the experience and know what it means, and it has created indignation on the part of the House, so much so that the House passed the amendment unanimously. Here as a matter of military instruction we have provided in the last paragraph for polo ponies, and yet Members wonder why it is that these boys whom we send to West Point, because they are our boys that we send, sometimes become so arrogant. The arrogance shown by frightful penalties at courts-martial or when, as was suggested yesterday, they attempt to determine social distinctions, as has been done for 40 years. We wonder why it is. These officers are just as good boys as can be found in any community; but we all know it is the training they receive and the sentiments of their surroundings. There are many of them who come out of that institution and go through the service as good men or better than when they went in; but some do not, and it is from those that we hear largely. When Congress in these days is appropriating money for polo ponies, I think you may inquire who is to pay for these polo ponies.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The item for polo ponies has been carried in the regular standing Army appropriation bill for years, and the purpose of providing polo ponies at West Point is for the instruction of cadets in horsemanship and——

Mr. FREAR. Well——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, if the gentleman does not want any more information, well and good.

Mr. FREAR. I have got that, and I remember that Theodore Roosevelt, when he was President of the United States, provided for horsemanship by saying that officers should take long rides, and a vigorous protest arose in every post against the order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman refuse any further information?

Mr. FREAR. I would like to get on the paragraph now under consideration. We have passed the polo-pony paragraph.

We have already discussed the reclamation plan which, I understand, is for the rehabilitation of old shoes, old clothing, and things of that kind, and, if that is true, there will be no one to question it. The explanation for grounds for cantonments, camp sites, has not been made intelligible to Members of the House, so far as I understand. After spending much money—hundreds of millions of dollars—for cantonments of the South and elsewhere, and for the construction of buildings and for camp sites, this bill still provides in this section for grounds for cantonments and camp sites and for other military purposes. On page 36, line 10, we provide for lodging for recruits, which is not objectionable, surely. In the same line we find "for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters as may be approved by the Secretary of War." We do not provide furniture for the recruits, the doughboys, for whom the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] recently spoke, but we are providing for the officers. I do not object particularly to it, except at this time I do not believe there is any justification for voting $4,000,000 here upon the information which has been presented to the committee. Let me say, referring to the report again, this report of one page states that the estimate for $1,916,905,000 was received by the committee in the middle of January. The committee shaved that estimate down, after a great deal of tedious work, to $1,117,289,000, which is ten times, let me remind the committee, ten times the amount of any military bill ever offered in this House before this war was upon us. Every item here, in the judgment of those who presented the $1,916,000,000, every item has been increased, so far as I can understand, over what it was in former years about a thousand per cent, and for that reason I believe we ought to have a reduction in this amount in times of peace.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, may I submit a unanimous-consent request that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of seven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, during this war we constructed 16 cantonments, built to accommodate something like a total of 700,000 men. We already had in the United States a large number of forts and places for troops. It is proposed by this bill to provide for an Army of 500,000 men. This provision is for barracks and quarters. Now, then, having provided in the beginning of the war new quarters which will accommodate 700,000 men, how can there be necessity, with the quarters already provided, for expending $4,000,000 for additional quarters for 500,000 men?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, of course the committee does not appropriate any money for any additional quarters. The department asked more than the $4,000,000 for repairs and upkeep of quarters that we now have. There is not any of this money to be used for any other purpose than the maintaining the tremendous investment which we now have.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I take it that this bill was drawn as bills ordinarily are drawn, that it was brought up to this committee from the department, and the bill as it is drawn now does not stand as it did before the point of order was made upon construction. The bill as drawn and as presented to this House and as it stood until about five minutes ago provided for construction, and the item of construction was undoubtedly the largest item. We have the paragraph as a whole, and we find that the paragraph as a whole provides for minor things, small things which would not eat up or grow to anything like millions of dollars, and the only thing which could grow into millions, the only thing which could involve millions, was this question of construction which has gone out on the point of order; and I say how, then, can you explain the fact that when upon this paragraph construction seems to be the thing which is large in its figures and large in its expenses, how can you explain that fact when you have ready and provided cantonments for 700,000 men and you will need quarters during the coming year for only 500,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, $20,000,000 was asked by the department for this particular item, and the item of construction was over $6,000,000. The committee struck out the construction item entirely and did not consider it, and the item was reduced to what we thought would be the very limit that could be used for the maintenance of the tremendous investment which the Government has in this enterprise. Now, it is not only cantonments but every Army post in the United States that is taken care of by this bill. All of its great investments in great permanent military posts all over the United States are taken care of in the way of repairs, and the gentleman can easily see that construction, as far as that is concerned, only comes in as, for instance, at one of these great Army posts there is a possibility of their needing the construction of some very small buildings, which would only cost a few hundred dollars; but take Army posts like we have at Fort Sam Houston or the Presidio——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I get the gentleman's idea.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to read the basis of the estimate to the gentleman?

Mr. DEMPSEY. One moment, if the gentleman will let me make a suggestion first.

In other words, the gentleman's answer to my proposition that you do not need new construction is that we need repairs. And I will say to you in answer to that proposition it can not be true; that where you built last year your buildings have not so depreciated in the course of one year, or really a few months, that they are going to need repair. It is all new construction. It will be good for a great many years. You can not possibly need extensive repairs at this time. You may need them some time in the future, but you can not need them now.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is true that they ask for the construction of barracks quarters the enormous sum of $38,000,000. I ask the gentleman's attention to this language as found in the estimates:

The amount asked for, $4,272,090.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the order made, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read:

The amount asked for, $4,272,090, is what is considered to be necessary for minor extensions and small buildings added for special purposes to camps and posts already existing.

Now, mark this language:

The necessity for such work is constantly arising, and while the list of projects which seem absolutely necessary at the present time only amounts to $300,000, it is sure to develop that many such items of construction will be necessary to properly care for the number of men which the revised program provides for.

Now, may I inform the gentleman further, that this item carried $400,000 during peace times, before the European war? Well may we cut this item down to $2,000,000 in view of the statement which I have just read.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will supplement what the gentleman has read by this: As I understand it, we have new cantonments ready to care for 700,000 men. They are new, and they do not need repairs. We have old forts which shelter a greatly increased number over their capacity before the war. I happen to have one of those forts in my district, and I know they were put in good condition; that they were repaired and large additions made to them last year. Judging from the fort I have seen, and taking that as a sample, I would say that no construction work would be necessary for 5 or 10 years. Why then, with quarters for a much larger Army than we are estimating for; why then, with all of this construction work done freshly and newly, not needing repairs for a great many years; why then, having appropriated heretofore only $400,000, we should, with all this new work just freshly done, appropriate $4,000,000 is beyond my comprehension. And I believe the gentleman's estimate of $2,000,000 is excessive instead of being inadequate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree entirely with the gentleman; and I ask if anyone can give an explanation of why we should have an appropriation for more ground for cantonments when we are abandoning them right along?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is one of the items that has been struck out on a point of order, and it must have entered into this estimate, and when it was struck out on a point of order it lessened the estimate and the amount necessary just that much.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that only two minutes more are left for debate under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LITTLE. I was to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. DENT. Yes; the gentleman was to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. I have been informed recently by what appeared to be reliable authority that there is a fort on the Yukon River that cost $1,000,000, that the War Department had built and, I believe, never occupied, and which is now totally abandoned, and that every year we appropriate something for the care of that. Does the chairman happen to be familiar with that fortification and the circumstances?

Mr. DENT. No; I am not.

Mr. LITTLE. Would you mind looking it up? I would like to know. The gentleman who gave me the information had been in Alaska. He says it is not only totally abandoned but it is entirely out of the range of travel, and the War Department actually came down here and held this Congress up for a million dollars to build it but have never used it, as I understand him, and is not using it now. And he says there is an appropriation made every year for its maintenance. I wonder if that gets in under this?

Mr. DENT. I am pretty sure that there is no estimate made for that in this paragraph.

Mr. LITTLE. I wish you would look that up. I might say to the gentleman from New York, the War Department does not need the money for repairs or for construction. It just needs the money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the two minutes left will it be in order to offer an amendment, because I want to discuss some items in the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. To offer an amendment to the paragraph?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the time under the agreement is disposed of it will be in order for the gentleman to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will I be permitted to offer an amendment if I wish to offer one separately?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not care to occupy the two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Or is the time fixed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired on this paragraph.

Mr. FERRIS. Very well; I will wait until the next.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POST EXCHANGES.

For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange, school, library, reading, lunch, amusement rooms, and gymnasium, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, for the rental of films, purchase of slides, supplies for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits, and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established, or which may be hereafter established, and for such purposes not enumerated above as the Secretary of War may deem advisable, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $250,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to proceed for a couple of minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to speak on his reservation?

Mr. WALSH. Not if the gentleman from Oklahoma desires to proceed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what is the gentleman's request?

The CHAIRMAN. His request is to proceed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been waiting here longer than the gentleman from Oklahoma, with a burning desire in my breast to proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. I will withdraw.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. I want to inquire about the item for continuing construction at military post exchanges——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he must not interfere with the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was not in any way interfering with the proceedings of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts was in the act of proceeding and was recognized by the Chair. The Chair asks all other Members not to interfere with the proceedings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was not interfering with the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was trespassing upon the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what construction work is being carried on at the military post exchanges?

Mr. DENT. No construction work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, if there is no construction work now being carried on, what is the necessity of carrying an appropriation to continue it?

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the item, on page 36, for continuing construction of military post exchanges.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that a number of gentlemen are now standing, to whom the attention of the Chair has not been directed. [Laughter.] I ask for a ruling on my point of order that the House should be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I demand a ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has instructed the Clerk to read. The gentleman, in the judgment of the Chair, is out of order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama, if I may. I notice the language reads, "For the rental of films, purchase of slides, supplies for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits," and so forth. Can the gentleman inform the House as to the method which the Army follows in procuring slides and moving-picture films for very proper purposes, as indicated here? I am inquiring as to how they get their films and where they get them.

Mr. DENT. I do not know where they get them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Most of the films, as we know, are made by certain institutions whose business it is to make films. Does the War Department purchase or rent these films or does it have a corps of officials who go out and make films? I will be more specific if the gentleman wants me to.

Mr. DENT. I wish the gentleman would be.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have been informed that during the period of the war—I do not know whether it now exists or not—this has been the practice: The Committee on Public Information, using Government funds which they secured from one source or another, has had an enormous quantity of pictures taken, going into various parts of the world for that purpose. They then lease these films to the Y. M. C. A., to the Red Cross, and to the Army cantonments at a very high rental, and thereby they have been enabled to reap quite a large harvest in the way of funds.

Now, of course, that sort of procedure is entirely unjustifiable, and if it is the intention that that practice shall be followed now I shall certainly make a point of order against it; but if it is intended that the War Department shall get their material in the ordinary and proper way no one will have objection to it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The branch of the War Department having charge of that particular line of work came to us asking for quite a large appropriation. The committee rejected that request, and the only place in this bill from which funds are made available for the procuring of films is the particular item here, relating to post exchanges. The gentleman knows that at these exchanges these films are hired or purchased the same as they are in other public entertainments, and are used for the entertainment and amusement of the soldiers at the posts. There is no fund in this bill to be used for such a purpose as the gentleman describes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know that during the past two years they have procured their films in the general way I have mentioned, but I do know, or at least I have been advised by persons who claim to know the facts, that the Committee on Public Information has been making a very large sum of money by simply taking Government funds and having pictures taken, and then renting these pictures to other branches of the Government.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Of course, the gentleman knows that the Committee on Public Information does not get its funds from this committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This place that I have referred to, so far as this committee is concerned, is the only place from which money could be had for the use in these post exchanges. It is right here, as has been stated. That is the information secured by our committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it the information of the gentleman, then, that any expenditures made under this paragraph will be made in the way he intimates?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And not by what I might call polite and legalized graft to the Committee on Public Information.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the information I have—that this is going back to the plan they had before the war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 36, line 25, after "1902," insert: "and buildings for similar purposes on military reservations authorized by War Department regulations."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the buildings erected at private cost under the act of May 31, 1902, were the buildings erected by the Y. M. C. A. When war was declared the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare Board, and the Salvation Army erected at the various camps a large number of buildings, costing several millions of dollars, open to all soldiers, sailors, and marines of all creeds. Last year was added the proviso found on page 25, lines 12 and 13, of this year's bill—

And buildings for similar purposes on military reservations authorized by War Department regulations.

That is, providing for their light and heat. We carry the same proviso this year. But somehow or other this language was not added for the military post exchanges, and this amendment simply gives to those buildings, without a cent of extra cost to the Government, the same right of incidental repairs which is given to the Y. M. C. A. buildings at the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the act referred to, approved May 31, 1902, provides for buildings erected by the Y. M. C. A.?

Mr. SIEGEL. Correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is the purpose of this amendment to extend the privileges of this item to other buildings?

Mr. SIEGEL. For similar purposes—open to every one.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire whether the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; as to the words "continuing the construction."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made the point of order, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] conceded it, and the point of order was sustained.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wanted to be certain that that was out of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to make his point of order against the words "for continuing the construction, equipment."

Mr. STAFFORD. Not against the word "equipment," but just against the construction.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was to the words "continuing the construction," on line 20, page 36. That point was conceded by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BARRACKS AND QUARTERS, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, and for shelter and repair thereof, and rentals for the United States troops in China, $250,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, so that I may ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes as if I had moved to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, while the item "for barracks and quarters" was under discussion I desired to discuss that subject, but owing to the parliamentary situation which arose I was unable to do so. What I wanted to do was to draw attention to the conditions which prevail at certain of the points of debarkation in France, notably at Brest. Not long since a vessel arrived in the port of Philadelphia. She was the Haverford, the first vessel to come to that port with troops from France. That vessel contained a number of officers and a larger number of enlisted men who had done faithful and gallant service on the other side of the water. A number of the officers and men who came from abroad on that ship, being still in the service, were unable to make public statements. That is one of the real disadvantages that a man in the Army suffers; that while he still wears the uniform he is subject to the regulations and discipline which the War Department imposes. I presume that is the proper thing; but these gentlemen, many of them officers, communicated to those with whom they talked upon this occasion, and this did not get into the newspapers of Philadelphia. They stated that the "cooties" and the rats and the mice in the trenches were paradise compared with the quarters they were obliged to subsist in at Brest. From December 27 to January 14 they lived in tents with water 5 inches deep in some of them. Why they were put in the tents instead of in the barracks no one seems to know. The matter, however, has been reported to Washington, and I am told that some of the officers when they are released from their uniforms and from Army discipline intend to tell this story to their Congressmen. Yesterday we had some very interesting discussion on this floor with regard to the propriety of a Member of Congress interceding in an Army matter in behalf of his constituents. I trust that these gentlemen who are coming back from Brest, these officers and privates, when their uniforms are off, will be free to communicate with their Members of Congress in order that we may understand better the conditions that prevailed abroad.

I have received a number of letters bearing upon this situation at the points of debarkation in France. One of the men who has written me, whose letter I received this morning, is well known to most of us here in Washington. I will not, I dare not, at this time give his name, but his statement is sufficient for me, and I vouch for him.

He states that the wounded and sick soldiers returning from the fields of France to the ports there are forced to ride in dirty freight and cattle cars to the ports of embarkation, where they are kept in anxious suspense for days and weeks to get a boat home. They are fortunate if they have a shelter over their heads. This gentleman tells me he can not speak from personal experience of the conditions at Brest, Bordeaux, or Marseille, but he tells me that as to the conditions at St. Nazaire, where he was for two weeks waiting for a boat, he can speak. He says others have been kept there for five or six weeks. He was fortunate enough to get away in two weeks. He says they had roofs over their heads but no floors, and mud and sickness all around.

That is to say, they were obliged to sleep upon the ground, and many of them to sleep in mud. To be sure, it is the rainy season in France, and these muddy conditions prevail. But, gentlemen, here are our boys over there clamoring to come home. Here we are making an appropriation for an additional Army of more than 500,000 men. Here we are asking when will these 2,000,000 soldiers come back? The answer is they are crowded up against the ports in France; they are sleeping in the mud; the very tents which shelter their heads do not have floors to shelter their bodies as they sleep. Yes; these may be extreme cases, but it seems there are many of them.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have here a photograph of Brest that has come through and which the gentleman can use.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sorry I can not put it into the RECORD. The gentlemen who would like to see it are privileged to come to the rostrum and examine it. I have no doubt it is correct, for it is a series of photographs. I say to you there is great unrest in regard to the Army of the United States, and I am sorry to say the unrest is increasing and is due to the fact that these men in uniform, who are suffering untold agonies, are unable to tell their stories to their Congressmen and the home folks. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee and not entitled perhaps to speak along that line. I am not in favor of putting any gag in these boys' mouths to keep them from talking or writing to Members of Congress. They should have the right made secure to them. I am not in favor of the present procedure of the Judge Advocate General's office where they put extraordinary and extortionate sentences for trivial offenses on these soldier boys. But neither of these are new proceedings to the Military Establishment; neither of these systems are new to this Congress or to this administration. They are very old. They are too old. I am not in favor of reading here on the floor of this House all these carping criticisms during the consideration of this bill. It is neither the time nor the place. Neither am I in favor of Congress resolving itself into an old ladies' commission of carping critics to stir up trouble for those who are conducting the war. Gentlemen here may think it serves a good purpose. It may, but I fear it does positive harm.

It is not my purpose to lecture anybody, but I do not believe that we ought to have 20 or 30 Members of the House continually reading critical carping letters, usually without signature, complaining against the officers, complaining against the War Department, complaining against the Government. This is not the place to present them. There is nothing to show here they have been presented to the War Department or to Secretary Baker. I submit they ought to have a chance. I believe they stir up distrust, occasion loss of patriotism, and it does the boys they seek to help absolute harm. If I did not think so, I would not take the time of the House to say it. Everyone is proud of our soldiers. Everyone wants to help them. No one knowingly wants to harm them. I do not charge anyone knowingly does that, but I fear the effect will be bad. I can not believe they desire it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not. I am in favor of bringing the Army back from the other side just as quick as we can get them back in an orderly way. It took a good many months to get them over there, moving them as fast as we could, and it naturally will take a good many months to get them back, moving as fast as we can. Secretary Baker has sent letters saying that not a single opportunity is missed to bring them back as fast as they can.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not true.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Iowa says that is not true. He may be right, but I can not believe that the Secretary of War, a Cabinet officer, the man charged with this responsibility, the man who must know something about the situation—I can not believe that he would write a falsehood to this House, and if he did somebody ought to institute impeachment proceedings against him.

Gentlemen over there on that side may smile and laugh, but you are making history to-day. Four million boys went into the war to fight and are returning to be assimilated into society. Are you going to bring them back contented, happy men, full of patriotism and pride for the part they took and the service they have rendered, or are you going to instill in them hatred, distrust, doubt, and fear as to some of the hardships they endured? It does not do us good to teach our boys to hate and despise our own Government. It does positive harm. I prefer to believe they are proud of their Government, proud of their fight; and while I do not know what is in their minds I feel sure that is true as to most of them.

Now, one word further. We are told that the boys slept in water. We are told that the boys did not have two undershirts. I have no doubt that in certain instances this is true. Out of 4,000,000 men inducted into the Army almost overnight, if there was not waste, if there was not abuse, if there were not even almost outrages, it would be the marvel of the hour. Just a few minutes ago the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] moved to strike out a $4,000,000 item and insert $2,000,000, and it was agreed to here with great complaisance. That may be a proper amendment; I do not know; but what I do say is that I listened attentively and no one gave any good reason for it.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. No; my time is short. We have invested $500,000,000 in cantonments. I have no doubt that a great deal was wasted, but the people at that time at the beginning of the war wanted the cantonments built and built quickly, and you could not stop to dicker with a man whether you would pay him $2.40 or $2.60 a day. They wanted us to move forward. We did move forward. We made mistakes. We doubtless made waste by the haste, but what I do say is that we have $500,000,000 invested in cantonments, and they strike out $2,000,000 which is provided for the upkeep without rhyme or reason. The same gentlemen that are to-day breaking and smashing up this bill, moving to strike out two and three million dollars in one item, cutting it in two in every item—these same gentlemen will probably be here at the next session explaining that we let the property go to waste; that we let $500,000,000 be invested in cantonments go to wreck and ruin, and it will be said that we are to blame and not the gentlemen who moved to strike out the items. I feel sure history will record that the American Army, both at home and in France, was the best paid, best fed, best clothed, and best cared for army of any of the allied armies. It will show that no army of the past wars has been so well cared for. I know there will, out of 4,000,000 men, be exceptions, but I insist the rule will prove my statement true. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield until I make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 25 minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has moved to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HASTINGS. Unless these 25 minutes are to be devoted to a discussion of the paragraph I shall object.

Mr. DENT. Then I move that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not do that. The gentleman from Alabama was recognized to prefer a request for unanimous consent. But he can not take the gentleman from Massachusetts off the floor to make a motion. The gentleman from Massachusetts was recognized and has the floor for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Is not a point of order reserved on the paragraph?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. DENT. Then I shall make the motion at the conclusion of the five minutes to be used by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for five minutes in opposition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the following communications:

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD ELECTRICAL WORKERS,
LOCAL UNION, NO. 161, OF GREENFIELD, MASS.,
Greenfield, Mass., February 13, 1919.

Hon. ALLEN TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Some time ago communications were sent to Postmaster General Burleson from the New England Council of Telephone Workers, of Boston, an organization of which this local is a member, and as yet we have received no reply.

We, the members of this local, take the liberty to ask you as our Representative in the House to do all in your power to help us in this matter of adjusting this condition and reestablishing the relations and dealings that we enjoyed with our employers prior to Government control.

This is not a condition that affects our local only, but it is the situation throughout New England, affecting not less than 15,000 employees, and which, if not remedied in the near future, may cause serious curtailment to the wire system.

Thanking you in advance for the help which we know you will give us in this matter, we beg to remain,

Truly, yours, ——— ———.

[Telegram.]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 14, 1919.

Hon. ALLEN TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington:

Springfield Telephone Operators' Union, Local 3A, extending over western Massachusetts, whose membership are your constituents, respectfully direct your attention to the unreasonable and indefensible position of Postmaster General Burleson in refusing to permit company to make negotiation with employees on question of wages and conditions; has failed to establish any machinery to take place of former satisfactory relations of employees with company committee appointed by him to investigate and report on wages and conditions; ineffective and insincere. Our representative compelled to resign. Request you institute congressional investigation of Federal Administration of Wires.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I beg to say that I rose before the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, I bobbed up ahead of the gentleman three or four times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no purpose to discriminate as between gentlemen at all, but the Chair thinks the gentleman from Kansas was just as alert as the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to striking out this paragraph. I think some of it is necessary to the Army. You have to treat soldiers right in order to keep up their patriotism, I hear. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] seems very fearful that we will destroy the patriotism of these fighting soldiers if we draw attention to the fact that they only have one shirt, when they ought to have two. The American soldier does not pull his patriotism on or off with his shirt. The gentleman concedes that there is only one shirt very often when there should be two. We do not want to make a fuss about this, but there is no reason why we should not insist that he have the other shirt or anything else that is needed. No one's patriotism is going to be destroyed by getting him a square deal. I do not know about the gentleman's—although he seems to be very touchy on the subject—but he need not worry about the rest of us or about the Army. It is not going to hurt this Army to have the injustice that is in it corrected. On the contrary, it will help its patriotism.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman does not recall that the only man on the floor of the House so far who comes to the defense of the administration is the chairman of the Democratic congressional committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. He does that officially, not personally.

Mr. LITTLE. I had not thought of that, because politics was the farthest thing from my mind. This is not a criticism of the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Kansas acquit the gentleman from Oklahoma of having induced the President to write that letter, saying his faith was in the Democratic Members and not in the Members upon this side of the House?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, yes; I got him to do that myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is mistaken. Whatever possible political feeling there may be here and there, I am satisfied that these criticisms to which he is objecting are not criticisms of the department. They are criticism of the military caste which dominates the department. Yesterday we put through an amendment to take out of the hands of the military the right to final disposition of the applications for discharge, and to put them in the hands of the Secretary of War, which was a compliment to the department, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma. This is a contest, not between us and the department, but between us and the irresponsibles, the men in the Army who have no sense of responsibility, and these criticisms are just and proper and timely. If they can not be made now, in the name of God when would they be made?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not a fact that the Acting Judge Advocate General joined in the criticism of these sentences?

Mr. LITTLE. He has made the very best argument against some of them.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And if Members of Congress are to be criticized for making them, so should the Judge Advocate General.

Mr. LITTLE. Conditions went so far that Members of Congress ceased to have the rights of ordinary citizens. A Member of Congress was told that if he butted in on anybody's application for a discharge the boy would suffer, and the time has come when the Congress on both sides should learn some self-respect, when it should make these irresponsibles responsible, so that an ordinary citizen who goes out to fight for his country gets a square deal when he gets through. They should be allowed decent consideration. If one of them is sent by court-martial to the penitentiary for 20 years because he chewed gum, the men who sit on that court-martial ought to be put out of the Army. The gentleman from Oklahoma is mistaken in his reasons for resenting this criticism. I do not believe the gentleman from Oklahoma has any disposition to support these irresponsibles in their wrong decisions, but that is what it amounts to.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, the gentleman is in error about that. The gentleman is an Army man.

Mr. LITTLE. No; I am a Congressman.

Mr. FERRIS. But he has had experience in the Army, and he knows that the same system prevailed when he was in the Army as prevails now.

Mr. LITTLE. Not around where I was; and I was president of a good many courts-martial.

Mr. FERRIS. Every speech that I have heard to-day has had in it some sort of criticism. About eight years ago, when I first came——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have another minute. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. LITTLE. And I want another minute to answer him.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. I have some personal testimony I want to offer. About 8 or 10 years ago, out at Fort Sill, Okla., immediately adjoining my home town, a green country boy came down from Kansas and enlisted in the Army. The boy made a remark about an officer's wife. I never knew whether the remark was true or not, and I do not know now. They tried that boy by the same court-martial proceedings then that prevail now, and gave this green boy 20 years in the penitentiary. The Congressman from western Kansas, Judge Reeder, whom the older Members will remember, and I spent two or three years trying to get that boy out, and we never could. I want to say this: This system is an octopus; well, it is worse than that. It has been with us a long time—by far too long a time. I merely wanted the House to know this method is not new. It is not a product of this administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I want a minute to answer the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LITTLE. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With the understanding I am to have five minutes?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama about his intention for this evening.

Mr. DENT. My intention is to run just as long as the House will allow me to do. I would like to finish this bill if possible.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can easily inform the House. It is a matter of convenience to inform the House whether he proposes to move to rise at 6 o'clock or 7 o'clock or whether he intends to try to keep the House in session until 10 o'clock.

Mr. DENT. I intend to try to keep the House in session as long as possible up to 10 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will state to the gentleman that we have had lots of debate on this paragraph, but not a word on the paragraph. Now, I really have something I want to inquire about in reference to the paragraph and one or two slight observations to make.

Mr. DENT. What time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Five minutes, and it is probable not that much.

Mr. DENT. I will make it 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 12 minutes. Will the gentleman indicate who is to have that time?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Iowa to have five minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota five minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 12 minutes' time, to be consumed as indicated. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] seemed to suggest that I was probably a little inconsistent, because the rules were the same in 1898 as now. I wish to disprove it. I never heard during the Spanish-Philippine War any court-martial sentence that compared in severity with hundreds of these. These fellows have simply gone crazy in a riot of arrogance. Now, another thing. I was president of many courts-martial, and we never found tyranny essential to secure respect. The finding of a court-martial must be approved or disapproved by the commander. We had a boy that was arrested for a minor matter, and technically he really possibly could have been sent to the penitentiary. We had 11 Volunteers and 2 West Pointers on the court, and we voted 11 to 2 to give the boy 60 days in the guardhouse and a fine of $25.

The sentence of the court-martial was sent back disapproved by the general, and he said that if the boy was guilty at all he ought to be sent to the penitentiary and bobtailed, and if he was not guilty we should have acquitted him. Now, what did we do? I moved to reaffirm the sentence, which we did, 11 to 2, and it was sent back to the general. Now, all he could do was to disapprove it and turn the boy loose with no sentence. He had already been in the guardhouse anyhow for 60 days, which was punishment enough anyway. There is no sense in pulling a man around by a ring in his nose. My idea in every court-martial was that you should use a little common sense and equity. The rigid features of the regulations are only intended for the battle front anyway. Nobody fit to command men would enforce them strictly at home. That is the proposition involved and that was my theory then, as it is now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as I have not occupied five minutes upon this bill, I presume I was not one of those that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] referred to, but I want to say this right at the outset, the chairman of the national Democratic congressional committee may take the view which he seems to advocate, that this Congress ought to be indifferent to the just complaints of the American soldier, but that is not the position of the Republican side of the House, and, so far as I know, not the position of anybody on the Democratic side except the gentleman himself. [Applause.] I would be ashamed of myself and ashamed of Congress if it turned a deaf ear to the appeals of soldiers and their dependents.

To whom have these men to come to make complaints if not to us? Where are they going to get a hearing? What attention has the War Department or the administration paid to them? None whatever. Every man in this House knows it. Are we to sit here like graven images when our soldiers are mistreated, when outrages are perpetrated upon them, and not lift our voices even in protest? I would go further than any man has offered so far, unless it be, perhaps, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], who proposed yesterday to take away the salaries of some of these officers. This Congress ought to be asserting its dignity, its rights, and its determination to protect the American soldier against the impositions that have been put upon him by some of these high officers and some officers not so high.

I do not find so much fault with these lieutenants as some do. Most of them are splendid young men. Where do these orders come from? They come from above. They come because the heads of the departments sanction them and are willing that these conditions should go on. When you get down to the cause, the responsibility rests upon the Secretary of War and the administration, who could stop these abuses by a word.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. You voted to draft these men into the military service for the period of this war?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did, for the period of the emergency. And your department is not discharging them as they ought to be, in accordance with the terms of that bill.

Mr. GORDON. This Congress has no right to discharge them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely in error. A moment's reflection will convince him of it. The War Department could discharge them now—is discharging some of them, in fact. Congress could provide for their immediate discharge, but every move in that direction is blocked by the administration. I voted to enlist them for the period of the emergency. If the emergency is not over, when, in heaven's name, will it be over? Not during my lifetime.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not yield further to the gentleman. I have only five minutes, and I hesitated about taking that.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party has always been in favor of caring for the defenders of the country, and the Republican Party will continue to maintain that position, notwithstanding the strictures of the gentleman from Oklahoma and other prominent leaders on the Democratic side. It will always find us desirous, not only of preserving the rights of the enlisted man, but of giving him that care and attention which his sacrifices deserve. Now that the war is over we want him returned to his home and his job, instead of holding him in camp to minister to the vanity of some high officer or gratify the ambition of some one who wants to pose as the dictator of the affairs of the whole world.

I have been only led to speak these words—I have not occupied any other time on this bill—because the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] persisted in reading a lecture to those who took the part of the private soldier in the discussion here upon this bill. He intimated that this side was just simply trying to raise trouble. We are trying to protect these men. We have not the power in our hands now to do anything more than protest. If we could we would do more, and we will do more than protest if these grievances are not remedied when we obtain control of the House. This condition of affairs can not be endured, but the only remedy we have now is to agitate and agitate, until the country fully understands the situation, and the Members on this side ought to continue to do it. It has brought forth much good already. Everyone knows that there has been an altogether different spirit on the part of the War Department about discharging the men than there was two months ago. Two months ago you could not get a complaint heard anywhere. Now the orders are changed and there are places where you get hearings. Before you could not get a man discharged, no matter what the case of his dependents or the sufferings that were inflicted upon his family. Since that time the War Department has modified its orders as a result of the agitation that has been started here and the complaints that have been made on this floor. It ought to and I think it will modify them further. It has finally got around so as to admit in some extreme cases that men on the other side of the ocean will be discharged. I want to see it get around so that it will bring every man home as fast as possible. The gentleman from Oklahoma says: "I do not know anything about these vessels coming home partly filled." If he does not know it, he ought to know it. It has been stated here on the positive knowledge of gentlemen who have come home on them. They are only coming at the rate of 50,000 a month. It will take over two years from now to get the boys back at that rate.

I do not wish to take further time of the committee on this subject. But if the gentleman from Oklahoma thinks he is going to stop discussion on this subject he has another guess coming. He is making one of the greatest mistakes he ever made. He will hear more of it in this House until the grievances are remedied and his party will hear more of it in the future than it wants to hear. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the committee to the paragraph under consideration, especially to this language:

The acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary.

And I would like to ask of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether that is in here simply because it is the language carried in similar bills, or whether it is contemplated to make practical application of it?

Mr. DENT. It is language that has been carried in the bills heretofore.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. One further inquiry. Here is language, "Rentals for the United States troops in China." Can the gentleman state what rentals are referred to and how much they amount to in a year?

Mr. DENT. The amount in the estimate is $50,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That leaves a total of $200,000. How does that compare with the amount heretofore carried in bills of this kind?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman I think it is the same amount. And they had under consideration, at least a proposition was made to the committee, that we should appropriate money to build permanent quarters there in China, rather than to keep up this item of annual rental, but the committee has never thought it wise to take action upon it as yet.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the House, I want to make an observation that to me is of considerable interest and importance.

We have heretofore felt that it was necessary to maintain in the Philippine Islands a military establishment of considerable size. I was quite surprised to learn that during the closing days of the Spanish régime in the Philippine Islands the Spanish troops there numbered no more than 2,000. We have for a great many years maintained in the islands a force of 12,000 men. A few years ago, beginning about a year before this present administration came into power, the American troops in the Philippine Islands began to be concentrated, to be withdrawn from outlying Provinces, some of them commonly known as "wild" Provinces. That reduced the number of American soldiers necessary to do the military work of the islands. Their places were taken by native troops, either scouts or constabulary, and the number of native troops, scouts or constabulary, was not increased.

When this great war came on it was necessary to further reduce our Military Establishment in the Philippines, and I want to bring to you the information, which is interesting to me and I think it will be to you, that the American military force in the Philippine Islands has now been reduced to a point—perhaps I am not justified in giving the exact figures, but very much less than half of anything that we have heretofore thought was necessary—and it is apparent that in the immediate future the entire military force of the United States in the Philippine Islands can be, and should be, reduced to a number only sufficient to man the fortifications at Corregidor, and not enough even for that purpose, for native troops in large measure can be utilized for that purpose. Personally I can see no reason why there should be maintained in the Philippine Islands a military force greater than 2,000 from now on.

This is the result of an extraordinarily happy situation which the years have produced in the islands. The American flag was raised in the Philippine Islands at a time of strife. Its raising was the signal for an insurrection. That insurrection was put down by the military power of the United States. For a time the inhabitants of the islands felt that our mission was not that of friends, one not to help them but to make use of them. In the years that have passed the islanders have learned that the mission of America there is the same as the mission of America everywhere in the world—that wherever the flag flies, in its shadow only democracy and freedom shall live. [Applause.]

To-day if anyone should go to the Philippine Islands and undertake to start an insurrection against the United States he would be mobbed and slaughtered by the Filipinos themselves. The great bulwark of our strength in the islands does not come from our military forces that we send there, but from the loyalty and affection and patriotism of the people of the islands. The Moro problem has ceased to exist. The head-hunter has ceased his fight, and all are becoming amalgamated into a great, great people. To me it is a tremendously successful piece of work. The credit for it does not belong to any particular individual nor to any particular time. It is a gradual and a perfect evolution. This, of course, has no application to the political future of the islands. It has no bearing upon the shaping of the political future of the islands; but it does indicate to me, and I trust it will to you, that the people there have developed a public consciousness, have developed a personal and national self-respect, have developed an affection for the ideals of the American Government, and they are now willing to trust their future to the conscience and the heart of the American Nation, knowing that if the time shall come when political independence should be given to them, they know America will deal justly with them and ever be their friend. It is pleasing to contemplate the best of feeling now exists between the Filipinos and ourselves, and that never again will the hand of war be raised in the Philippines against the American flag. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROADS, WALKS, WHARVES, AND DRAINAGE.

For the construction and repair by the Quartermaster Corps of roads, walks, and wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels; and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $3,000,000.

Mr. FREAR and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FREAR. I move to strike out the figures "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$500,000." That is in line 24, on page 37.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the amount carried in this item prior to the war?

Mr. FREAR. I will tell you if you will wait a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FREAR: Line 24, page 37, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to a lecture by the chairman of the Democratic congressional committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and he is the only one, I am glad to say, who has expressed himself in that way, and those of us who have listened to that lecture and understand how baseless were his charges against this side of the House and also that side of the House, which protested last night equally strong, will understand why his efforts were so weak during the last election, as shown by the political results. It came about through those same methods, which were not successful then, and which will not be successful at this time. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has said, Members will protest, and we have the right to protest here, against the unfair and unjust treatment of these soldiers, and if the gentleman from Oklahoma is honest and sincere in his belief, as he says here, and realizes that there are hardships and wrongs to be righted, let him introduce a resolution of investigation and introduce it before this House adjourns, so that we may be able to get legislation which will remedy the situation.

He may be able to get an investigation, which the average Member can not. That is what will test his sincerity at this time. The chairman of the Democratic National Committee criticized the fact that we had just reduced a $4,000,000 item to $2,000,000, and he said we did it without any evidence whatsoever. We did have evidence that $4,000,000 was ten times as much as had been appropriated for this same item just before the war, and we reduced it to five times as much as it was then, and there was no word from the committee to say that that would not be sufficient for their purposes.

Now, turning to this item, the bill carries seventeen times as much for the item as it did before the war. It was $165,000 prior to the war. Now it is $3,000,000 in this bill. We do not blame the committee for it. The committee did not receive these estimates until the middle of January. The members of the committee are not to blame. They give the best efforts they can, but it is our duty to act in these matters, to inquire about them, and I have suggested three times as much as was given before the war for this very purpose. What does it include? Why, it includes, according to the item, dredging channels. Do we have to dredge any more channels now than we did before the war?

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] criticizes our complaints at this time. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] stated to-day to us that the week prior to Christmas the War Department demobilized 194,000 men. Last week the department demobilized 30,000 men. They demobilized six times as many in the week before Christmas as last week. If 194,000 men could be demobilized in the week before Christmas, can we not have better results now? Why do they not demobilize faster now? That is what we are asking. That is the complaint that is made. Why could the department be able to demobilize 194,000 men immediately after the armistice and only 30,000 men last week?

Now, Mr. Chairman, to get back to the bill, I would not for a moment suggest that this item of $3,000,000 be reduced if I did not believe, as I stated, that we have gone mad on the subject of these expenditures. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who stands for his party and who stands here for a bill ten times as large as the bill passed before the war, ought to be willing, with us and with his colleagues, who stood with us on this floor last night, to try to get a bill of reasonable proportions. That is what we are doing; what we are trying to do. I think that is a fair statement. I trust it is. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not been here during the discussion and he has not offered anything. Unless the committee has something to offer to show that this item should amount to $3,000,000, I believe we ought not to grant that amount, and I believe we granted the correct amount in the last item, when we put it at $2,000,000, instead of $4,000,000, as contained in the bill. We allowed five times as much as the item in the last bill before the war and acted on as good judgment as could be secured from the committee.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Have you read the testimony on this item?

Mr. FREAR. Has the gentleman anything to offer in regard to this?

Mr. GORDON. I have, yes; and if you have not read the testimony what do you know about it?

Mr. FREAR. I have not read it, but I will say this: That I have appealed to gentlemen whose judgment is as good as that of the gentleman from Ohio, including the chairman of the committee, who says many of these items come in as complete guesses. I am not accepting such testimony blindly. I will not accept testimony unless I know who gives it, and unless I know that those who give it are fair, conservative, and unprejudiced. Who are the men? We have had the question here previously.

Mr. GORDON. If you have not read the testimony, you do not know.

Mr. FREAR. We have had bills before us previously where officers of the War Department have asked money for dredging purposes all over this country—from Dan to Beersheba—and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] has voted with me against some of those bills. These gentlemen ask appropriations for dredging purposes. In some instances that may be justified, but when we ask the committee for information we are entitled to it from the committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman moved to reduce the item for barracks and quarters from $4,000,000 to $2,000,000, and the House, in my judgment, erred in voting for that amendment. We have over $500,000,000 invested in barracks and quarters for the care of the soldiers, and the percentage of money which we have allowed for the care of these barracks and quarters—$2,000,000—is, of course, wholly inadequate. Now the gentleman asks to have this item which we are now considering reduced from $3,000,000 to $500,000.

Gen. Marshall, who is the representative of the War Department charged with the conduct of these affairs, in making this estimate, comes before the committee and asks for $6,464,199. He divides it into different items: For road construction, $1,407,621; for repair of roads, $2,100,000; for construction of walks, $166,665; for repair of walks, $305,217; for construction of wharves, $632,675; for repair of wharves, $864,000. It is true that in the bill we passed for 1917, the last bill passed before the war, we voted $600,000 for this item.

Mr. FREAR. One hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the last appropriation prior to the war, $600,000.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman knows that the Government has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in these particular branches of military activity, and that we have this property that we did not have before the war. In the matter of the repair of roads the gentleman ought to know that the operations of the Government have damaged the roads on military reservations and fields in a way that they must be repaired.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it proposed to take any part of this money to repair what we understand to be public highways?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; but to repair Government roads, military roads, roads to the cantonments; and the gentleman knows that we have many miles of those roads that have been torn up and worn out.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to vote for an appropriation to repair public highways that have been damaged by the operations of the War Department.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. How much of this $3,000,000 is estimated to be necessary for construction work?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The committee has not allowed any of the money for construction work. Gen. Marshall asked a certain small amount for construction, but the committee did not deem that there was any new construction needed.

Mr. GOOD. The paragraph uses the word "construction," so that any part of the appropriation could be used for construction. I agree with what the gentleman has said about repair. You have got to keep up your buildings and your roads; but all of this might be used for new construction.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is true; but I think the gentleman will agree with me that we have got to allow some discretion and some judgment to the War Department. This applies not only to those cantonments that have been erected but to all of these different activities scattered all through the country; and I think the gentleman will admit that there might be some place where some small construction might be required.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Might I ask the gentleman if any part of this appropriation will go for the repair of roads which the Government activities have broken down throughout the country?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not for public roads, only for Government-owned roads.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that the words "for the pay of employees" are preceded and followed by a semicolon. Does that mean for the pay of any employees in the Quartermaster Corps or for the employees engaged in the work mentioned in this paragraph?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think it is for the employees engaged in the work mentioned in this paragraph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That language ought to be in there, for otherwise it would allow them to pay any employees. Why not put it in "for the pay of employees engaged in work under this paragraph"?

Mr. MANN. That is the construction of this language by the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It ought not to be with this punctuation. I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman's word is always good for anything with me. The gentleman suggested that a considerable amount of this appropriation would go for fixing roads which have been hardly used in the war.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The money would be confined to the improvement of roads on military reservations, on Government-owned land.

Mr. LITTLE. I got that; but the impression I got from the gentleman's former statement was that it was largely to be expended on the roads injured within the reservation, and I do not find that in the Book of Estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska and other gentlemen about the necessity of sufficient appropriation to care for the property which we have at the military posts and stations; but somewhere and sometime we have got to commence to practice economy. Here is an appropriation wholly unrelated to the war. It has nothing to do either with the war or demobilization of the troops.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. After I have made an intelligent statement I will permit the gentleman to interrupt me. Of course, the number of camps, posts, and stations are increased and their force is increased. But it is proposed now, on a routine matter, to increase the appropriation 500 per cent over what it was before the war.

Mr. FREAR. Seventeen times—$165,000 before the war and $3,000,000 now.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It depends on how far you go back. In 1917, the last appropriation before the war, the chairman of the committee says it was then $600,000.

Mr. MANN. My statement was absolutely correct. Now it is proposed to increase it 500 per cent. It does seem to me that we might properly cut these items somewhat, because if we are ever going to get back to the point where we can pay our expenses out of the taxes we raise, and not out of the money we borrow, we have got to get down below an increase of 500 per cent over the expenses of 1917. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. How does the gentleman arrive at the conclusion that the acquirement of these roads and the enormous increase in the mileage of the roads resulting from the use of the military equipmnt is not the result of the war?

Mr. MANN. I did not, and nobody except the gentleman from Ohio, who has a wild imagination at times, thinks that I said anything of the sort. Nobody has said that acquirement of these posts and institutions was not connected with the war. The maintenance has nothing to do with the war. Their maintenance next year will be the same as it will be 10 years from now, so far as the war is concerned. Unless we abandon the posts and institutions there will be more roads two years from now than there will be one year from now. It is simply a routine matter to care for the property which we have, and the amount of care depends on the appropriation. The property ought to be fairly well cared for. There is not a man here who does not know that the roads and wharves and the care of the grounds at military posts and stations can be fairly well done and at half the cost proposed in this bill. It may be that they want so much money to spend to beautify some of these grounds. I am very fond of flowers, and very fond of beautiful beds of fancy flowers at military posts and stations, but after all there is a limit as to the expense we ought to incur for even such a noble purpose as the planting of flowers. We have got to commence to economize, and this side of the House will have to do it in the next Congress if that side will not do it in this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, I think the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] should not prevail. The reason I think that may be briefly stated in this form: We have constructed 32 camps and cantonments since the war started, at a total cost of about $300,000,000. We have built in addition 23 flying fields, which are in the nature of camps. We had already permanent Army establishments which had cost over $200,000,000 when the war started. The substance of these figures, therefore, is that the Nation has an expenditure in properties of over $500,000,000. Each and every one of these 50 or 60 sites, scattered throughout the whole country, has its exits. Unless roadways are built they could not have been used during the war, and unless roadways are reasonably kept up, then the entrance is impossible for any purpose in the future. It may be said with less particularity that the other items embraced in this particular item, for which $3,000,000 are authorized, are of equal importance. No house which you build is worth while unless you keep the roof on, so as to keep the elements out, and no property is worth having or maintaining even for future use unless you provide exits to it. Three million dollars is a large sum of money, but when you consider 50 or 60 Government properties, camps, cantonments, and Army sites, and aviation fields, all of which we are in duty bound to preserve until we can dispose of them, or further use them, and consider that for two years the rains and the snows and the heat and the cold have made their inroads, it is but natural to find holes in the ground in the roadways of all of them, and they make it difficult for Army trucks to get in and out of those Government properties. If you do not provide some reasonable, moderate, and yet sufficient amount for their upkeep it means the abandonment of all except the permanent Army posts as spots isolated, and not at all as in the nature of going concerns.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is his interpretation of this paragraph that this money can be expended outside of the reservations? He has spoken of exits and approaches. Does he understand this can be extended outside the reservation owned by the Government?

Mr. EAGLE. If my friend means to ask me if I think any portion of the $3,000,000 can be expended upon roads not connected with camps, cantonments, or Army sites, I answer him unhesitatingly, "no." If he means the approaches to the camps, cantonments, and Army sites, and yet outside of the immediate reservation thereof, I answer him, "yes."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and at the risk of seeming inconsistent I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that during the war in constructing new activities upon the part of the Ordnance Department and the Quartermaster Department of the Army, such as proving grounds, fortifications, arsenals, and other war activities, large tracts of land have been acquired, and within those reservations many miles of roads have been constructed, and in many of the reservations the roads were made of a permanent character, of cement or concrete. The approaches to the reservations are public highways within the towns or counties, and they have suffered very much by reason of the increased traffic made necessary to get the materials to the ground where this construction work was being carried on.

I know of one case, so informed by the officers of the War Department, and I think I have seen it within not many miles from the District of Columbia, where part of the funds heretofore appropriated for this department have been used for constructing roads outside the reservation which had been acquired, and I know at least from statements made and information acquired that in the State of Texas money was expended for roads connecting with the roads within the reservation. I have in mind an instance where a proving ground was acquired within a summer-resort town, where tremendous activities were conducted in connection with the construction of the buildings and the laying out of the roads within the reservation. Tractors were used to haul materials from the railroad freight yards, where a side track was installed and where heavy trucks were used, and many guns were hauled over the roads within that town, and the roads within the town and in the immediate vicinity of the reservation were completely ruined. That little town, under the system of government obtaining in the State in which it is located, will be put to an expense of from $20,000 to $40,000 to repair those roads. The employees came from the outside, and they live in buildings on the reservation, and instead of being a benefit to the town, whose only source of revenue and support is from summer visitors, that activity is going to prove a detriment to it from now on. Yet the Government has declined to contribute any share of the expense of repairing those roads in the immediate vicinity of the approach of the reservation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman's position; but does he contend that under this paragraph a part of the money might be used to do that?

Mr. WALSH. No. This paragraph is practically the same as was in the bill last year, but money has been expended for that very purpose in other sections of the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That might be justified in war times, because they had to get the material over the roads.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; but does the gentleman think it is just, after the war activity has ceased, for this Government, after having ruined roads by immense traffic, which was not contemplated at the time the roads were constructed, to now walk away and leave those roads in that condition? The tax rate in this little summer colony is already very heavy, as heavy as it can bear. The Government ought to repair those roads and put them in the condition they were in before they were ruined.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the Government ought to remedy the defects it has caused, but I do not think it ought to be done in an Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. It was done as a result of the appropriation carried in the Army bill, and we are carrying an appropriation now for roads within the reservation, and I know of an instance down here at Arlington, where they expended money outside of the reservation to build concrete roads of a permanent character.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement in regard to the program. It is my intention to continue the reading of the bill, if possible, to final conclusion, at least up to the legislative feature, and I would like to read those, and in the event points of order are made let those points be reserved, but it is not my intention to ask for a vote on the bill to-night.

Mr. MANN. It is not the gentleman's intention, I understand, to proceed to a discussion even of the legislative provisions?

Mr. DENT. No; not even to the discussion of them, but I would like to have them read, and if any points of order are going to be made I thought those points of order should be reserved, and then I will not ask for a vote to-night.

Mr. MANN. The points of order can be made and not reserved unless the gentleman desires them reserved. If points of order were made somebody might offer an amendment at that place. I have no desire——

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman propose to have a Sunday session to-morrow morning, running past midnight?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no; I hope really to go on and get through.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope so, but the gentleman has served notice that he expects to have the bill completed to-night, and with the progress we are making that will be about time for the memorial exercises to-morrow morning, which begin at noon.

Mr. DENT. I hope to finish the reading. The main proposition I wanted to submit to the House is that I will not ask for a vote on the passage of the bill to-night.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit, is it his intention to go on with the bill on Monday, or give way to the Calendar for Unanimous Consent?

Mr. DENT. If we can finish the reading of the bill I am going to ask that this bill be in order on Monday.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. CRAGO. Under that order one could not offer an amendment to-night to any features of the bill.

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing to agree amendments may be offered on Monday.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENT. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DILLON. Five minutes.

Mr. DENT. At the expiration of five minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I will say I want to offer an amendment to strike out lines 20 to 25, Quartermaster's Corps, and insert "Secretary of War," believing that it would be best probably and that the Secretary of War would find it better to have this work done by the Engineer Corps or by the Construction Corps instead of by the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not, the gentleman from Alabama submitted a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MANN. There was an amendment, and I have not heard it voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama took the floor and asked for unanimous consent and then engaged in this informal conversation with other Members.

Mr. MANN. Let us vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DENT. I have made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand it. The gentleman started to make one and then went into a discussion with Members and the Chair did not catch what it was.

Mr. DENT. I thought I made it, that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be concluded.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman allow me two minutes?

Mr. DENT. At the expiration of seven minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Am I to have any time?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman is to have five minutes and the gentleman from Missouri two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of seven minutes——

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 12 minutes the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 12 minutes the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall terminate, the time to be divided—five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], and two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph, as I understand, relates to roads, walks, and wharves. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this money may be expended in Europe, for instance, for the purpose of the building of additional wharves in France or for repair of wharves already constructed in France?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that in the item for the operation of engineers in the field we were told was carried the fund that would take care of anything of that sort in France. This item is confined entirely to estimates for operation in the United States. There is another item in the bill in which they do provide the money.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, upon that statement, if it is in order, I would move a limitation on this paragraph that no part of these funds hereby appropriated shall be expended in repairs or building projects in France.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DILLON. To be voted on after the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is an amendment pending, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota first, for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DILLON: Add at the end of line 24, page 37, the following: "No part of the funds hereby appropriated shall be used for construction and repair work in France."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; I yield back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] is recognized.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the vote on the amendments already offered. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say that the committee accepts that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 37, lines 20 and 21, strike out "by the Quartermaster Corps" and insert "as the Secretary of War may determine."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the committee that we have in the Army what is known as a construction corps, which has done excellent work during this war. We also have an Engineering Corps, which probably might be better fitted to do this work than the Quartermaster Corps. And I only offer this, leaving it in the judgment of the Secretary of War to determine which agency, either the ones I have mentioned or any other, he may feel is best fitted to do this. I believe it would be to the advantage of the War Department if we would make the change as I have indicated, and I trust the gentleman will not make the point of order upon that, because it is merely to help the War Department out, and not in any way to embarrass them, that I have offered the amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I appreciate the position of the gentleman from Missouri, but I will state that the Quartermaster Department is now, by the concentration provided under the Overman Act, all placed under a general bureau in charge of Gen. Goethals. And I would not like to accept the amendment at this time. I know, if the gentleman will permit, that there is a movement on hand in the War Department to concentrate all of this work in the Bureau of Engineering, but that matter is still a matter for adjustment there, and I think we had better allow this matter to stand as it has stood.

Mr. DYER. That is just the reason I make the suggestion to the committee, because in other portions of this bill there is a provision to repeal certain portions of the Overman Act, and it may be before this Congress is ended we will have repealed the entire Overman Act, and under those conditions it might be an embarrassment to the Secretary of War and he might not be able to go ahead and do some of this important work. And, if the gentleman will permit it to go in without objection, I feel that it is absolutely necessary and important and can not in any way embarrass anybody, because the Secretary of War can have his Quartermaster Corps do it if he, in his judgment, desires to do so. That is my amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I will have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DYER. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF HOSPITALS.

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, and for temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments; for the alteration of permanent buildings at posts for use as hospitals, construction and repairs of temporary hospital buildings at permanent posts, construction and repair of temporary general hospitals, rental or purchase of grounds, and rental and alteration of buildings for use for hospital purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for use during the existing emergency, including necessary temporary quarters for hospital personnel, outbuildings, heating and laundry apparatus, plumbing, water and sewers, and electric work, cooking apparatus, and roads and walks for the same, $7,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] state what is included within the language in lines 16 and 17, "for use during the existing emergency"? Does that mean the period of the war?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. That is the language that has been used, as the gentleman knows, throughout the act.

Mr. WALSH. Of course these hospitals will have to be used after the war is terminated, will they not?

Mr. GORDON. The hospitals will have to be used until the men get well. That is a part of the emergency.

Mr. WALSH. I will say, in reply to that pertinent suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, made in an undertone, that the language "existing emergency," as carried in the legislation passed heretofore, has uniformly referred to the war. It seems that that is the interpretation to be placed upon that phraseology now. The use to be made of these hospitals would terminate when the war terminated?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I certainly will.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman realizes that out here at Walter Reed Hospital an emergency exists now in which they must have sufficient space to take care of those wounded soldiers who have returned, and they will possibly have to build some buildings that will not be permanent, but are of that character that can be used until a great lot of these soldiers can get out of the hospital.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that we have passed a measure providing for a number of hospitals to take care of these soldiers coming back.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is true; but those that we provided for in that legislation were for the use of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, under the Treasury Department, for the soldiers who were discharged. Now, these soldiers that have lost limbs—an arm or a leg—must be taken care of, and that hospital is very much crowded; and so an emergency does exist there, and possibly in some of these other hospitals.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is wholly mistaken, I think. Although he is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary—and I speak with great diffidence—he is evidently mistaken as to the construction of the word "emergency." The word "emergency" was substituted for the term "end of the war" for the precise reason that it is used in this paragraph here. The word "emergency" and the words "ratification of the peace treaty" are not synonymous in any of this legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Well, "the gentleman from Massachusetts" did not say that. I said that in other legislation which has been enacted, war legislation——

Mr. GORDON. Yes——

Mr. WALSH. The phraseology "existing emergency" has been uniformly interpreted to mean during the continuance of the war.

Mr. GORDON. No; you are mistaken about that.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps I am, but I do not think so.

Mr. GORDON. That is the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is mistaken in thinking that I am mistaken.

Mr. GORDON. That may be the gentleman's construction.

Mr. WALSH. I was simply asking the gentleman from Nebraska if this language here, as used in this paragraph, was to be interpreted as meaning that those hospitals were to be used during the continuance of the war.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I will say to the gentleman I am quite sure that the construction would be "for use during the emergency for these hospitals, growing out of the war."

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the existing emergency, that they have got to rent and purchase grounds in the District of Columbia and elsewhere?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, I am informed by the gentleman in charge of the Medical Department that, owing to the fact that we are getting so many wounded and sick men home, our hospital facilities are being enlarged in every direction, not only in this city but elsewhere, and buildings are being rented for one purpose and another, and the emergency requires this additional appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment in line 7, to strike out the letters "Ark" and insert the word "Arkansas."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Messachusetts.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 38, line 7, strike out "Ark" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Arkansas."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreement to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHOOTING GALLERIES AND RANGES.

For shelter, grounds, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, machine-gun practice, field-artillery practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, including flour for paste for marking targets, hire of employees, such ranges and galleries to be open as far as practicable to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $300,000.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that down to line 8 that is a paragraph? It is, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee why insert in line 6 the words "to be open as far as practicable to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs"? Is that necessary? We have had a great deal of discussion, as the gentleman knows, about the situation in regard to the National Guard in the service and Regular Army men, of which I know little, but I do know something. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] gave us a good deal of information along that line. Would it be necessary to include that? And if we did include it, would it enable Army officers to prohibit the National Guard officers from using the ranges practically at all?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No. I will say to the gentleman that the explanation of that language employed by the committee was that it was necessary to use the language "as far as practicable" and "prescribed by the Secretary of War," because the hours of practice and the time of the use of these shooting grounds had to be arranged so that they would not conflict with one another.

There is no discrimination between the National Guard and the Regular Army in the matter of the use of these ranges.

Mr. KAHN. The national defense act also provides that the rifle ranges shall be used by these various organizations.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And the language "as far as practicable" not only refers to the National Guard, but also, as the gentleman from Missouri will observe, to organized rifle clubs. Not only do they have to permit the regular military organization, but also in order to encourage rifle practice to permit as far as practicable civic organizations to use these grounds.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to do anything or to offer any proposition that will interfere with the regulations; but I do offer an amendment, on page 39, line 6, which I am sure does not interfere with the regulations. That is, to strike out the words "as far as practicable." It will still be under the regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 39, line 6, strike out the words "as far as practicable."

Mr. DYER. That will not interfere with the regulations and will not encourage Army officers or anyone to deny to these organizations the use of these rifle ranges.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Suppose two organizations wanted to use these rifle ranges at the same time. Unless you leave the matter in the discretion of the Secretary of War to prescribe regulations on the subject——

Mr. DYER. He can do that.

Mr. GORDON. If you leave out the words "as far as practicable," if the two organizations wanted to use it at the same time, you would have a conflict, would you not?

Mr. DYER. I do not think so. It would still be under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War. He will make the regulations, and he will provide through the proper officers, wherever a rifle range is located, so that the National Guard can use it, the time when they may use it, and the time when the rifle clubs may use it and when they may not. It will not interfere with the regulations at all, I am sure. I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] will agree with me in that respect.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That language has always been carried in the item.

Mr. DYER. And there has been more or less trouble sometimes. There is a great deal of feeling that ought not to exist between the Army and the National Guard, and we have heard it creeping out here on the floor. I hope we may do everything we can here to make that friction as little as possible. If we leave out those words, the Secretary of War can still make regulations, and not lead to the belief on the part of the National Guard officers and the rifle clubs that they can not use the range unless they go down on their knees to the Regular Army officers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does not the gentleman believe that if we strike out that provision we will open up the possibility of the very contest that he seeks to avoid, that both organizations will say at the same time that they are entitled to the use of a particular rifle range?

Mr. DYER. No.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I understand that the gentleman still leaves it under regulations, but I am fearful that the gentleman will not get what he is seeking. As I understand the experience of the past, the Regular Army and the National Guard have had no trouble so far as the use of these rifle ranges in these contests is concerned, and I think it will be well to let the language stand as it is.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES TO AND LOSS OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army that have accrued, or may hereafter accrue, from time to time, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the Auditor for the War Department, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages, $40,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Are these claims for which settlement is authorized for damages to property in this country or abroad?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In this country, principally small damages because of artillery fire or any other damage resulting from the operation of our Army. Prior to the war we carried an appropriation of $5,000 in that item, but owing to the tremendous activities of our military forces in the past year the report to us is that they will need more money, and so we put in $40,000. It is to cover small damages occasioned by the activities of the artillery, for instance.

Mr. WALSH. They only had $30,000.

Mr. TILSON. This appropriation was begun about the time we began to hold maneuvers throughout the country, where there were a number of small damages that could be settled immediately at a far less expense and with a great deal more satisfaction than if they permitted them to go on and become claims later. It was found to be very advantageous to do that, and since that time it has been carried in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says that the settlement was made by the Judge Advocate?

Mr. TILSON. No; a representative of the Judge Advocate General's Department was at the maneuvers and he was along to attend to this particular kind of business and adjust it.

Mr. WALSH. He has no authority under this paragraph; this settlement is made by the Auditor of the War Department.

Mr. TILSON. Certainly; the settlement must come up to the auditor.

Mr. KAHN. The Judge Advocate General or his representative is at the camp where the damage is done. He is the legal officer of the War Department and investigates the claims, their nature and incidents connected with it, and finally when it comes to an agreement with the claimant as to the amount of money to be paid it is certified to the Auditor of the War Department.

Mr. TILSON. I know from experience that it has worked well, having been in the field with troops and being more or less acquainted with claims for damages.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Connecticut state why it is desired to have this made immediately available? Have they used up the appropriation for the last year?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know whether that has all been used up or not, but it might well be. If it is used up it ought to be made immediately available.

Mr. KAHN. For instance, they have large-gun target practice. The great concussion causes the breaking of a large number of windows in residences near the fortifications. The War Department receives these claims and ought to be in a position to pay the claimants.

Mr. WALSH. They had better establish a glass factory. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I know that not long ago an orphan asylum located near where one of these big guns was emplaced had all the windows shattered and through this kind of legislation they were able to have them replaced.

Mr. WALSH. What method follows if they can not make a settlement?

Mr. KAHN. They have to come to Congress. A bill for a claim is introduced in the House and it goes to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I am right in remembering that this item went into the bill because of some maneuvers that were held in Kentucky a number of years ago, where the troops marched over fields across growing crops and did a great many other things causing minor damages, which, in the aggregate, did not amount to very much and in individual cases probably did not amount to enough to justify the man who was injured in hiring an attorney, preparing a bill, and hanging around Congress for the next 100 years. Congress at that time thought that in cases of that sort the damage ought not to be inflicted without making such reparation, and there was a provision inserted in the bill authorizing the settlement.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. As a matter of fact, would not a point of order lie that the committee had no jurisdiction of it and it belongs to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. MANN. The provision is legislation, but a point of order would not lie against it, because it is too late to make that point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think it is.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, for fear that this will go to the Committee on War Claims, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this belongs to the Committee on War Claims. I want to find out about it.

Mr. MANN. Let me say to the gentleman from Kansas that after this bill is reported in the House in this way, it is too late to make the point of order that the provision in the bill is a legislative provision and ought to be referred to the Committee on War Claims. It is not possible for this to be referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the point of order of the gentleman is that it should have been referred. It is too late to do that.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take issue with the best parliamentarian in the House upon that subject, but I want to say that I have looked up this very line of subject somewhat, and while, of course, I have not been able to give the matter the broad attention and extended consideration which the gentleman from Illinois has, and shall not challenge his suggestion, because I am satisfied he is sure he is right, as he probably is, yet I do not believe that this committee has any jurisdiction or right or authority to bring any such provision as this in this bill. I do not say that simply because it is legislation, but I would like to know what the Committee on Military Affairs has to do with a matter like this, which the rules say shall go to the Commitee on War Claims. These big committees go poking their noses into everybody's business in this House. I do not say this ungraciously, because the criticism is not made personally as to this committee, but there is not a little committee in this House that comes in here that does not find, about every third day, some big committee tramping all over it. It would be very much better for this House if every little committee was a working committee and did something, and if you big fellows did not have so blamed much to do we would get better bills from you.

Mr. GARNER. How many bills has the War Claims Committee passed in this Congress?

Mr. LITTLE. I will tell the gentleman one thing about that. There is not a committee in this House that has a bigger stack of stuff than the Committee on War Claims or that is apparently more busy in its committee room than this committee, and there is no small committee that has as many clerks, I think, as they have. The gentleman has been here longer than I have, and if they have not done anything will the gentleman tell me what they are doing with so many clerks?

Mr. GARNER. I am merely suggesting to the gentleman that in case this provision does not go in this bill there is no chance of its being reported by the War Claims Committee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman claim that the War Claims Committee would have jurisdiction to report out a provision such as this?

Mr. LITTLE. They would certainly have jurisdiction to handle any claim of that nature.

Mr. WALSH. There is no claim in this provision.

Mr. LITTLE. What business has it here, then?

Mr. KAHN. The very purpose of this provision is to prevent a lot of claims of $1.50 or $2——

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, I know it is a good, sensible thing to do, but done according to the rule there should have been a bill from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. KAHN. Being introduced into this House and turned over to some committee.

Mr. LITTLE. I realize that.

Mr. KAHN. The idea of the paragraph being that those very small amounts can be settled by the War Department without any trouble.

Mr. LITTLE. It is all right, and I am not making the fatal point of order that I could make for that reason, but what I am calling attention to is the fact that these big committees just usurp authority right and left.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, I understand the gentleman's grievance. He is on the Commitee on Claims, but this would not go to the Committee on War Claims; it would go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LITTLE. That is all right, and if it did it would be in good hands, and it would have been far better if it had gone there.

Mr. GORDON. There never would have been any relief then. The whole matter has been fully explained by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. LITTLE. I think you are both right, and for that reason I am not going to make the point that I could, that it is legislation, but I wish that these big committees would attend to their own business and let the little committees take up their work. The enforcement of that rule would improve the congressional work 25 per cent.

Mr. GORDON. We will accept the gentleman's apologies.

Mr. LITTLE. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

RENT OF BUILDINGS, QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for military purposes during the fiscal year 1920, $100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Will the chairman of the committee inform the House for what purpose the $100,000 is to be used in the rental of buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska to answer that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the War Department asked us for $226,000 and we granted them only $100,000. The items are asked for quarters for officers and for noncommissioned officers and for privates.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the need of providing rental for any private office building for quartering officers of the Army when we have provided the most modern office buildings in Potomac Park for the use of the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. KAHN. This is for the rental largely of warehouses in the District of Columbia where the military stores have to be stored and taken care of. A very small part of it, as I recall, is used for office rentals.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there anything in the hearings which relates to this subject, so that we can have positive information as to what this item is to be used for?

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman there is one over here north of the depot that is used for medical supplies—quite a large warehouse.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was formerly used by the Post Office Department for the manufacture of post-office bags and equipment.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it is back of where they ran that spur track in.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the item may be passed over temporarily until I can examine the Book of Estimates to obtain the information which I am seeking from the committee.

Mr. DENT. I think we can give the gentleman the information.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman has the information, I withdraw the request.

Mr. DENT. On page 22 of the hearings the gentleman will find it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to pass this over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McKEOWN offers the following as a new paragraph: After the period at the end of line 7, page 40, insert the following:

"That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be available if the War Department shall permit any officer to make orders, rules, or regulations prohibiting officers or enlisted men from communicating information of conditions in the Army to United States Senators or Members of the House of Representatives."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is whether the amendment is in order. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not care to be heard on the point of order. If the gentleman wants to make the point of order, let him make it. I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order; and let us dispose of the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be rereported; I was reading something here.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DENT. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? This is a limitation upon this appropriation bill and I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is no question it is in the form of a limitation, but it is further true that it infringes upon the authority now vested in the executive officers of the Government. They have authority now to provide regulations under existing law. There is nothing more fundamental in the legislative precedents in the House than that if a limitation, though negative in form, is actually affirmative, so that it interferes with the discretion of an executive officer, or with any authority which the executive officer under existing law now has, it is legislation in fact, and thereby comes under the inhibition that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment as offered does not require any executive branch of the Government nor anybody in the Army to do any positive thing. If it directed the War Department to do something which it was not authorized now to do, it would be legislation no matter what the form might be, but this is a mere withholding of the money appropriated if certain conditions exist. We have a right to prescribe the conditions so long as it does not direct the executive department to do something it is not now authorized to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very point—whether it does not interfere with some authority that the executive officer now has.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly we may make an appropriation direct to an officer, and he may expend it as he pleases if we stop there under the law, but we can put a direction at the end of that that it shall not be spent in a certain way. That does not direct him how he shall spend it. That limits his authority as to how he shall spend it without a direction to him, changing the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes in which to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think this amendment ought to be put on this appropriation bill. You receive letters, and so do I, and at the end of the letter you will find this statement:

Do not let my name be used; do not let them know I wrote you. If you do, it means the penitentiary for me.

I say it is time that this Congress went on record or took some action to protect the men who can not protect themselves and who can not be heard except through the Congressmen who represent their districts. Gag rule is un-American. We put the soldiers in the service and put them there by law. This Congress passed a law that took them whether they wanted to go or not. You can not hear from them and get the facts from them, because they are afraid they will be jerked before a court-martial. You have already seen and heard the record as to what takes place in a court-martial proceeding under the present methods. Every soldier and every officer in the Army of the United States ought to have the right to go to his Congressman or his Senator and tell him the conditions without fear of being brought up before any board and dealt with. And I hope that this amendment will carry. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to give the gentleman from Wisconsin the information the committee has on this subject to which he was referring.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have obtained that information by reading the hearings of the committee, and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order to line 7, page 40.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

For the employment of the necessary civilian instructors in the most important trades, for the purchase of carpenter's, machinist's, mason's, electrician's, and such other tools and equipment as may be required, including machines used in connection with the trades, for the purchase of material and other supplies necessary for instruction and training purposes, and the construction of such buildings needed for vocational training in agriculture for shops, storage, and shelter of machinery as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 27 of the act approved June 3, 1916, authorizing, in addition to the military training of soldiers while in the active service, means for securing an opportunity to study and receive instruction upon educational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations, part of this instruction to consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts, $10,500.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, while the first part of the paragraph apparently undertakes to provide for certain things which it says are necessary for instruction, and so forth, and needed for vocational training, under the provisions of section 27 of the act of June 3, 1916, that is a mere matter of opinion, and the balance of the paragraph is a construction or interpretation of the law, and hence itself is legislation.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I certainly will.

Mr. KAHN. The purpose of that language is this: There are certain branches of the service that have to have mechanics to do the work. For instance, the Aviation Section has to have ground mechanics. The department found it very difficult to get the number of men that was required to do the work, and therefore they organized vocational schools to train these men in those specialized lines of endeavor. I understand the Motor Transport Section had to do the same thing, and they have been conducting those schools under this provision of law.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with the idea of giving the maimed soldiers vocational training. But there is no use in getting up and making a lot of sympathetic pleas about the vocational training provided for in this bill or in this paragraph. The total amount of it is $10,500. It covers a great variety of subjects, and no one knows what it will be spent for. But I dare say that no one will receive vocational training out of it. It will be spent for buildings or something of that sort, in order to ask some more money. Now, there is a vocational training scheme provided for. I do not think there is any justification for the item as it appears in the bill. As far as the amount is concerned, I am not worried about that at all. Ten thousand five hundred dollars in a bill of nearly a billion and a quarter does not scare me, and I have no objection to spending $10,500 or $100,000 or even $500,000 if necessary, added to it, to teach these men vocational training. But this item will not do it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman object to the entire paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I have made a point of order on the paragraph; yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], who is a member of the committee, developed the fact that they are teaching soldiers in his section of the country in agriculture. They are training men in farm labor, and the money in part is being spent for them.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, of course, that is a pretty theory, and it may be all right. At camps or barracks they may teach a one-legged man how to do some work on a farm, but, after all, a one-legged man on a farm can do enough work to more than pay for his keep, and so can a one-armed man.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the act of 1917 we appropriated $250,000 for this same item; in the act of 1918, $55,000; and now they come and ask only for $10,500.

Mr. MANN. That is sufficient illustration to show that it is useless.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

RIFLE RANGES FOR CIVILIAN INSTRUCTION.

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for the employment of labor in connection with the establishment of outdoor and indoor rifle ranges, including labor in operating targets; for the employment of instructors, for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and remain available until expended, $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the language "and to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order upon the language indicated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words, in line 17, page 41, "and to remain available until expended."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can not make a motion like that.

Mr. DENT. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made to the entire paragraph. What does the gentleman say on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That it is not authorized by existing law. It is legislation, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. DENT. It is authorized under the national-defense act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Alabama say that there is an act to authorize the Secretary of War to maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males, and so forth, thereby justifying the Secretary of War in establishing these things anywhere he may please and as many of them as he may please?

Mr. DENT. There is no question in the world but that it is authorized under the national-defense act. The gentleman states it is not authorized by law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If we ever passed that kind of a provision, authorizing the Secretary of War to go over the country and establish such things, I do not know of it.

The CHAIRMAN. When a point of order is made to a provision it is incumbent upon the chairman of the committee to furnish the authority.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a number of members of the committee have discovered things this year that they never thought of before. I will read section 113 of the national-defense act:

The Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress recommendations and estimates for the establishment and maintenance of indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, under such a comprehensive plan as will ultimately result in providing adequate facilities for rifle practice in all sections of the country. And that all ranges so established, and all ranges which may have already been constructed, in whole or in part, with funds provided by Congress shall be open for use by those in any branch of the military or naval service of the United States and by all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the controlling authorities and approved by the Secretary of War. That the President may detail capable officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army and National Guard to duty at such ranges as instructors for the purpose of training the citizenry in the use of the military arm. Where rifle ranges shall have been so established and instructors assigned to duty thereat, the Secretary of War shall be authorized to provide for the issue of a reasonable number of standard military rifles and such quantities of ammunition as may be available for use in conducting such rifle practice.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] makes his point of order it is sound, and it should go out. So far as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is concerned, it seems to me his point of order is not well taken at all, because it is provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, so far as the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is concerned, if that is good the whole paragraph will go out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TILSON. The part of the paragraph that makes it immediately available, I suppose, should go out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order to the whole paragraph. If the language cited by the gentleman from Connecticut is subject to a point of order, then the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan to the entire paragraph is good. It is a familiar principle in our parliamentary procedure that if any part of a paragraph is out of order a point of order directed to the entire paragraph must be sustained.

Mr. TILSON. I was perfectly aware of that fact, and I was trying to call attention to the fact that if that part were removed it would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Alabama can offer his amendment taking that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is seeking to point out that the gentleman from Michigan has directed a point of order to the entire paragraph, and if there is an appending item in the paragraph the point of order applies to the whole paragraph. Hence nothing remains in that case for the Chair but to sus-tain the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan. Of course, it will then be competent for the chairman of the committee to offer the paragraph with the offending matter stricken out as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. DENT. Then I understand the Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to restore the language beginning on line 4, of page 41, down to line 18, ending with the word "war," and restoring the amount. That is in effect the paragraph with the words "and to remain available until expended" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Restore the paragraph beginning with line 3 down to and including the words "Secretary of War," in line 17, and adding the words "10,000."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman has referred to section 113 of the national-defense act, which provides for establishing and maintaining indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, which is much broader than I thought it was, but at that it does not justify such legislation as is contained in the latter part of the amendment—

For the employment of instructors, for clerical services; for badges and other insignia; for the transportation of employees, instructors, and civilians to engage in practice; for the purchase of materials, supplies, and services, and for expenses incidental to instruction of citizens of the United States in marksmanship.

It seems to me such expenditures as that are not justified under section 113.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How would you maintain a rifle range that really was a rifle range without operating targets and hiring the labor for doing it and for the various other things which are incidental to shooting at a target on a range?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Here is language which would justify the paying of the expenses of transporting civilians engaged in rifle practice. If one in Boston took it into his head to go to San Francisco and practice at a range there, and the Secretary of War took it into his head to spend the money to transport that man, he could use the money under this provision. If there is any such authority as that carried in the original act in section 113, I do not read it aright.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The act authorizing the Secretary of War to establish civilian rifle ranges carries with it the presumption of the right to regulate the use of them, to prescribe who shall use them, and how and under what circumstances, and inasmuch as there is no attempt in the act originally to limit his authority in this respect, the House has sought to limit the extent of the exercise of that authority by the amount of the appropriation which it gives him to do anything with, and that is $10,000. He is not likely to send many men across the continent to practice at rifle ranges on $10,000. If he does, he will not have much left for anybody to practice anywhere else.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This gives him authority to transport men. The amendment is subject to the point of order. The gentleman says there is no presumption that the Secretary of War will do anything of this kind. That is a rather violent presumption. He has done so many things, he has used money in so many ways that Congress had no idea it would be used, I do not know that it is a violent assumption that he will send men clear across the country if he takes it into his head to do it.

This is much broader in other respects than those I have pointed out than the act itself. The idea of giving the Secretary of War blanket authority to spend public money as he pleases is a mistake. We have had examples enough of the misuse of money so that we ought to be careful in drafting these laws. Why, there was a paragraph here a few pages back carrying $449,000,000, and the Secretary of War might have used it all buying ships without any previous authority of law. He might have used the whole $449,000,000 in buying automobiles for officers in the Army. There was no limit. He could use all the money or a part of it for any of the many purposes stated in that section. They say we must trust the Secretary of War. Well, I would not say a word reflecting on the Secretary. I should not have employed some of the words used here earlier in the day—some very harsh language used toward the Secretary of War. When I am inclined to criticize him, I prefer to adopt the parliamentary language used by the gentleman from California, and to say that he is "optimistic." I believe in restricting, just as much as we can, the use of money by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, we ought to have the point of order discussed, or else go ahead with the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let the Chair rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to be discussing the point of order. He was undertaking to point out that the language of the amendment was broader that was justified by the language of section 113 of the national-defense act.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that has anything to do with the $449,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; of course not. The Chair does not mean that the gentleman in every utterance he made was speaking to his point of order, but in a general way he was, and the Chair did not propose to break in on his argument. Of course, the only thing before the committee is the point of order. The Chair will ask the gentleman to discuss his point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have discussed it; and I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this section as now offered by the gentleman from Alabama is much broader than section 113 of the national-defense act. It authorizes the Secretary of War to use money for purposes not mentioned in section 113. There are many things that are not mentioned in section 113 at all.

Mr. DYER. What does the gentleman refer to that the previous legislation does not authorize?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Chair has the amendment before him.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, he has the national-defense act there which authorizes the establishment and maintenance of outdoor rifle ranges, and so forth. The only thing this does in addition is to explain more in detail what the Secretary of War can do through the national board for the promotion of rifle practice on these ranges. I am sure the gentleman will not find anything in the language that is not necessary to conduct a rifle range.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me to call attention to section 113 of the national-defense act, which reads as follows, "Under reasonable regulations, to be prescribed by the controlling authorities and approved by the Secertary of War," is not that language sufficient to admit the detail for expenditures that is set out in this paragraph of the appropriation bill "under the reasonable regulations"? That is certainly indefinite as to detail, but is restricted within the usual intention of the English language as to extent and character of detail.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Some things mentioned in the section are clearly within the provisions of section 113, and some of them, in my judgment, are not included and can not reasonably be included. For instance, transport and instruction of employees and civilians engaged in target practice.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is the gentleman opposed to the appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think if the work is properly carried on it is all right.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman permit me to say that officers returning from the front told me that one reason why we made such splendid progress over there was due to the fact that Americans had been taught how to shoot. This provision, which is authorized by the national-defense act, provides facilities to our citizens to learn how to shoot. You have to have instructors; you have to have all of these various facilities, if you want to carry out the provisions of that law. Therefore it seems to me that there has to be a little latitude in the language of the paragraph. No doubt every separate item is covered by regulations issued by the Secretary of War. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the provision of the national-defense act on which this provision in the bill is based:

SEC. 113. Encouragement of rifle practice.—The Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress recommendations and estimates for the establishment and maintenance of indoor and outdoor rifle ranges, under such a comprehensive plan as will ultimately result in providing adequate facilities for rifle practice in all sections of the country. And that all ranges so established and all ranges which may have already been constructed, in whole or in part, with funds provided by Congress shall be open for use by those in any branch of the military or naval service of the United States and by all able bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the controlling authorities and approved by the Secretary of War. That the President may detail capable officers and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army and National Guard to duty at such ranges as instructors for the purpose of training the citizenry in the use of the military arm. Where rifle ranges shall have been so established and instructors assigned to duty thereat, the Secretary of War shall be authorized to provide for the issue of a reasonable number of standard military rifles and such quantities of ammunition as may be available for use in conducting such rifle practice.

The Chair will call the attention of the committee to the fact that the language read is very comprehensive. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan is not without difficulty, but the language cited is so sweeping that the Chair will not undertake to say that the details contained in the appropriation bill are outside the scope of the act, reasonably construed. With some hesitation the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order in order to correct a statement which I made yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] offered the following amendment:

All officers and enlisted men who in actual combat or while in actual service at any front shall have performed the duties of an officer or enlisted man of higher grade or rank shall, for the period during which such duties were performed, and until relieved by competent authority, receive the same pay and allowance as the officer or enlisted man of the grade or rank whose duties were assumed. Such payment and record of service shall appear on the discharge certificate of each officer and man affected. For pay of such officers and enlisted men, $2,000,000.

During the debate on that amendment I reminded the House of the historical fact that, at the Battle of Gettysburg, on the third day, after Gen. Hancock and Gen. Gibbon had been wounded and carried from the field, Frank Haskell, of a Wisconsin regiment, seized the command of the troops and with wonderful success acted as general of a division at the very crisis of the battle at the Bloody Angle and the Clump of Trees, and that for this heroic conduct he was commended in Gen. Gibbon's official report. In the RECORD I am reported as saying that Haskell was on that day a lieutenant colonel; but that was an error. I should have said that he was only a first lieutenant—first lieutenant of Company I, Sixth Wisconsin Infantry, acting as adjutant and aid-de-camp to Gen. Gibbon.

For this wonderful service Haskell was made colonel of the Thirty-sixth Wisconsin, and at the head of that regiment, while leading a charge at Cold Harbor, he was killed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the procurement and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, such public animals, uniforms, equipment, and means of transportation as he may deem necessary, and to forage at the expense of the United States public animals so issued; for transporting said animals and other authorized equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for the maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein so far as appropriations will permit; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at such rate, not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, $3,000,000.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 42, line 15, after the dollar mark, strike out all of the figures and insert in lieu thereof "100."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, what does that mean?

Mr. DENT. That means that instead of $3,000,000 it is $100. I hope that satisfies the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, some days since I read in the RECORD a very caustic criticism by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] of Capt. A. H. Scales, commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. The criticism was based upon excerpts alleged to have been taken from an editorial in a publication known as the Bulletin, and also a notice relative to discharges. A personal acquaintance with Capt. Scales led me to the conclusion that the reports reaching the gentleman from Kansas were either erroneous or misunderstood. Accordingly I wrote to Capt. Scales for the facts. I have received a reply from him, which is courteous, dignified, and informing, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the gentleman be willing to wait until the gentleman from Kansas is present?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There is nothing in the reply that in any way reflects on the gentleman from Kansas, and if there was I would not for a moment make this request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDANT,
UNITED STATES NAVAL TRAINING STATION,
GREAT LAKES, ILL., February 5, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. OLIVER: Your letter of January 31 reached me to-day, and I beg to assure you that I appreciate your writing it for it bears the impress of a just man who believes that there are generally two sides to a question. I shall, therefore, take the greatest pleasure in giving you the information you desire, and in telling you that I shall continue to give you all the assistance in my power when you inquire concerning the station under my command.

Before proceeding with the question of the attack made on me in the House by Mr. LITTLE, I desire to mention the matter about which you and Mr. CANNON spoke to me. As we have not the name of the young man concerned, it is now rather difficult to locate the correspondence. I remember distinctly, however, that I took up the matter immediately on my return, and I am under the impression that it concerned a young man not on this immediate station, but at one of the outlying posts. In that case, the correspondence would have been referred to this outlying post, and this might have something to do with matters not going as you desired them. I am taking immediate steps to trace the correspondence, and if I can obtain the name from you, the matter will be very much simplified. I will write you on this subject in a separate communication.

I was filled with amazement on reading Mr. LITTLE'S attack on me for a notice published in the Great Lakes Bulletin. He gave it an interpretation entirely foreign to that which I had intended it should bear. Please note that this is a notice and not an order. An order directs men to do certain things, and they are compelled to comply with its provisions. A notice, in this sense, carries to them certain information which it is desirable for them to know. This distinction should be borne in mind in considering this subject. It may be well to state in the beginning that the notice itself was published with my approval. The editorial in the bulletin, to which he takes exception, was published by the editors of the paper, who are enlisted or enrolled men of the Navy, and who, while allowed a great deal of liberty in expressing the opinions of the enlisted men at this station, are, at the same time, governed in their general policy by the commandant's ideas on the proper line to be taken. The editorials, before publication, are submitted to the executive officer of this station, who passes upon their suitability before releasing them.

Speaking in round numbers, there were 40,000 men at this station and in this district when I took command, December 7, 1918. Of this number, the department had authorized the release of 20 per cent. Later on, an additional 20 per cent of the remaining 80 per cent was authorized to be released, making 36 per cent of the whole. This meant that of the 40,000, approximately 14,000 could be released, and the department specified the character of cases that were to receive preferred consideration. This you, of course, know, but the point I am trying to lay stress upon is that after the 14,000 should be released there would remain about 20,000 young men clamoring to be released from active duty.

The volume of the correspondence entailed in connection with this work has been enormous. It has completely overtaxed the capacity of the office force and of all the additional help that we could call in from the other activities of the station. Letters came in not only from Members of Congress but from persons in every conceivable walk of life, and one man's case would sometimes involve scores of letters. About the middle of January, after trying every possible method to decrease the volume of this work, I decided that it was absolutely necessary to in some way decrease the volume of correspondence that was pouring in upon me. This was necessary in order that requests from Members of Congress, as well as other requests deserving consideration, should receive the attention that was their due. Without some diminution of the volume of work it was impossible to give these things their proper attention. I therefore decided that I would attempt to accomplish the purpose by appealing to the good sense of the men themselves, for I have always found that an appeal to the reason of the American sailor and his sense of fair play will accomplish the desired result. I had thought that an appeal of this kind would also work to the benefit of Members of Congress, relieve them of some of their burdens, and consequently relieve me of many of my own.

Had I for a moment suspected that this notice would be a subject for adverse criticism on the floor of the House of Representatives I would have caused it to be worded not only with a view to accomplishing the purpose I have just outlined, but with a view to making it proof against unjust criticism and misinterpretation. Whatever interpretation a Member of Congress may choose to put upon it, it did not mean the things Mr. LITTLE ascribes to it, and it did not mean that there was any objection to any Member of Congress at any time writing a letter to the commandant on any matter upon which he saw fit to address him. It did mean that the men themselves were advised not to bother their Congressmen any more than was positively necessary, and that if they continued to do so they were in a measure defeating the very object which they were endeavoring to attain. Not because it was improper or undesirable for the Congressmen to write to the commandant in their behalf, but because on account of the number of letters and papers of all kinds and descriptions it was impossible for the office force at my disposal to properly classify, act upon, and answer them.

Your recollection of a statement made by Capt. Laning to the House Naval Committee is entirely in accord with my own recollection of it. Not only that, but I was asked at that time by a Member what I would do in case a Member of Congress made a definite recommendation concerning the release of a man. My reply was to the effect that I would accept that recommendation as to facts and act upon it favorably, provided it came within the scope of my orders. The impression which Mr. LITTLE appears to have concerning my attitude toward the question of letters from Members of Congress is entirely erroneous. I have been glad to receive letters from Members of Congress on this subject, and I am still glad to receive them. I have acted in every case favorably on the recommendation of Members of Congress where I could make the recommendation conform to the orders under which I was acting, the rights of others, and the consideration due the requests for release I received, including those from other Members of Congress. In deciding upon the cases in general, I have received a considerable amount of assistance from these letters from Members of Congress, and I have availed myself of it to the full. The office force under my control has made every effort to answer all communications, particularly those from Members of Congress, with the greatest courtesy. In doing this they have worked long hours, including many hours overtime, each day. If they have failed the failure has been entirely due to the lack of time in which to properly handle all the cases. The records of this office, if examined, will show that an enormous amount of labor and time, all the time that has been available, has been devoted to the endeavor to properly handle all correspondence received, particularly that from Members and Senators. I again express to you the fact that I not only have no objections to receiving letters from a Member, but that I am glad to receive them. They frequently bring to me facts I would not otherwise have known. However, I feel at liberty to state that I believe that Members of Congress are frequently called upon to write letters that they would be just as well satisfied not to write if all the facts were explained to them. In my letters to them I have endeavored to explain all the facts; I have endeavored to write letters they could forward to their constituents, and in this notice which has been the subject of attack I have endeavored to reduce the number of unnecessary applications to them.

Concerning the editorial in the Bulletin which Mr. LITTLE complains of, I will state that this was one of many written in an effort to reduce the state of unrest and dissatisfaction among the station personnel caused by the fact that all could not be released from active duty at one time. The 64 per cent who could not be released are almost unanimous in desiring their releases. For the good of this station I endeavored to appeal to their sense of fairness to their comrades and to the fact, which they themselves well knew, that among them were some who attempted to obtain this release by false pretenses. I advised them that they should carefully consider the validity of their claims before presenting them. I also called the attention of the men to the fact that there were many unemployed in the country and that it was perhaps just as well for them to wait a few months before demanding releases. In short, I combated by every proper method what we here call "release fever," which threatened, and does still threaten, the very object for which the station is here. The editorial complained of, while not written by me nor seen by me until after its publication, was in general line with this policy. Other articles have appeared in the Great Lakes Bulletin, written by chaplains, Young Men's Christian Association secretaries, and others, which had this same object in view and presented arguments along the same line. The strictures that the editorial in question conveyed were intended for and applied only to men who well merited such strictures. Happily these are very few indeed compared with the large body of men attached to this station. I send you a copy of that editorial, and you will see that the extracts quoted by Mr. LITTLE, taken apart from the rest of the editorial, could easily be construed into something entirely at variance with the spirit of the whole editorial. I call your particular attention to a paragraph near the end, which I have marked. There was no attempt in this editorial to insult anybody, and no honest man at Great Lakes was insulted by it. I send you the Great Lakes Bulletin containing the editorial, that you may also see the character of the publication.

We are releasing men at this station at the rate of about 300 a day, and since the order was signed we have released nearly 14,000 at the station alone, not counting those released in the districts under my command. The work has been done as fast as the labor involved could be performed, and has frequently involved long hours overtime. The people engaged in the demobilization, including myself, have not spared themselves whenever the work could be hastened by prolonged efforts. There is a physical limit to the number that can be released each day, and some men, no matter how just their claims, have to wait a considerable time to secure release.

I have written you at this great length because you have written a courteous letter and one I deeply appreciate. I heartily wish that you could have visited this station, that I could have accorded its honors, and I am convinced that you would have left it with a realization that the spirit here is a priceless thing; that it has enabled great things to be accomplished; and that nowhere are officers of our Government, including Members of Congress, more honored and respected or held in higher esteem.

Very respectfully,

A. H. SCALES,
Captain, United States Navy, Commandant.

Hon. WILLIAM B. OLIVER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The notice referred to in the letter is herewith inserted:

DON'T BE A "QUITTER."

Every man of the Naval Reserve Force or of the Regulars, enlisted for the duration of the war, became a party to a contract with the United States Navy and the United States of America when he took the oath and donned the uniform.

This contract was a sacred one—as sacred an agreement as any real American he-male can bind himself to. Every man entering into it pledged himself, on his honor, to serve the Navy of the Stars and Stripes until such time as "finis" has been written to the last chapter of the great war.

That inscription has not been written as yet, nor will it be time to write it until the final decisions of the peace conference are filed away in the archives of the Nations and the last American soldier has been brought back safely from the bloody fields of Europe. Only the climax of the great war, represented by the signing of the armistice, has been passed; ahead of the Navy lies the tremendous job of transporting home the million or more men it took over, and of rushing food to Europe to prevent hunger and counteract Bolshevism.

What must we think, then, of the man who would "lie down" in the midst of the greatest task ever given any navy, merely because he sees an opportunity for better money "on the outside," or some other equally selfish reason?

Shameful as it is to confess, there are not a few such men at Great Lakes, men who, now that the excitement and glory of the war has passed, think of little else than how they can obtain their releases or discharges; how to desert their conscientious shipmates in the more prosaic, though just as important, work that lies ahead.

These men—and their number would indicate that "discharge fever" has become an epidemic at Great Lakes—have tried nearly every known ruse in deception and intrigue to get out of the service. They have attempted to obtain political influence, they have secured false affidavits as to equally false dependency claims, they have made statements in their applications which proved on investigation to be the most barefaced of lies, and the number of dying grandmothers and other relatives mentioned would indicate to the unsophisticated that nothing short of Persian pox or the bubonic plague is raging throughout the Middle West.

Lest there be a misunderstanding, those men who have a truly legitimate reason for wishing to return to civil life as speedily as possible are not included in any category with the would-be "quitters." Men who have dependents and whose circumstances are such that the latter are undergoing actual hardships, are entitled to apply for release or discharge, and to leave the service among the first 20 per cent to go. So are the youths who quit school to enlist, and who now wish to return to complete their education. It is felt that in this particular chapter of the great war these men can be spared, and the justice of placing their applications as the first for consideration is obvious to any fair-minded man.

But the man who has no such reason, nor one equally worthy, and who resorts to lying and subterfuge in an attempt to climb out over the backs of shipmates who have made greater sacrifices than he—such a man is beneath contempt. He is false to his country, his pledged word of honor, and himself.

"God Almighty hates a quitter," and so does the American Navy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I made a point of order upon the paragraph on vocational training, on page 40 of the bill. I have learned more about it since I made the point of order, and I would like to return to the paragraph and withdraw the point of order, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 40, to the paragraph entitled "Vocational training," in order that he may withdraw a point of order heretofore made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order simply for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. Is there any particular reason why one of the vocations was eliminated from the list carried in the bill? I notice they have dispensed with the purchase of plumbers' tools and equipment.

Have they authorized the giving of any training along that line?

Mr. DENT. I know of no reason why they struck out that particular language. I thought the language was broad enough to include that.

Mr. WALSH. It was carried in the acts heretofore, and I did not know but there was some reason for dispensing with training along that line.

Mr. DENT. No; there is no reason I know of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 41, line 2, by striking out the word "acts" and inserting the word "arts." That is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

INLAND AND PORT STORAGE FACILITIES.

For inland and port storage, including all necessary buildings, docks, tracks, handling, and other facilities for Government supplies, including rentals and purchase of land, the hire of the necessary employees, $30,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment and have it read.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of asking whether it is desired to purchase any more land?

Mr. DENT. It is not. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk to be read, I think it meets any objection which he may have on that line.

Mr. MANN. Let it be read for information.

Mr. DENT. The bill really is not printed as the committee agreed to it. I would like to have the amendment reported for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, strike out all the language after the word "necessary," in line 2, down to and including the word "necessary," in line 5, so that as amended the language will read:

"For inland and port storage, including the necessary employees."

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the amount is to remain the same. Is it intended to purchase any land out of this?

Mr. DENT. It is not, and that is the reason we strike out the language.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but I am not at all sure but the language as reformed would still allow the purchase of land if it was intended.

Mr. DENT. It was expressly stated it was not the intention.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized on the amendment for the purpose of interrogating the chairman. If his amendment should prevail, this whole $30,000,000 would be for inland and port storage. How is it possible for the War Department to expend that much just on storage?

Mr. DENT. They asked $60,000,000, and the committee cut it down to $30,000,000. The gentleman knows this appropriation involves the question of the debarkation of our troops.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why, yes; but they have got warehouses; they have got the storage facilities; and I can not see how it is to be applied except by putting goods in there and taking them out.

Mr. DENT. Gen. Goethals made the statement in reference to the number of warehouses we had in the country at different ports of entry and the different inland warehouses which we had, and that the maintenance would be so much per square foot, and we cut his estimate in two.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then, as I understand, we have got to pay $30,000,000 every year right along; that we have got to continue this appropriation to keep up our warehouses?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says for maintenance it would be so much per square foot?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit, the greatest item in this appropriation is for the handling of these tremendous stores that we have, and these different departments not only put them in, but many of them have to be handled over and over again as they are taken out, because we have these tremendous amounts of supplies on hand which are almost beyond conception of anybody who has not a vivid imagination. It requires, in spite of the fact it is astounding, and the judgment of those men who had this work in hand and know more about it than anybody else in the United States is that it would take $60,000,000 to handle it, and the committee cut it in two, not with the idea that it would be taken care of, but that they had to have that money anyway.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Apparently the members of the committee simply know what was the opinion of the general without any facts in support.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. He gave absolute details of every item, as to every storehouse, and the exact amount of the appropriation.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. He called particular attention to the Bush terminals in Brooklyn and the Newark Bay terminals near Harrison, N. J. The quantities of material that are handled through those warehouses alone aggregate in value many hundreds of millions of dollars, and if they are not properly stored and housed the loss to the Government will be enormous.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question. This is one-third, practically, of the entire appropriation made prior to the war; that is, when the appropriations ran about $100,000,000. There are $30,000,000 in this one item. I understood the committee took Gen. Goethals's figures and cut them in two. On what basis?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On the basis that the committee hoped we might get along with less money.

Mr. FREAR. Yes. On that same basis and carrying it a little further, what would be the objection to cutting this $30,000,000 to $15,000,000, which would be one-fourth, in the hope that we may get along with that, and we would further reduce the amount of the bill? I am asking for information purely, I am frank to say.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The answer to that is, that we might carry it down to probably a dollar, with the hope that that would be sufficient.

Mr. FREAR. What is the basis of the gentleman's estimate that $30,000,000 will cover this, instead of $60,000,000 as estimated by Gen. Goethals?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, in answer to his question, it is the experience and judgment of the members of the Military Committee that in asking for these appropriations sometimes the department asks for rather liberal appropriations. And this being an entirely new item, and one with which no one has had any experience, our committee thought because this matter has come upon us since this war, with the idea that it would require $60,000,000 to store and handle the products of the Government during this war, it was something beyond our conception. We finally, after deliberation, made this as our best and most conservative estimate as to what they would possibly get along with.

Mr. FREAR. Let me say that there is no criticism against any member of the committee. They realize that. The one purpose is to ascertain on what basis this $60,000,000 was reduced to $30,000,000?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. The committee felt that as the Army was demobilizing the quantities of supplies and stores that would be required would be materially reduced, and that a much smaller quantity would be handled during the next fiscal year. And on that basis the committee thought probably the director general of the Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division could get along with half the amount he asked.

Mr. FREAR. If it is not all used, the balance will remain in the Treasury?

Mr. KAHN. It will go back into the Treasury.

Mr. FREAR. Of course, we are all in the dark.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman, when these great terminals were built the committee was asked for $53,000,000. It turned out afterwards that the estimate was altogether too small, and it was materially increased. Later about $50,000,000 of the sums appropriated were covered back into the Treasury. We hope that this amount, on account of the reduction of the Army, will suffice. We may have cut it too much, and it is possible that they will have to come to Congress for a deficiency appropriation. But the committee felt that they were doing fairly by the Government by reducing it one-half.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Are we to understand that this storage is to be in buildings and on property owned now by the Government?

Mr. KAHN. Much of it. And more so in buildings rented by the Government not only on the seaboard, but even in the inland cities.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Would this pay for the rental?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The word "rental" was included in this paragraph before and has been stricken out.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It includes rentals.

Mr. KAHN. Including rentals.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But, on motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], those words go out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It seems to me it would be included anyhow in the word "storage."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It seems to me it might be included, and, following the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it might include also the purchase of land. Now, if it is intended to pay the rent, if it is intended to give authority to purchase land, I think the words should be there, and direct and positive authority should be given department officials to pay the rent or to purchase the land, and not leave it to an inference, not leave them to use $30,000,000 without any direction. If the committee knows how it is to be used, let that manner of use be suggested, and let the words be written here, to tell the Secretary what Congress has determined.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Gen. Goethals told the committee that about $4,000,000 of this amount would be required for rentals.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Then would it not be better to leave the word "rentals" in, instead of striking it out? If they had not been there at all, then there would be some justification for Gen. Goethals to use this money for paying rentals; but they are there, or were there, and Congress refuses to permit them to remain. That suggests that the money is not to be used for rentals.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will allow me, I must say his criticism is hypercritical. I have undertaken to change the language so as to make it broad enough to include that, without the right to purchase land. It provides for inland and port storage. I do not think there is any question in the world but that they can take care of it under the language that the committee finally agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman say that the language, in his judgment, as he would have it remain, "For inland and port storage, including all necessary storage, $30,000,000," does not carry authority to purchase land?

Mr. DENT. I certainly do.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The language is so broad and inclusive that I would feel that the authority of the Secretary is without limit; he could use the money in furnishing this storage in any way he might wish.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama has not yet been voted on.

Mr. DENT. Yes; it has not yet been voted on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And possibly the gentleman from Alabama might be willing to let the words "including rentals" stay. I think the department ought to have authority for that purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not objecting to giving the department authority to rent, and I am not objecting now to giving them authority to purchase; but if I wished to give authority to rent, I would say so, and if I wished to give them authority to purchase, I would say so, and I would say so in words that could not be misunderstood.

Mr. DENT. Well, may I ask the gentleman this question: Suppose he used the language he suggests, "For inland and port storage, including all necessary buildings, docks, tracks, handling, and other facilities for Government supplies, including rentals and the hire of the necessary employees," is that what the gentleman wants done?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was asking the gentleman the meaning of the words, and when he gave his idea of what the words mean I ventured humbly to differ from him. I am not speaking by way of criticism altogether, but I do not like the language, because it seems to me to be too broad.

Mr. DENT. I think the gentleman is speaking by way of hypercriticism, and when he criticizes the language I think he should suggest some improvement upon it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say this: I have had something to do with drawing appropriation bills, and when I was positively of the opinion that money should not be used for a certain purpose, when I thought it might be, I added words forbidding its use for that purpose.

Mr. DENT. Is the gentleman opposed to the item or has he any suggestion to make as to how the language should be changed? Let us get down to the practical point, unless the gentleman desires to delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The chairman of the committee has no suggestion to make. Is that the idea?

Mr. DENT. I have made a suggestion which I think covers the whole thing, and I have offered an amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why not leave the language in the bill except the "purchase of land"?

Mr. DENT. I am willing to do that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman to move to strike out, in line 4, the words "purchase of land."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment has really never been reported, so that there is nothing to withdraw.

Mr. DENT. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out from line 4, page 43, the words "purchase of land."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 43, line 4, strike out the words "purchase of land."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, before I vote for this amendment I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether this item includes the storage and handling of the food and clothing for the soldiers over in France?

Mr. DENT. No; only in this country.

Mr. DALLINGER. May I ask the chairman where in the bill there is an item which covers the handling of the food and clothing for the soldiers in France?

Mr. DENT. That is under several different items of the bill. It is under the provision for subsistence; it is under the clothing and camp and garrison equipage. There are several items in the bill that take care of that.

Mr. DALLINGER. I am referring now particularly to the storage and handling of food and clothing for the soldiers in France. The reason I have asked this question is that there is a great deal of complaint from the boys coming home that while apparently there is plenty of food of the very best quality stored over in France the boys do not get it. The boys who have been sick and wounded at a place called St. Aignon, on their way to ports of embarkation, have not been receiving sufficient food fit to eat, and they have not been receiving proper clothing or shelter. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to have enough money appropriated for that purpose, so that the War Department can not say they did not do these things because Congress refused to appropriate the necessary money.

Mr. DENT. I think we have appropriated money enough for that purpose. I hope we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT.

For the manufacture and purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports, for laundry work for enlisted men and Army nurses while patients in a hospital, and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about military posts in the Canal Zone, $10,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may in his discretion select types and makes of motor ambulances for the Army and authorize their purchase without regard to the laws prescribing advertisement for proposals for supplies and materials for the Army; for the purchase of veterinary supplies and hire of veterinary surgeons; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in the military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided further, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Nurse Corps (female), and of cooks, and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men; and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the enlisted force of the Medical Department; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, printing, binding, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Is it proposed to purchase any new hospital ships and transports for the Medical Department?

Mr. DENT. No proposition of that kind was suggested.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand, most of this money will be expended by that division of the Army known as the P. S. & T.—the Division of Purchase, Storage, and Traffic. They are now purchasing the medical supplies for the Army. In all, about $7,000,000 of this money will be expended for this purpose. The other $3,000,000, as I recall the testimony, will be expended directly by the Medical Department itself. So far as the committee developed the facts in the hearings, there is not intention to spend any of this money for the purchase of hospital ships.

Mr. MANN. May I ask, in reference to the proviso found at the bottom of page 43, authorizing the purchase of motor ambulances without regard to advertisement, do they need to purchase any more special ambulances?

Mr. KAHN. They are trying to acquire ambulances of special contrivance. As I understand it, they are inducing the manufacturers of ambulances to experiment further in order that the best possible kind of ambulances may be developed. I think the appropriation in that respect would allow the purchase of those ambulances.

Mr. MANN. I can see that this item might be very desirable if it was purposed to get ambulances for use at the front. They would want to make some changes. But these are ambulances purely for use in time of peace to convey soldiers. Is it desirable to let them purchase those ambulances without competition?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the gentleman from California will recall that one of the medical officers who appeared before the committee made this explanation, but while there is a general plan now to have the different motor vehicles purchased by one central authority, the medical department feel that they are the ones to judge as to the particular fitness of the kind of vehicle they want, and they find that where they do not have that absolutely under their own control they do not get the kind of ambulance they want. Therefore, they ask for that special provision in order to permit them to exercise their judgment as to what they ought to have.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, I take it that when the medical department indicates the kind of an ambulance that it wants the purchasing department purchases that kind of an ambulance. If that is not the case, there is no use in conferring on the Secretary of War discretion to do something else, because all he has got to do is to nod his head and that will be the case. He can require the purchasing department to purchase ambulances such as the medical department desires.

Now that we have returned to a peace basis, is there anything in the act—I do not want to stand in the way if there is—to allow the Secretary of War to buy ambulances without competition just as anybody happens to have a favorite in the motor manufacturing business?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think that is the intention. The intention rather is to try out new ambulances that have been improved since the last purchases were made. Of course, there are occasions when a soldier falls sick in some little camp where there are no proper hospital facilities. He has to be put into an ambulance and carried sometimes for miles before he is put into the proper hospital.

Mr. MANN. That is the case of private citizens and many more private citizens than there are soldiers. Ambulances are not unknown.

Mr. KAHN. There are some places where there are no civilian ambulances. There are Army posts where they have to depend on the Army ambulance.

Mr. MANN. I am not opposing the Army ambulance. The question is whether the Secretary of War, which means some subordinate official, will be permitted to make a contract with a motor concern for an ambulance at high prices because he happens to have a friend in that concern and to purchase it without competition.

Mr. KAHN. The purpose of the item is to allow the purchase of one ambulance, probably, that has been developed by some manufacturer of ambulances, in order that the Medical Department may have the benefit of new construction and try it out thoroughly. Then, if that ambulance proves a decided success, a larger number could be purchased.

Mr. MANN. The purpose is to experiment with ambulances on the sick and wounded soldier so that people in civil life can have the benefit after the soldier is dead?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I recollect that three or four years ago the Surgeon General asked that the same language be inserted for the purpose of standardizing the ambulances, but they never have done it, and they have 57 varieties now.

Mr. MANN. They will not do it as long as some official has a chance to make a contract with some motor manufacturer whom he wants to favor. I am not going to set up my judgment against the judgment of the committee, but I will make a point of order in line 19, page 43, "hospital ships and transports." It is not intended to purchase any of these?

Mr. DENT. I concede the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the general reservation and make a point of order against that language.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think if the gentleman will read that provision a second time he will see that this is for the purchase of medical and hospital supplies for hospitals, hospital ships, and transports.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Vermont is right, and I do not make the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to take up the time of the committee at this late hour, but I want to call to the attention of the House and the country generally the danger of a possible epidemic being brought over here from the other side in bringing back the soldiers. Typhus is now epidemic in some parts of Europe, in some countries that were engaged in the war. The typhus fever is carried by the body louse. That insect also brings about the so-called trench fever and the so-called relapsing fever. This item carries an appropriation for preventing these epidemics. I feel sure that the Medical Department has a great task before it in trying to stamp out and to prevent any of these diseases being brought to this country. If the Spanish influenza had been stopped by quarantine at our ports originally we would not have had such a terrible death loss in our country. I understand it is the purpose of the medical officers to see that no typhus, trench, or relapsing fevers shall come into this country.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 19, page 43, to the comma after the word "transports." Ought that not to be a semicolon? There is an abrupt change in the text.

Mr. DENT. Yes; and I will offer an amendment to that effect.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 43, line 19, after the word "transports," strike out the comma and insert a semicolon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that recalls something. We were read a lecture here to-day for making any criticism of the War Department, or of anything that somebody might complain about. We have been read that lecture several times, but here is an illustration of the benefit of calling attention to some of these matters. Some time ago one of the papers here—I think it was the Washington Post—published a story about how the sick boys out at Walter Reed Hospital, boys with one arm or without any arms, were required to do their own laundry work. If that had not been made known, this semicolon would not be required. The semicolon that it is proposed to insert is to be inserted in front of a new item in the bill providing for payment for laundry work for enlisted men and Army nurses while patients in a hospital. I do not apprehend, as a matter of fact, that it was necessary to insert the item in the bill to make the money available for that purpose, but it was necessary probably to put the item in the bill, in order to let the department know that these patients, maimed as they are, unable to do laundry work as they are, still were required to do it or hire it done. I am mighty glad that the Committee on Military Affairs rose to the occasion and provided that hereafter a sick soldier in a hospital shall not be required to get out of bed and hunt for a bathtub or a basin in which to wash his underclothes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that the American negro has proved in the present war that he has a right to share with his white comrades much of the honor that has come to our arms in France. I do this because of the fact that these black troops were raised possibly under adverse conditions, or even unfriendly conditions, and the history of the war in France has demonstrated that they have measured up to the record made by our negro troops in every war in which this country has been engaged from the Revolution down to the Civil War and the Spanish-American War and the war of the present day. [Applause.] I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD some of the official records and citations and facts connected with the operation of these troops.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire as to what the gentleman from Kansas meant when he said that these colored troops were raised under unfriendly conditions?

Mr. ANTHONY. There was a good deal of comment at the time they came into the service, and question was raised as to their possible usefulness.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

Negro soldiers made a record as fighters in this war as they did in the Spanish-American and Civil Wars. Fighting for the first time on the soil of the world's most famous battle fields—Europe—and for the first time brought into direct comparison with the best soldiers of Germany, Great Britain, and France, they showed themselves able to hold their own where the tests of courage, endurance, and aggressiveness were most severe.

Colored troops fought valiantly at Chateau-Thierry, Soissons, on the Vesle, in Champagne, in the Argonne, and in the final attacks in the Metz region. The entire first battalion of the Three hundred and sixty-seventh Infantry—"Buffaloes"—was awarded the croix de guerre for heroism in the drive on Metz. Most remarkable of all, they received their baptism of battle in this attack: at the start they won honors which veterans of many conflicts have failed to capture.

In previous engagements of the war, for distinguished service, three colored regiments as units were awarded the croix de guerre, which bestows on each member the right to wear the coveted badge. When the fighting stopped the negro troops were nearest the Rhine.

Not until now has the story as a whole of the part played by our negro troops in France been available. The total number of negro combat troops was 42,000. These consisted of the Ninety-second Division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Charles G. Ballou, and four regiments of the provisional Ninety-third Division. To describe the colored man as a fighter in a war which, because of the terrible weapons used, called for more pure nerve than any other war, three ways present themselves: To show the negro in individual exploits, then in a regiment engaged separately with white troops, and, finally, to show him in a battle in a division entirely composed of men of his own race.

NEGRO AS INDIVIDUAL FIGHTER.

Here is an individual exploit:

The Three hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry, colored, fought in the Argonne. It became necessary to send a runner with a message to the left flank of an American firing line. The way was across an open field swept by heavy enemy machine-gun fire.

Volnteers were called for. Pvt. Edward Saunders, of Company I, responded. Before he had gone far a shell cut him down. As he fell he cried to his comrades:

"Some one come and get this message. I am wounded."

Lieut. Robert L. Campbell, of the same company, sprang to the rescue. He dashed across the shell-swept space, picked up the wounded private, and, with the Germans fairly hailing bullets around him, carried his man back to the American lines.

For the valor shown both were cited for the distinguished service cross, and Lieut. Campbell, in addition, was recommended for a captaincy.

Another single detail, taken from this same company:

John Baker, having volunteered, was taking a message through heavy shell fire to another part of his line. A shell struck his hand, tearing away part of it, but the negro, unfaltering, delivered the message.

He was asked why he did not seek aid for his wounds before completing his journey.

"I thought the message might contain information that would save lives," was the answer.

Under the same Lieut. Robert L. Campbell a few colored soldiers armed only with their rifles, trench knives, and hand grenades picked up from shell holes along the way were moving over a road in the Chateau-Thierry sector. Suddenly their course was crossed by the firing of a German machine gun. They tried to locate it by the direction of the bullets, but could not. To their right, a little ahead, lay a space covered with thick underbrush; just back of it was an open field.

Lieut. Campbell, who knew by the direction of the bullets that his party had not been seen by the Germans, ordered one of his men, with a rope which they happened to have, to crawl to the thick underbrush, and tie the rope to several stems of the brush; then to withdraw as far as possible and pull the rope, making the brush shake as though men were crawling through it. The purpose was to draw direct fire from the machine gun, and by watching locate its position.

The ruse worked. Lieut. Campbell then ordered three of his men to steal out and flank the machine gun on one side, while he and two others moved up and flanked it on the other side.

The brush was shaken more violently by the secret rope. The Germans, their eyes focused on the brush, poured a hail of bullets into it. Lieut. Campbell gave the signal. The flanking party dashed up; with their hand grenades they killed four of the boches and captured the remaining three—also the machine gun.

In the larger bodies of colored troops, from the regiment to the division, the participation of the negro soldiers naturally divides itself into two parts on account of the way they were sent over. The negro division, composed of drafted men, did not get into action until right at the last, but individual regiments did. The four regiments that went over first were composed of old National Guard units recruited up to the required quota. These were the Three hundred and sixty-ninth, Three hundred and seventieth, Three hundred and seventy-first, and Three hundred and seventy-second Infantry regiments, afterwards organized into the Provisional Ninety-third Division. Until just before the last days of the fighting, however, they were brigaded separately with French troops. Three of these regiments, the Three hundred and sixty-ninth, the Three hundred and seventy-first, and the Three hundred and seventy-second, have received the high honor of the croix de guerre from the French Government for distinguished service. Sixty-one officers and men of the Three hundred and seventieth have been similarly decorated.

FIGHTING BESIDE THE FRENCH.

Here is the fighting record of one of these regiments sandwiched among the French forces—the Three hundred and seventy-second. It was the first to go over. Practically all its line officers, as well as privates, were colored.

They arrived in France on April 14 and went into training with the French on April 28. On June 6 the Three hundred and seventy-second was sent to the trenches just west of Verdun, occupying the famous battle-swept Hill 304 and sections at Four de Paris and Vauquois. On Hill 304 thousands of French and German soldiers had fallen as the battle line swung back and forward, and that this hill was given to the negroes to hold shows that as soldiers they had already won the confidence of the French.

The regiment's first engagement was in the Champagne sector, with Montoir as its objective. Here came the real test; the colored men were eager to get into the fight. They cheered and sang when the announcement came that their chance had arrived—but the question was: Back of their enthusiasm had they the staying qualities drilled into European troops through centuries of training in the science of warfare?

The answer was that some of the heaviest and most effective fighting of the day was done by the negro regiment. From June 6 to September 10 the Three hundred and seventy-second was stationed in the bloody Argonne Forest. On the night of September 25 they were summoned to take part in the Argonne offensive and were in that terrific drive, one of the decisive engagements of the war, from September 26 to October 7. In the nine days' battle the negroes not only proved their fighting qualities in an ordeal such as men have rarely been called upon to face, but these qualities, in deadly striking power and stubborn resistance in crises, stood out with such distinction that the regiment won the coveted croix de guerre.

During the battle they aided in capturing 600 prisoners, 15 big guns, 20 minenwerfers, rounded up an enormous amount of engineering material, large supplies of artillery munition, and brought down three German airplanes. For these achievements they were at once cited for bravery and efficiency in the general orders issued by their French commander. The casualty list of the Three hundred and seventy-second in this and the previous fighting carried 500 names of men killed, wounded, and gassed.

Another regiment's record—that of the Three hundred and sixty-ninth, formerly the Fifteenth New York, commanded by Col. William Hayward, ex-public service commissioner—reflects as high a credit on the soldierly qualities of the negro race. The Three hundred and sixty-ninth was in the Champagne offensive as a part of the Fourth Army, commanded by Gen. Gouraud, a few miles west of the Argonne Forest. These are Col. Hayward's own words describing the drive that tried out his men:

"At 5.25 a. m. the assault was launched, an assault that kept assaulting, so far as our division was concerned, for 12 days, in which we crossed rivers, captured towns, cut and climbed through acres and acres of barbed-wire entanglements, stormed bluffs, ridges, and hills for 14 kilometers, all the way facing stubborn and terribly effective artillery and machine-gun fire.

"When we crossed the Dormois River, where it widened into a swamp, the boche was shelling industriously, and it looked like a hailstorm on the surface of the water. I saw shells break from concussion when they hit the water the same as on the ground. Much of the time we had to lean over and shout into each other's ears to be heard.

"At the end of 12 days we came out with our division, what was left of us, which included 20 officers."

At the very last the Three hundred and sixty-ninth won another distinction. The following is from The Stars and Stripes, the organ of the American troops in France:

"The farthest north at 11 o'clock (when the armistice went into effect) on the front of the two armies was held at the extreme American left, up Sedan way, by the troops of the Seventy-seventh Division. The farthest east—the nearest to the Rhine—was held by those negro soldiers who used to make up the old New York Fifteenth, and have long been brigaded with the French. They were in Alsace, and their line ran through Thann and across the railway that leads to Colmar."

HOW NEGRO DIVISION FIGHTS.

Next, to see a negro division in action:

The Ninety-second Division was composed of the One hundred and eighty-third Infantry Brigade, consisting of the Three hundred and sixty-fifth and Three hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry Regiments, and the Three hundred and fiftieth Machine Gun Battalion; the One hundred and eighty-fourth Infantry Brigade, composed of the Three hundred and sixty-seventh and Three hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry Regiments and the Three hundred and fifty-first Machine Gun Battalion; the One hundred and sixth-seventh Artillery Brigade, consisting of the Three hundred and forty-ninth, the Three hundred and fiftieth, and the Three hundred and fifty-first Artillery Regiments, and the Three hundred and forty-ninth Machine Gun Battalion, the Three hundred and seventeeth Trench Mortar Battalion, the Three hundred and seventeenth Engineer Regiment, the Three hundred and seventeenth Engineer Train, the Three hundred and seventeenth Ammunition Train, the Three hundred and seventeenth Supply Train, the Three hundred and seventeenth Train Headquarters, the Ninety-second Military Police Company; the Three hundred and seventeenth Sanitary Train, comprising the Three hundred and sixty-fifth, the Three hundred and sixty-sixth, the Three hundred and sixty-seventh, the Three hundred and sixty-eighth Field and Hospital and Ambulance Companies, 600 of the officers of the division were negroes.

Soon after the Ninety-second was thoroughly organized it took over the Marbache sector. Here their activity in trench raids on the Germans earned from the Germans the name of "Black Devils." By these raids they drove the Germans north beyond Erehaut and Volvrotte to Cheminot Bridge. In the hope of putting a check on these attacks the boches tried to destroy the bridge and flooded the country.

Up to this time the Ninety-second had never been in a battle. The only regiment in it that had seen a big engagement was the Three hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry, which took part in the action in the Argonne forest. The division's chance came in the drive on Metz. They were notified at 4 o'clock Sunday morning, November 10. The motto, "See it through," of the "Buffaloes," the Three hundred and sixty-seventh Infantry, trained at Camp Upton, echoed through the whole division.

They began their advance at 7 o'clock from Pont-a-Mousson. Before them was a valley commanded by the heavy guns of Metz and by nests of German machine guns. The negroes seemed to realize that here for the first time was the great opportunity to show their mettle—that for the first time they were going to battle as a division. A sense of race solidarity possessed them, uniting their purpose as no amount of drilling could, and they were literally a terrible foe as they plunged forward to Preny. So rapidly did they advance that the list of casualties, considering the rain of shells, was small. Their objective for the day was Bois Frehaut. Picked Moroccan and Senegalese troops of the French, striking for the same point—in an odd competition of colored races on this day—were the first to arrive. The Germans, seeing what was up, were pounding Bois Frehaut with a heavy fire. It became too hot for the Moroccans and the Senegalese. They were forced to retreat.

Were our colored fighters really going to "see it through"? The fight was now getting hotter and hotter, for the Germans were bringing their full resistance to bear. The Fifty-sixth Regiment was forced to withdraw, but not until after they had stood up and borne a heavy loss. The First Battalion of the "Buffaloes," commanded by Maj. Charles L. Appleton, of New York, with colored company commanders and lieutenants, was called upon to hold the Germans at bay while the hard-hit Fifty-sixth retreated. Here, in confronting the enemy with an iron resistance, the "Buffaloes" won their Croix de Guerre.

A little later Bois Frehaut was taken by the Ninety-second. The Germans directed against the place a more murderous fire, but there was no driving out the colored men. The Stars and Stripes said of this fight:

"Probably the hardest fighting done by any Americans in the final hour was that which engaged the troops of the Twenty-eighth, Ninety-second, Eighty-first, and Seventh Divisions of the Second American Army, who launched a fire-eating attack above Vigneulles just at dawn on the 11th. It was no mild thing that last flare of the battle, and the order to cease firing did not reach the men in the front line until the last moment, when the runners sped with it from fox hole to fox hole."

Numerous officers and privates of the Ninety-second were commended for meritorious conduct by general orders. During the final engagement of the war the negro division held the line of Vandieres-St. Michel-Xon-Norry. The Ninety-second suffered a total of 1,478 casualties.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEER SCHOOL.

Equipment and maintenance of the Engineer School, including purchase and repair of instruments, machinery, implements, models, and materials for the use of the school and for instruction of engineer troops in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land mining, pontooniering, and signaling; for purchase and binding of professional works and periodicals of recent date treating on military and civil engineering and kindred scientific subjects for the library of the United States Engineers' School; for incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, and boats; for pay of civilian clerks, draftsmen, electricians, mechanics, and laborers; compensation of civilian lecturers and payment of tuition fees of student officers at civil technical institutions; for unforeseen expenses; for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Secretary of War and made for the purpose of instruction: Provided, That the traveling expenses herein provided for shall be in lieu of mileage and other allowances; and to provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction at the Engineer School by the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and for other absolutely necessary expenses, $50,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is there any significance in the committee leaving out the designation of the place where this engineer school is to be located? Heretofore it has always carried the designation "at Washington Barracks, D. C."

Mr. DENT. There is significance in it. The Engineer Department recommended that it be named Camp A. A. Humphreys. The committee declined to adopt the recommendation of the Engineer Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is this further significance, that the appropriation carried in this bill, which is $20,000 more than last year——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not. May be used at some other place than the present school at Washington Barracks?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The reason for the increase is this: Heretofore the engineer school has had from 15 to 40 students, while at the present time there are 72 students, graduates of one of the recent classes of the Military Academy at West Point. That number of students will probably be further increased during the fiscal year to about 125.

Mr. DENT. One hundred and twenty-five.

Mr. KAHN. And to take care of the greatly increased number of students it was deemed necessary to increase the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. My last suggestion was that the appropriation could be utilized at some other school than that at Washington Barracks.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say frankly to the gentleman, and there is no need to conceal the matter, that the Engineer Department has acquired a considerable tract of land on the Potomac River at a place called Belvoir immediately south of Mount Vernon.

During the war they built quite a good many temporary structures there for training engineer officers and engineer enlisted men in the building of bridges, in the laying of pontoons, in the making of gases, in the building of trenches—in fact, all those things necessary for the proper training of troops under conditions that prevailed in this war. The engineers contend that the tract of land at Washington Barracks is altogether too small to enable them to carry on these various and necessary activities. They contend that the buildings down there at the Washington Barracks are used altogether for the machinery which they require for the training of engineer troops in certain specific things. They complain that there is no chance on that small tract of land to develop engineer troops as they should be developed, and so they want to expend a greater part of this money at Camp A. A. Humphrey's, in Virginia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "school," in line 11, the words "at Washington Barracks, District of Columbia," and I want to be heard just for a moment on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 11, after the word "school," insert "at Washington Barracks, District of Columbia."

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee, but I want just to make a few statements, and I would like to have the attention of the gentlemen who are present. This matter was discussed in the committee. The language which I undertake to insert in the bill at this time has been carried in the bill in former years, and we are all aware where the engineer school is located. It is at the barracks here in the city of Washington. At the head of that Engineer Department we have a splendid officer in Gen. Black. He came before our committee and contended that it would be wisdom for us now to enter upon a scheme of building up a great engineering school at Camp Humphreys. After discussing the matter somewhat it was decided not to do that, but I did not know that this language had been omitted from the bill until I came to examine it.

I opposed the entering upon this enterprise at this time for the reason that we have not determined, nor will we determine at this time, what the policy is to be, so far as our Military Establishment is concerned, and it will involve the expenditure of millions of dollars, and I think it would be the part of wisdom for this Congress, when so many men are talking economy and have been finding so much fault with the Committee on Military Affairs for the great appropriations we have brought in, at least to refuse to give the War Department even the opportunity of doing this thing without expressly authorizing them to do so by law, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted. If in the future we should decide that we want a larger engineer school, and that we want to build it up at Camp Humphreys, regardless of the fact that we have heard a great deal about the mud and conditions at Camp Humphreys—if people want it there, after giving the matter mature deliberation and consideration, all well and good; but I think it will be a mistake to do it at this time.

Mr. DENT. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I am not in entire disagreement with the suggestion of the gentleman, but it is a fact that Gen. Black urged this most insistently upon the committee?

Mr. McKENZIE. He did not urge it any more insistently than a great many officers urged other things, but the committee declined to do it.

Mr. DENT. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Why, certainly Gen. Black did; but there was no action striking out the language——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not happen to be present when it was done.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; we had a vote on it.

Mr. McKENZIE. But even if the committee did it, if they decided to do this, if you want to go right on and build up an expensive Military Establishment, this is a good way to start.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman a question or two?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It does not make much difference how many men we have in the Army, the instruction of those we do have there should be just as good if the numbers are small as it would be if the numbers were large. In other words, an engineer wants to be as competent in an Army of 100,000 men as in an Army of 500,000 men?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And one of the particular essentials in training for modern engineering is to get experience in a variety of terrain.

Mr. McKENZIE. But it is a very short distance from Washington Barracks down to Camp Humphreys.

Mr. MANN. There is as much terrain around Washington as around Camp Humphreys.

Mr. KAHN. Owned by the Government?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. The fact of the matter is, this is to build up another great institution as part of our Military Establishment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I always like to agree with my friend from Illinois if I can do so, but I think he is in error about this. This war has shown that the Engineer Corps is one of the most important of all the branches of the Army. The first troops we sent to France were Engineer troops. They had to build bridges. They had to build docks. They had to build depots at the railroad stations. They had to lay railroad tracks. They had to lay railroad sidings. They had to run the railroads themselves, and all of that training must be given to particular engineer soldiers in order that we may carry on that work, so important to the Army in case we should ever be drawn into war again.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that all of those engineer regiments that went over there in the beginning of the war were volunteer regiments taken from the railroads and other great business institutions of the country?

Mr. KAHN. That is true, but we had some engineer troops that had been trained in the Army with them. We had Engineer officers who had had the additional year's training at the Engineers' School after they had graduated from West Point.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There should be no confusion between engineer troops proper in a military sense and these transportation engineers that were employed in an entirely different field of endeavor, so far as first military purposes were concerned.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, engineer troops are required to build pontoon bridges. The ordinary engineers know nothing about that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The science of military engineering is a distinct thing from industrial engineering and the other corps that were associated in the early part of the war with the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to strike out a couple of words in his amendment, as the Chair thought. The Chair is not certain about it. Does the gentleman wish them stricken out?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the words will be stricken out. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE]. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: Page 47, line 11, after the word "school," insert "at Washington Barracks, D. C."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the execution of topographic or other surveys, the securing of such extra topographic data as may be required, and the preparation and printing of maps required for military purposes, to be immediately available and remain available until December 31, 1920: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to secure the assistance wherever practicable of the United States Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or other mapping agencies of the Government in this work and to allot funds therefor to them from this appropriation, $200,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I overlooked an item, and I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph entitled "Engineer Operations in the Field."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph indicated on page 48 to take up a matter that was overlooked. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I wish information. I notice in this paragraph there is a provision for "the construction of storehouses within and outside of the District of Columbia" and the purchase of "motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles." I believe those words should be eliminated.

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order on that paragraph, page 49, line 2, on the words "construction or," and, on line 3, upon the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order are sustained against the words indicated. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF MILITARY AND POST ROADS, BRIDGES, AND TRAILS, ALASKA.

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Territory of Alaska, to be immediately available, $100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the necessity of making this amount immediately available, if I may inquire of a member of the committee?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think it has been explained to the committee several times, that the working months in Alaska for this outdoor labor range between May and August. They divide themselves practically half and half on either side of the division of the fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Some years back, as many years as five years ago, I reserved a point of order on this paragraph when the amount carried was $300,000, and at that time I had an understanding with the then chairman of the committee, Judge James Hay, that the amount would only be carried for perhaps one year or more longer. The information that I then obtained from persons who were acquainted with affairs in Alaska was to the effect that this was merely to give a berth to some old superannuated Army officer who did not do much with the money except maybe hibernate up there for part of the year.

I make these statements in all seriousness, and now we still find this item cropping up here, not in the same large amount but this old superannuated Army officer is still desiring to continue experiments in road construction at an expense of $100,000. Can the gentleman tell us anything about the life, whereabouts, and welfare of this old Army officer who used to supervise the expenditure of this appropriation?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the old Army officer must have been such a character in the gentleman's imagination that he himself knows more about him than anybody else.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is not a character of the imagination. I got the information concerning him from people acquainted with the work up in Alaska.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The information that the gentleman got a few years ago, to the effect that this item would disappear from the appropriation bill, must have been one of those shortsighted promises that I remember frequently meeting with respect to appropriations, which can be attributed in this case largely to the dazzling sunshine reflected from the Alaskan snow, which has a peculiar effect on the human vision, as I understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman shows by that reference an absolute ignorance of conditions in Alaska and the purpose for which this money is purported to be used. This is for the fertile valleys of Alaska, where they raise wheat and potatoes, and not in the far northern regions where glaciers and ice fields are the rule.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am glad the gentleman has limited his estimate of my ignorance to ignorance of Alaska. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The expenditure of this money does not reach to the frozen north in the Arctic Circle.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It reaches as far as it will go. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. This expenditure by the old Army officer does not approach the Arctic regions at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This old Army officer has, perhaps, approached a more congenial clime, because he is not there now, if he ever existed. [Laughter.] In fact, this $100,000 is a diminishing sum in the appropriation bill, and it is now diminished because of the scarcity of labor up there this year. There is a certainty that unless the roads already built up there are maintained in repair to some reasonable extent, the traffic in that region will practically be put to a standstill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The hearings which I read when I did give the matter special consideration disclosed the fact that the money was being wasted on the building of bridges not connected with transportation at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This sum was intended to apply on highways leading to Army posts. That was one of the foundations of this sum. Then, another consideration, I believe, was the highways through the territory tributary to the railroad. There is, in addition to this appropriation, as I seem to remember, money raised by the people of Alaska themselves through their Territorial government. Then there is some other fund which supplies some money, too, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. Though the information furnished by the gentleman is not very elucidating or informing, nevertheless I do not wish to do any injury to the appropriation or to Alaska. If I were certain that this same old Army officer was supervising this appropriation, I might make a point of order, but I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE SERVICE.

For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters, and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the Ordnance Service, and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office; subscriptions to periodicals, which may be paid for in advance; and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance; and for purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, $3,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, Mr. Chairman. Here we also have authority for the purchase of motor-propelled vehicles, and I make the point of order on the word "purchase," in line 20, page 50.

Mr. DENT. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MANUFACTURE OF ARMS.

For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $2,500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will some member of the committee inform the House as to how much of this appropriation is to be used in connection with the manufacture of arms?

Mr. DENT. The War Department did not furnish us any information as to how much was to be used for manufacture.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I read the paragraph the thought arose in my mind that the War Department would have plenty of small arms by reason of preparedness for the war, so that a further appropriation for the manufacture of small arms would not be necessary.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They did suggest that they would continue the manufacture of Springfield rifles to take the place of the converted Enfields that we had to put into the field to supply our troops during the war, the object being to have a standardized arm in the hands of our troops and the ordinarily necessary reserve supply of them; but there was no general manufacture of rifles contemplated.

Mr. McKENZIE. About 300 a day.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], about 300 a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. That money will be expended at the Watertown or Springfield Arsenal?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. At the Springfield Arsenal. That is where we make the rifles. Of pistols and small arms of that character the Army has long been deficient, and in the attempt to keep up a normal standard supply of them the manufacture will be continued, although it will not lead to anything excessive, even under this appropriation.

Mr. DENT. In other words, we have a sufficient supply now, but we do not want to stop the production entirely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the chairman of the committee also inform the House as to the need of providing for the manufacture of ammunition for the Army, although there are large stores of ammunition? That manufacture is provided for in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. DENT. That is simply to authorize the department to continue the development of the manufacture of ammunition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not for the purpose of providing large stores, because I assume there are ample stores at the present time. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of automatic machine rifles or other automatic or semiautomatic guns, including their mounts, sights, and equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture, $1,500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph, which provides for the manufacture of automatic machine rifles. Is it proposed to manufacture a different rifle from that which was adopted during the war?

Mr. DENT. That item, like the other, is carried there just for the authorization of the general purpose. There is no particular rifle——

Mr. McKENZIE. If the chairman of the committee will pardon me, I think the testimony before the committee was that they were experimenting and undertaking to develop a little heavier machine gun than we now have; that is, something similar to the heavier Browning gun.

Mr. STAFFORD. This fund is to be utilized for that purpose?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMORED MOTOR CARS.

For the purchase, manufacture, test, repair, and maintenance of armored motor cars, to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1920, $500,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain so that the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his point of order. Some years ago we provided for the first armored motor car, even over the objection or the want of recommendation of the War Department. They proved to be something of a failure in the war. This item is intended to be expended in the development of tanks, which would come under the head of armored motor cars. It is not for the building of armored motor cars, but for the tank development.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the work to be undertaken?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not say which particular Government arsenal the work is to be done at.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, with the illuminating information which the gentleman from Illinois always furnishes, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMING, EQUIPPING, AND TRAINING THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Purchase of horses for mounted units, $1,882,901.58.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, if the Government is seeking to sell horses, what is the necessity for this provision?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that they do not purpose to buy any more horses. They have more horses than they need. We make an appropriation in this bill of $100,000 to be expended for the purchase of young colts at remount stations under an agreement entered into that has been carried for a number of years. They have a certain number of stallions there and they are breeding first-class horses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is an appropriation of $1,882,000 for the purchase of horses in connection with the National Guard.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not that a credit on which the National Guard can draw from the quartermaster's stock of horses? We would not be selling horses at one end of the Army and buying them at the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve a point of order against it, so that I may get the information as to the policy of the committee in appropriating this large sum. Here are appropriations running above a million dollars for Army equipment and training of the National Guard. I think we ought to have some specific information about these large appropriations; for instance, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the need of purchasing horses for mounted units of the National Guard.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this provision is carried in the bill in regard to the building up of the National Guard, at least during the next year, to 106,000 men. Every National Guard unit that was in existence the day that war was declared was called into the service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that when the National Guard was transferred into the National Army in my own State, where the State troops had equipment they sold their horses and equipment at public auction. Is it the purpose to appropriate money to the States, in cooperation with them, so that they can again purchase horses, or is it the purpose that the War Department will transfer horses in large numbers back to the National Guard?

Mr. DENT. The proviso at the end indicates that it is the purpose of the War Department to transfer horses and not use any money where it is not necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the proviso is limited to such articles as clothing and equipment and material, and I question whether that is broad enough in its phraseology to cover horses.

Mr. DENT. Does not the gentleman think that if a Cavalry regiment is organized in the National Guard that that would be a part of the equipment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether that phraseology in connection with the clause preceding would be given that construction.

Mr. DENT. What is the gentleman's objection to this item? The gentleman is not opposed to the National Guard?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am strongly in favor of reviving the National Guard. It is a suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] that we have large numbers of horses and that we ought not to go into the market now and purchase horses when they can be transferred from the National Government to the different States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will find that it was intended to mean that all these items, which begin on line 10, page 53, and run down to the proviso, were to be furnished in kind as nearly as possible to the last penny, and that the appropriation set forth here is to establish a credit for the National Guard in order that it might draw in kind up to that amount.

Mr. DENT. I think in line with what the gentleman from Vermont suggests that we were given figures showing that the appropriation would be something like $50,000,000 for a National Guard strength of something like 106,000 men, but with this proviso put in there authorizing the transfer of surplus equipment it was reduced to $14,000,000. I think we have it in shape so that the Government expenses under this appropriation will be something like $14,000,000, and the surplus stock will be transferred to the guard so as to equip a National Guard force of 106,000 men.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no disposition anywhere to prevent the reorganization and rehabilitation of the National Guard. We all recognize it as an essential unit in our Army organization.

Mr. DENT. I will read the gentleman what Gen. Heavey said:

The total amount of the appropriation, if the rider is not passed, for 106,200 men would be $50,554,428.82; but if the rider goes through, it will require only $14,630,847.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then from that I take it that this amount is not to be used as a credit, but is to be used as a direct appropriation to the various States.

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is it not a fact that a great many States which maintain the National Guard have no mounted troops?

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then does the gentleman think it is absolutely necessary to appropriate four and a half million dollars for the purchase of horses for the National Guard when they are not to use cavalry?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has not these figures right. The amount is $1,882,000.

Mr. McCLINTIC. But with the forage, bedding, and compensation of help in connection with the purchase of horses it amounts to four and a half million dollars.

Mr. DENT. But the gentleman must not overlook the fact that you need horses in the Artillery as well as in the Cavalry.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If we have 100,000 head of horses more than are needed at the present time, and they are being sold at a reduction of 50 per cent of what they cost, would not an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the National Guard such horses as they need them be all that is necessary?

Mr. DENT. I think this does that. That was the intention.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, this subject has been somewhat considered by the Committee on Appropriations in respect to the policy of disposing of this large number of horses in the possession of the Government. The War Department believes that if we are going to keep the horses and feed them, at the high price of feed, in a short time they will eat their heads off, to use a colloquial expression; we recognized that it is economy to permit the War Department to dispose of these horses. We are providing for the reorganization of the National Guard. It may be months or more than a year before the States can organize so that they would need horses, and to keep those horses at a tremendous expense, the gentleman would see, would not be a very good business policy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office rent, inspector-instructors, $9,272.48.

Mr. DENT Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, following the words "office rent, inspector-instructors, $9,272.48," insert "pay of the National Guard, armory drill, $4,467,171.86."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that that item was omitted from the bill by the printer in some way and that simply makes up the $14,000,000 we appropriate for the support of the National Guard. It was omitted by the printer.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the only instance, I believe, where the printer omitted any amount in this bill?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that is one reason why we should not take up much time if it is the only instance because it just adds a little to the grand total.

Mr. DENT. The amount we agreed upon was $14,000,000 for the National Guard and that makes the amount conform.

Mr. STAFFORD. How is this money to be used?

Mr. DENT. It is for the purpose of providing under the national-defense act for the monthly drills.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I was just wondering if the same mathematician figured out the expense incident to the items in lines 3 and 4 and that in line 14.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I notice travel of Federal officers is $9,272.48. That is for travel.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That 48 cents is war tax. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I suppose that is true, but the item in line 14, office rent, also is $9,272.48.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have a very expert computer carried in this bill who reduces these estimates to a nicety.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I congratulate the department.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue from surplus stores now on hand and purchased for the United States Army, such articles of clothing and equipment matériel as may be needed by the National Guard organized under the provisions of the act of June 3, 1916, which law is still in force and applicable to State forces. This issue will be made without charge against militia appropriations and will be reimbursed in kind for all Federal property brought into service by State troops. Issue will be made as soon as the provisions of act of June 3, 1916, shall have been fulfilled: Provided, That the provisions of section 62, act of June 3, 1916, will be considered fulfilled if the first strength mentioned therein be attained by June 30, 1919, and the other increments provided therein be attained by successive years thereafter: Provided further, That this will not prevent any State from compliance with the provisions of section 62 as now worded: Provided further, That the appropriations and provisions of this act referring to the National Guard become applicable and available upon the date this becomes a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to make some inquiry in reference to these various provisos. Can the gentleman inform the committee what are the provisions of section 62 of the National Guard act?

Mr. DENT. I can show it to the gentleman in half a minute. I can not remember that by number.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been furnished information by one of the members of the committee, and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, line 17, page 54, by inserting, after the word "such," the word "animals."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17, page 54, after the word "such," amend by inserting the word "animals."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, this is to make it perfectly plain that the Secretary can use these horses if there are any on hand, as well as clothing and equipment.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman will pardon me, I just want to extend my congratulations still further. I notice that the expenses mentioned on page 53, line 17, were $39,739.20, and that the expenses mentioned in line 6, page 54, were $39,739.20. I wondered, when they made this calculation, if they did it with a rubber stamp?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, he will notice that the item at the top of page 54 is $19,869.60, which is one-half of the two items he has just pointed out. [Laughter.]

If we go through, we can find many items of similarity. This keen computer was a marvel, and ought to be inquired into.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procuring arms, including pistols, ammunition, equipment, etc., for issue and use in connection with Home Guard organizations in pursuance of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue to States and Territories and the District of Columbia of rifles and other property for the equipment of organizations of Home Guards," approved June 14, 1917, authorizing issues to Home Guard organizations, $25,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is my impression, though it may be faulty, that the Home Guard organizations were merely to take the place of the National Guard organizations while the National Guard units were merged into the National Army. What is the need of making permanent appropriation for the supplying of arms and ammunition and equipment to Home Guard organizations?

Mr. DENT. It is merely a nominal appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, it is not reduced to the nicety of cents. It is a lump-sum appropriation of $25,000. That is nominal in the consideration of a bill carrying over a billion.

Mr. DENT. I will say frankly that personally I never considered there was any necessity for this organization. They thought it ought to be continued and some sort of sum carried in the event that prior to the time of the reorganization of the National Guard there might be some necessity for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will pardon me for one moment, I want to call his attention to an item in line 9, of $1,324.64, on page 54, and an item in line 12 of $132,464. The difference is made just by shifting commas there and substituting periods. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the method of very accurate calculation out there.

Mr. DENT. Oh, well, the gentleman can be as funny as he pleases——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not be as funny as this calculation.

Mr. DENT. I have the floor. The gentleman can be as funny as he pleases about this proposition. But everybody knows that the National Guard was brought into the Federal service at the beginning of this war, and the whole proposition of reorganizing it and giving it a chance to reorganize was a new proposition. And only to-day a Member of this House, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], paid a high tribute to the Rainbow Division, and especially the old Fourth Alabama Regiment, for the work they did in France. I appreciated it, and I take this opportunity to tell him how much I appreciate it, on the floor of this House.

Now, this is entirely conjectural, and there is nothing funny about it. If you do not want to organize the National Guard, do not make any appropriation for it at all. But if any Member of this House is not willing to admit that the National Guard in France and in the trenches did its duty and showed its services to this country, then I would like to see him stand upon the floor and say it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I think that explains the method of calculation adopted by the department thoroughly. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For arms and ordnance equipment, including overhauling and repairing of personal equipments, machine-gun outfits, and horse equipments for use in connection with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, established by the act approved June 3, 1916, is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year 1920, $100.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Are we to understand by this phraseology that only $100 is to be available, or is the appropriation carried last year, $2,920,000, to be available?

Mr. DENT. I can explain that to the gentleman. The object of this appropriation was simply to carry the item in the bill. But we were told that there was a sufficient surplus of supplies on hand to furnish these ordnance supplies without making any additional appropriation; and the $100 item was merely intended to carry that item in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The phraseology adopted by the committee is rather strange. It says:

For arms and ordnance equipment, including overhauling and repairing of personal equipments, machine-gun outfits, and horse equipments for use in connection with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, established by the act approved June 3, 1916, is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year 1920, $100.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman was reading one section and I was reading another. I have no objection to that being stricken out now. I move to strike out the language, "is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DENT moves to amend, on page 56, line 18, by striking out the words "is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE SUPPLIES FOR MILITARY EQUIPMENT OF SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

For arms and ordnance equipment, including overhauling and repairing of personal equipments, machine-gun outfits, and horse equipments for issue to schools and colleges in pursuance of the provisions of section 56 of the act approved June 3, 1916, $100.

The appropriations contained herein shall be available for the payment of obligations on account of the existing emergency incurred prior to the passage of this act or prior to June 30, 1918, and which are properly chargeable to such appropriations: Provided, That the appropriations herein made for the support of the Army and the National Guard are available for such printing, binding, and blank books as may be necessary in putting in effect the objects of the appropriations: And provided further, That hereafter printing, binding, and blank books required for use outside of the District of Columbia in connection with the support of the Army and the National Guard may be done or procured elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office when in the opinion of the Secretary of War such work can be more advantageously done or procured locally, the cost thereof to be paid from the proper appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think I might settle this whole thing by making a motion to strike out all of the language on page 57, beginning with line 3 and ending with line 19. After a conference with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I am convinced that perhaps this language might embarrass the bill that was passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Kentucky was only concerned with the phraseology prior to the proviso.

Mr. GORDON. It is only a nominal appropriation anyway.

Mr. DENT. The other is immaterial.

Mr. STAFFORD. The quickest way, then, is to give it the fatal shot of a point of order. So I make the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

That, in addition to the Regular Army as now organized under the provisions of "An Act for making further and more efficient provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, there shall be raised and organized under the provisions of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, as amended, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk finish reading the paragraph.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. He has proceeded far enough now to show that it is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can restate his point of order when the Clerk has finished reading the paragraph. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vacancies created in the commissioned ranks shall be filled in the ratio in which the additional enlisted men herein authorized are procured and in accordance with the existing law. The enlisted force for the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years and for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year. All existing enlistments for a longer period than three years shall be terminated as though made for three years, and after expiration of one year's honorable service any enlisted man serving within the continental limits of the United States, whose company, troop, battery, or detachment commander shall report him as proficient and sufficiently trained, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be furloughed to the Regular Army Reserves, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. It is clearly new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order against the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have had an understanding with gentlemen that nothing would be done here except to read the legislative feature of this bill and then that certain gentlemen who had amendments to offer could offer them, so that it would be understood that there would be no vote taken on the proposition to-night.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not care to interfere with any arrangements the gentleman has made, but no amendments are in order until the point of order is disposed of. I am willing to reserve the point of order, but no sort of amendement is in order until the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may offer and have printed in the RECORD—not as pending, but for information—any amendments they choose to offer in relation to this matter if it goes out on a point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will ask the chairman of the committee if an amendment would be in order on Monday?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama this question: Has the committee agreed on any amendment touching this, if this goes out on a point of order, or anything in the way of a substitute for it?

Mr. DENT. The committee has not taken any action itself.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does not the gentleman think that between now and Monday the committee ought to do something?

Mr. DENT. Some members of the committee, including the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and I, have, among ourselves, agreed upon an amendment that we think ought to be introduced.

Mr. RAYBURN. That will be in the RECORD on Monday?

Mr. DENT. Yes. That is the reason why I am trying to get this arrangement.

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that any amendment desired can be offered now for information.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen can present amendments now, to be printed in the RECORD, to be offered later, as a matter of convenience.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will that preclude amendments being offered on Monday?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having amendments to this part of the bill may present the same and have them printed in the RECORD for the purpose of information. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, does that mean that we are not to read the balance of the bill to-night?

Mr. MANN. I suppose so.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought you were going to get rid of this.

Mr. MANN. I do not care whether a point of order is made or not.

Mr. WINGO. I do not care whether there is a unanimous-consent agreement or not, except that points of order reserved shall not be prejudiced thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending. A point of order was made to the pending paragraph by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. WINGO. I want to have it understood that the offering of these amendments shall not prejudice the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Illinois had to do only with printing amendments for information.

Mr. WINGO. I want it made clear that the point of order is reserved, regardless of any amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that mean that we are going to rise now?

Mr. DENT. It does after I have called attention to one or two corrections that I would like to have made.

Mr. RAYBURN. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if this committee meets at 11 o'clock Monday, I shall not be able to be here, but I want to say that if I were here I would make a point of order, and I hope some member of the committee will make a point of order against an item in the bill, on page 60, beginning with the proviso, because it is clearly subject to a point of order and has been objected to here several times.

Mr. FOSTER. Which is that?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is the policy of pensioning people who are citizens of other countries. I think we ought not to start in on that.

Mr. FOSTER. This man came here to help our people, and the poor fellow lost his eyesight.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and to have it printed under the rule as a substitute for the language presented in the bill.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will send the amendments to the desk and they will be printed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] send amendments to the desk. They will be printed.

Following are the amendments referred to:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE:

"That the enlisted force for the Regular Army, as provided for in the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national defense act, shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years; and all existing enlistments for a longer period than three years shall be terminated as though made for three years, and after the expiration of one year's honorable service any enlisted man serving within the continental limits of the United States, whose company, troop, battery, or detachment commander shall report him as proficient and sufficiently trained, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be furloughed to the Regular Army Reserves, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That so far as the same relates to the Army of the United States and the War Department, an 'Act to authorize the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and a more efficient concentration of the Government,' approved May 30, 1918, is hereby repealed.

"Within the authorized strength provided by law, the President shall form or continue such field or tactical units, including a construction corps, as he shall deem necessary, to be organized as he may prescribe."

Amendment offered by Mr. CURRY of California: Page 62, after line 12, insert the following: "All officers, enlisted men, and Army field clerks who were in the military service of the United States on November 11, 1918, are hereby declared to have been and to be entitled, when their resignations have been accepted or when they have been discharged, to honorable discharges from the United States Army; and that the Secretary of War and those authorized by him to issue discharges be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to issue such honorable discharges to those officers, enlisted men, and Army field clerks who were in the military service of the United States on November 11, 1918; said honorable discharges shall be issued without requiring those who have been or who may hereafter be discharged from the military service of the United States to make application therefor: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those who have been or may hereafter be discharged from the military service of the United States as a result of the finding of a disciplinary body."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 16, line 13, for the purpose of changing the amount for the pay of the enlisted men of the Army, in view of the point of order that was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin as to the increased pay. I should like to dispose of that.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it be reported for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 16, line 13, after the word "line," strike out "$137,861,770.72" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$79,384,164."

Mr. MANN. I think I will object to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment? I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I have just offered be printed in the RECORD. It is for the purpose of trying to correct the amount of money in view of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It has been read.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, we also passed over the subject of aviation.

Mr. MANN. That was passed over at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], until we finished the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. That is very true, but I think if the gentleman will wait until I make my request he will not object.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that I will object. I will just state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asked me to see that it did not come up for consideration until the end of the bill was reached.

Mr. DENT. I have no intention of bringing it up. The gentleman is not giving me an opportunity to make my request.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw temporarily my point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that in lieu of the language beginning with page 9, line 6, down to and including the end of line 10, page 15, which is the appropriation in regard to the Air Service, the following substitute be printed in the RECORD for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Strike out all the language beginning on line 6, page 9, down to and including the words "all appurtenances," on line 10, page 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"AIR SERVICE.

"Creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools course of instruction for aviation students, including cost of equipment, and supplies necessary for instruction and subsistence of students; purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and instruments and material for theoretical and practical instruction at aviation schools; purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs made by aerial observers; to maintain and replace the equipment of organizations already in service; equipment, maintenance, and operation of aviation stations, balloon schools, fields for testing and experimental work; procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, telephones, telegraphs, and sewerage; purchase of stoves and other cooking and heating apparatus, kitchen and table ware, and furniture and equipment for kitchens, mess halls, officers' quarters, barracks, hospitals, and other buildings, screens, lockers, refrigerators, and all other equipment; salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as may be necessary; experimental investigation, and purchase and development of new types of aircraft and aviation engines; purchase, manufacture, maintenance, repair, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith. And also for the purchase or manufacture and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes, $15,000,000: Provided, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property, resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad, may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post, and approved by the Director of Military Aeronautics: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $150,000."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, at the end of line 24, on page 15, I offer the following amendment, which the militia division think is necessary——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman can not offer the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to page 15, line 24, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Let the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Let us have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The right to object is reserved. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: At the end of line 24, page 15, insert "Pay of officers, National Guard, $100."

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I think, Mr. Chairman, that these amendments ought to be considered after the completion of the reading of the bill. The gentleman ought not to come in here with amendments in this way, when other amendments are being offered for information. I will object for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment which I desire to have printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas sends up an amendment which he desires to have printed in the RECORD. By unanimous consent that will be done.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILLMAN: On page 61 strike out lines 19 to 25 and insert the following:

"That no part of the funds appropriated in this act shall be available unless the Secretary of War shall continue in force the regulations made providing for the distinctive stripe or chevron indicating service overseas, and he shall invalidate all orders and regulations requiring officers and soldiers who were deprived of the privilege of overseas service from wearing the distinctive stripe or chevron now required."

On motion of Mr. DENT, the committee rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 15835) had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILSON of Illinois, for five days, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there is to be a session of the House to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. on Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether the business usually in order on Monday will be considered?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on Monday we dispense with further business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. That will give us five hours for the consideration of that calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. on Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on next Monday afternoon the business under the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock next Monday afternoon the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be suspended. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to go on with this bill on Monday at 4 o'clock if between 11 a. m. and 4 o'clock we attend to the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar instead of wasting an hour or two hours on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. KITCHIN. I presume that is the intention.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to put that in the understanding.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There ought not to be any misunderstanding about that. There is a bill upon the calendar, the Bankhead-Smith bill, touching a change of appropriation that is under the control of the Vocational Education Board, that everybody is for, so far as I know.

Mr. KITCHIN. And there is no extra appropriation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; merely a change of appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. And it gives it to whom?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a change of appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. To be administered by somebody else?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is in connection with the training of wounded soldiers.

Mr. CANNON. That is the present expenditure?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is the present appropriation, and is to be transferred from one division to another; it does not add to the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking about that, but I wanted to know whether there was a new agency created?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it provides for the operation of existing law, except that it coalesces the purposes of the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. This subject has been given some consideration by the Appropriations Committee in connection with the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MANN. If there is no objection to it, it will not require a motion to suspend the rules. I think we ought to get through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I have no bill on it myself and am not interested in any bill that is on it. But if a bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar is not passed by Monday it will probably never pass unless it is a Senate bill. We have had this thing occur for several Mondays—and I have no criticism of the Speaker; far from it: At 2 or 3 o'clock, it may be a little later, recognition was given for a motion to suspend the rules, and I believe the rules have not been suspended in a single instance. It takes time, and during that time we might pass many bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to which no one objects, instead of taking up motions to suspend the rules, where there is almost sure to be 40 minutes' debate and usually a roll call that takes another 30 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to state that he would not object, in the event that it was understood that no motion to suspend the rules would be entertained?

Mr. MANN. Practically so. I have no objection to a motion to suspend the rules after you finish the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois means to have only the Unanimous Consent Calendar considered and no motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. MANN. I mean as far as possible to protect the rights of as many Members as we can and give them a chance on the Unanimous Consent Calendar rather than to use up the time on motions to suspend the rules, which probably would not prevail if there is opposition. If there is no opposition it can be done by unanimous consent. We have a long Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that condition is attached to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, I, of course, will have to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes that the gentleman is undertaking to provide for a motion to suspend the rules on a Senate bill. The last six days of the session are given over to motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is only this one day remaining for the consideration of the lengthy Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am perfectly willing that the full day should be taken up under the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. And as it has been taken up on prior Mondays, it has been the habit to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar until half past 2 and then recognize Members to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is perfectly all right. Gentlemen can take care of themselves at that particular time, when that arises.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they can not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know why.

Mr. MANN. They do not get the chance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois can.

Mr. MANN. I very seldom have anything on the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I never have had in my life.

Mr. MANN. This Senate bill, of course, can be taken care of later.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, we ought to pass it.

Mr. MANN. There are a lot of things on the Unanimous Consent Calendar also that we ought to pass. We want to give an opportunity to pass most of the things, but the gentleman does not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think he is fair in that statement?

Mr. MANN. It is true; I do not know whether it is fair or not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules, of course, is being constantly pressed.

Mr. MANN. I have a bill before the committee myself, which I hope it will report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know; and I think probably we will take care of that. The gentleman means his resolution?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then let us do this: Go until 5 o'clock, and we then will have the usual number of hours, with the extra hour obtained by meeting at 11 o'clock. We can go until 5 o'clock on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is this bill the gentleman from Tennessee is talking about a Senate bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is; and it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN. Why not make this arrangement? If they get through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar before 4 o'clock——

Mr. KITCHIN. Then one gentleman will just sit here and object to everything, and we will get through the Unanimous Consent Calendar in an hour. I believe we can all come to this agreement. We usually have adjourned at 5 o'clock, and we are going to meet at 11 o'clock. Let us say that we will dispose of the Unanimous Consent Calendar at 5 o'clock, and then we will have the six hours of time.

Mr. MANN. If we can wait until 5 o'clock. It seems to me that we ought to dispose of these bills. This will be the last opportunity. Gentlemen want to come in and take up the time with a bill that can be passed at any time before the end of the Congress, motions to suspend the rules being in order at any time within the last six days, and in a short session the six days are fixed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Can not we agree that the Unanimous Consent Calendar should run until half past 3?

Mr. MANN. I think if we have the time on Monday, we ought to put it in on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I think we ought to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar clear through on Monday.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have agreed to meet at 11 o'clock, with the tacit understanding that we would take up that calendar.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar until 4 o'clock.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then let us let it go along under the general rules of the House. Mr. BANKHEAD ought to have recognition to move to suspend the rules on this bill, and if conditions are going to be imposed upon the Speaker that he shall not recognize anyone to move to suspend the rules, then we would better proceed under the general rules.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know whether I have the floor, but if so I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman seems to be holding the floor in pretty good shape. Could not the gentleman from Alabama secure consent from the Speaker to move to suspend the rules——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois objects to that very thing.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman will not let me finish the inquiry. Does not the gentleman think the gentleman from Alabama could secure consent from the Speaker to make his motion to suspend the rules on the sixth day prior to the adjournment of this session of Congress?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know about that; I do not know what the condition of business will be in the last six days.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts, if I may be permitted, that this bill is so imperative in its character and nature and in the benefits that will be derived from its passage that it ought to be considered immediately for the reason that hundreds of men, discharged soldiers, are being discharged from the hospital without any opportunity on the part of the Educational Board to get in touch with them in order to give them the benefit of this retraining provided by law.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but you will have to wait until the 27th of the month before the bill can become a law.

Mr. MANN. It will not become a law until the 4th of March, anyhow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There was an agreement in the Committee on Rules—if there is any representative of the minority present from the Committee on Rules——

Mr. MANN. They are always present, like the ladies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And there has been an agreement that they would not report a resolution to make this privileged, because it could be called up under suspension next Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from North Carolina any request to prefer?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just one moment; let us have that understanding, that only the Bankhead bill will be——

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to spend all day Monday on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Rules Committee, I understand, unanimously believed that this bill ought to have a rule.

Mr. MANN. Oh, gentlemen know perfectly well this bill can be passed during the last six days of the session, and it is not fair to the House to try to insist upon taking up the time now that ought to be given to other bills.

Mr. RAYBURN. The truth is that all the time ought to be given to the Unanimous Consent Calendar because there are many very important bills on that calendar that ought to be passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what the gentleman from Illinois is trying to bring about now.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, February 16, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting list of records, papers, and documents recommended for destruction (H. Doc. No. 1795); to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1796); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for contingent, Navy, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1797); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the War Department for censorship of mails, enforcement of the trading-with-the-enemy and espionage acts., etc., Panama Canal, for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1798); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation to cover amount required to complete the Coast Guard cutters authorized by act of August 29, 1916, March 4, 1917, and March 28, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1799); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of Fisheries for a power lighter for Alaska fur-seal islands, for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1800); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General, submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation, payable from the postal revenues, for twine and tying devices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1801); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Geological Survey for examination and classification of lands for homesteads, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1802); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Librarian of Congress submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Library of Congress for distribution of card indexes, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1803); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication to the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the General Land Office for classification of lands involved in the Oregon and California forfeiture suit (H. Doc. No. 1804); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a proposed clause of legislation desired in connection with the authorization for passenger-carrying vehicles contained in the appropriation for general expenses of the Geological Survey (H. Doc. No. 1805); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII:

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15987) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of certain public buildings; and to authorize the purchase of sites for certain public buildings, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1070), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WALTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4743) for the relief of Francis Stewart, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1073), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 15980) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel"; to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 16, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BUTLER].

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father!

> That God which ever lives and loves,
> One God, one law, one element,
> And one far-off divine event,
> To which the whole creation moves,

We thank Thee that the door of the holy of holies is ever open to Thy children, where they can commune with Thee, find inspiration to guide them in the duties of life, consolation for their sorrows, solace for the loss of loved ones, and everlasting hope.

We meet here to-day in memory of four great men, who wrought on the floor of this House for their constituents, their respective States, and the Nation they loved.

May those who knew them best speak from their hearts, that their records may be left in the archives of the Nation they loved, that others may read and be inspired with patriotism and devotion.

Comfort those who knew and loved them with the eternal hope that sometime, somewhere, they shall meet them in a land where partings shall be no more and love shall find its own; and everlasting praise be Thine, through Him who demonstrated that life is stronger than death. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with on this occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the special order for to-day.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JAMES H. DAVIDSON.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, February 16, 1919, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 581.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, late a Member of this House from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] will please take the chair.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin took the chair.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, we are met to-day to pay our tribute of respect to a departed colleague. It is fitting on such an occasion to give expression to our feelings as to the life, character, and public services of one of our number whose life work has ended, but whose influence and good example are destined to abide with us. While no longer present in the body, his genial character and friendly administrations have left a lasting impression upon our memories.

Our colleague, the Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, was a native of New York, and received his education in that State, graduating from the Albany Law School in 1884. Since 1887 he was a resident of Wisconsin, and prior to entering the House had served as district attorney of Green Lake County and as city attorney of his home city, Oshkosh. His public duties were performed in such an efficient and conscientious manner as to win the respect and confidence of the people and result in his election to the Fifty-fifth Congress and each succeeding Congress, including the Sixty-second. He was defeated for reelection to the Sixty-third Congress after having had the distinction, with one exception, of holding in our State the record of continuous service in the House for 16 years. Mr. DAVIDSON's retention in office was a fine illustration of the fact that Wisconsin was learning the lesson, long taught by Maine and many of the Southern States, that longevity in service is the surest way to secure prestige and influence in the councils of the Nation. While none of us can advocate this policy without being charged with being actuated by a selfish motive, the fact remains, and the records of this House abundantly prove, that the chairmanships and the power and influence they assure and the places of leadership go to men of long and continuous service.

Had Mr. DAVIDSON been elected to the Sixty-third Congress he would have been the ranking Republican on the important Committee on Rivers and Harbors. His long membership on this committee made him an expert on water transportation matters, and no one doubted his qualifications for the chairmanship had his party remained in power. His work on this committee was characterized by conservatism and sound judgment, and the fact that his district bordered on Lake Michigan stimulated in him an ambition to master the navigation needs of the Great Lakes. His vision, however, was too broad to be limited to the horizon of his own district or State. By extensive travel and painstaking investigation he sought to understand and meet the problems of all parts of the United States.

For many years, and while a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, he was also chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, and, while this is one of the minor committees of the House, it enabled him to study the intimate relationship between rail and water transportation, a subject now of supreme importance.

After an absence of four years Mr. DAVIDSON was elected to the present Congress and was honored by an appointment upon the Committee on Military Affairs, one of the most important committees in this war Congress. Its labors began with the calling of the special session on April 2, 1917, and had continued almost without interruption up to the time of his death, in August of last year.

Wisconsin during the 71 years of her statehood has sent 105 different members to this House. Among these were men who attained national prominence. Doty, Washburn, Rusk, and La Follette became governors, while Durkee, Sawyer, Mitchel, La Follette, Stephenson, and Lenroot became United States Senators. Rusk was also appointed Secretary of Agriculture by President Harrison. In this group of distinguished men we readily give to our deceased colleague an honorable place. While no leading act of legislation can be placed to his credit, he was ever mindful of the needs and best interests of his constituents. Representing a district largely devoted to dairying, he was influential in protecting this industry by aiding in the framing and enactment of the oleomargarine act. Having hundreds of Civil and Spanish War soldiers as constituents, he worked diligently in their behalf. No request made of him went unheeded, no letter remained unanswered.

Mr. DAVIDSON was an able and earnest speaker. On the all too rare occasions when he occupied the floor he commanded the attention of the House by his mastery of facts and clearness of presentation. In public speaking he never stooped to demogogic appeal, but through fairness to those who opposed him sought to win his cause. While neither aggressive nor radical by disposition, he stood by his convictions. In all things he was patriotic and honest and his word was unquestioned. Whatever fate befell him he accepted it with the spirit of a true philosopher. His geniality, modesty, and fairness characterized him at all time and won for him the love, admiration, and respect of us all.

Mr. DAVIDSON loved his home. His domestic life was ideal. His wife, two sons, and a daughter were objects of his constant and tender solicitude. We who were with him daily knew the pride he felt in having a son in the service. He died too soon to see the fruition of his hopes. To those he left behind there goes out from us a feeling of profound sympathy. He was in his best years, life had yet much of promise for him, and his taking off seems like sunset at noonday; and yet we must be reconciled, for was not his life in the hands of "Him who doeth all things well"?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in this Chamber a week ago there gathered the members of both Houses of Congress, the only living ex-President, all the members of the Cabinet, the members of the Supreme Court, and the representatives of the Diplomatic Corps, to do honor to a great American, Theodore Roosevelt. We listened with rapt attention to the great eulogy delivered by the scholar of the Senate and one of the elder statesmen, the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE. To-day we meet to pay the last tribute to the memory of our departed colleague, the Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON. In my fourteen years of service only one other instance has happened, that when Hon. Henry C. Adams died, where the State has lost a Representative during his service in Congress.

No Congress in its history has suffered so great a toll in the death of Members than this now nearing its close. The problems that have required solution, the tenseness of situations, the added burdens of legislation, and office duties directly traceable to the world war sapped the vitality of all, undermined in some instances the strongest constitutions, and brought death to a large number. Many quaked under the stress and strain, and I fear my colleague DAVIDSON was one of this number.

In the maelstrom of congressional life it is not the rule, no matter how long you are associated, to learn much about the lives and careers of Members before their entrance to Congress. My estimate of JAMES H. DAVIDSON is limited to my observation of his work since 1903, when I first became associated with him. He had preceded me three terms, and was then on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Here he served under the master mind and leader, Hon. Theodore E. Burton, chairman of the committee. Even at that early day, which position became more pronounced as his services continued, DAVIDSON was regarded as an authority on river and harbor improvements.

According to the unwritten rule in Congress, he gave first consideration to his committee work. This engrossed the major portion of his legislative time; but he was alert to give close attention to the demands of his district. No member could have achieved the distinction which was his, to have served continuously for 16 years, without having reflected truly the best expression of his district.

He was modest and unassuming, and yet in debate he was a forcible speaker. When he spoke he commanded and held the attention of the House. In Congress brilliancy counts less than good judgment and willingness to work. The esteem in which he was held by his colleagues was in one instance exemplified upon his reelection to Congress after an interregnum of four years. Though the membership of the House had changed in the interim, the record he had made of conscientious application to duty and of rare judgment brought him appointment to the only vacancy on the important Committee on Military Affairs. Many sought this position because of its great vantage in shaping the Government's military policy during the world war, into which we were then just entering. Because he had voted his convictions on all questions relating to the war, and had voted against the declaration of war, no Member in the House questioned his appointment on this committee or ever doubted his loyalty to his Government after Congress declared war.

Then came the heavy work in the Committee on Military Affairs, the making ready when our country was so ill-prepared to bring success to our standard on the European field of battle. For more than a year he toiled ceaselessly in committee to provide adequately the sinews of war that brought about ultimate victory. It was under this heavy strain that he quaked. He had extracted too much from nature's reservoir, and, as is so often the case, after long unrequited service to country, he found his health undermined just as the Congress was about to take a much-needed rest to permit of the restoration of health to Members after the exacting service. But he had been too faithful a public servant, he had drained the cup of life in his country's cause, and death came suddenly to his exhausted body.

I wonder whether his constituents knew and appreciated the sacrifice and work in his country's cause which brought his life to this untimely end.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, as has been just stated by my colleague, this great Hall was filled last week with a distinguished assemblage gathered to do homage to that great American, Theodore Roosevelt, a good man whose impress has been left upon the lives of those of his own day and generation and upon the history of our country.

In this same historic Hall, which has been the scene of another statesman's labors for nearly a score of years, we again gather to do homage to that lovable man who in like manner was an honored public servant, cut down in his prime and during the period of his greatest usefulness.

Our former colleague, JAMES H. DAVIDSON, would have wished for no higher eulogy than to be remembered as a friend of men. Of splendid attainments and of strong attractive personality, he was known throughout his own loved State of Wisconsin and in this great legislative body as an able, patriotic, conscientious Representative, who made the cause of his people and of his country his own.

Men are useful to the world in which they move according to their opportunity to serve and their willingness to serve wholeheartedly and effectively. Measured by that simple standard, no man was more honest or faithful in his performance of public duties than our colleague, JAMES. H. DAVIDSON, and few men will be more missed from his circle of immediate friends than our friend in whose memory we meet to speak to-day.

Coming from the home district of distinguished public men of former years, including Senator Sawyer, Gen. Bragg, and "Gabe" Bouck, all notable men once familiar to these Halls, we who knew "JIM" DAVIDSON recognized in him a faithful representative of a strong people and a worthy successor of those who had gone before.

Stricken down at a time when his services on the great Military Committee would have been of great value to that committee and to his country during the midst of war, and before our Armies had been able to take active part in the great conflict he actively joined in preparing us for the struggle and then dropped out from our circle before many of us realized his serious illness.

His wife and loved ones, so suddenly bereft, lost a devoted husband and an affectionate father, while we, his associates, lost an able colleague and friend, and his State, together with this great legislative body in which he so long and honorably served, lost a faithful and distinguished public servant.

Warm-hearted and gentle by nature, he was yet strong in his convictions. I well remember his firm stand on grave public matters wherein momentous questions were involved, and his associates will bear testimony that he ever performed his public duties with fearless, conscientious judgment unaffected by personal considerations. No higher praise need be awarded any man.

As we go along the pathway of life, passing so rapidly on the downward stretch of the last half that we find the mileposts confronting us with ever-increasing frequency, we learn that he who gives the best that is in him for the good of others, who dedicates himself to the service of those about him, finds in that same service a pleasure and a contentment that is the certain reward of giving.

Such was the philosophy, under divine guidance, of our colleague, whose self-sacrifice and efforts to serve those about him made him so greatly esteemed by his fellows. He was high-minded and a strong man among men—a man whose place can not be filled, and a friend who will never be forgotten.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, the first Member of this House who extended to me the hand of welcome and fellowship was our deceased colleague, JAMES H. DAVIDSON. Shortly after my election in 1916 I received a letter from Mr. DAVIDSON, whose district and mine were adjoining, in which he offered his assistance in acquainting me with the duties of my new office. Later on he invited me and another new Member elect to visit him at his home city of Oshkosh. We gladly availed ourselves of his kindness, and spent some enjoyable and profitable hours with him. I had made a mental memorandum of innumerable points on which I sought light. When I recall now all the questions with which I plied him, I say he had a right to consider me green indeed. If he did, he did not show it, but answered all my questions with sympathetic courtesy and patience.

From that day on Mr. DAVIDSON and I became warm friends, and him, like other men who have counseled and aided me when I stood in need, I shall always hold in grateful remembrance.

Our deceased friend was born at Downsville, N. Y., in 1858. Like many men who have attained prominence, he taught school and studied law. He graduated from the Albany Law School in 1884. Three years later, following the advice to "go West, young man," he moved to Princeton, Wis., and opened a law office. In 1888 he was elected district attorney of his county, and from that time until his death he was in the political arena. In 1892 he removed to Oshkosh, one of the largest cities of Wisconsin, where there was greater opportunity for the display of his powers. In 1896 he was elected a Member of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was reelected for seven consecutive terms, serving his constituency from 1897 to 1913. He was defeated in his candidacy for the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses, but was reelected to the Sixty-fifth.

His long service as a Member of this House is almost a conclusive testimonial to his ability and integrity as a representative of the people and as a man. An election to this body is in itself evidence of character and ability, but an election for nine terms is an indorsement of public duty ably and conscientiously performed, to add to which would be mere surplusage. The people whom he represented knew him best, and notwithstanding the onslaughts which political campaigns bring on, they honored him time and again by commissioning him as their representative here.

After I came to Washington as a Member of the Sixty-fifth Congress I had the good fortune to associate with our deceased colleague almost daily. I frequently sought his advice in matters of routine, and discussed with him some of the questions of the day. He was always courteous and willing to be of assistance in any way he could, and I considered it a privilege to feel that I might go to him at any time and get the benefit of his many years of experience.

Mr. DAVIDSON was a man who was modest and retiring in his disposition, but he possessed firm will power. He was no friend of bombast and sham. He had a strong sense of right and duty, and his sole aim was to let his every act be for the best interests of his constituents and his country.

For some months before his death it was apparent to our delegation that our deceased friend was in failing health, although none of us realized that he would soon be with us no more. He bore his ailment with great fortitude and rarely complained. During this time he frequently expressed to me solicitude for his family. He was intensely devoted to and proud of his wife and his two sons and daughter. To his bereaved family our sympathy goes out to-day.

Our deceased colleague died here in Washington on August 6 last. It was my privilege to be in the congressional party that attended the last rites at his home. Here were assembled many of his friends, with whom we joined in paying a tribute of respect and affection. With simple and impressive ceremonies the mortal remains of JAMES H. DAVIDSON were laid away among murmuring trees and beneath a wealth of flowers, but his spirit will always be with us.

Mr. CLASSON. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not know JAMES H. DAVIDSON very long.

I say unfortunately, because I knew him long enough and well enough to realize that it would have been rare good fortune to have known him longer and better.

I first met him when he was a practicing lawyer and city attorney of Oshkosh, before his first election to Congress, which occurred in 1896, more than 22 years ago.

From that time I never saw him until he had again been elected after being out of Congress for four years.

I had just been elected and went to Oshkosh to see him and talk with him about some things which I wanted to learn about before coming to Washington. My reception and treatment by Mr. DAVIDSON at that time made an impression upon me which led me to resolve that I would become better acquainted with him, which I did, and I may say that our relations were rather intimate during the months of the special session and those of the regular session before he became too ill to attend to his duties.

Many men from his own and other States who were Members of the House during his first period of service, which covered 16 years, can and do testify to his faithful, painstaking, and able work here.

I know that his district is one containing varied and important industries and includes several of the principal cities of Wisconsin, and that in it are many men of ability and high standing, and the fact that such a constituency was content to be served for years by him demonstrates the satisfaction which he gave to his people as a national legislator and the confidence which they reposed in him; and the fact that he was returned after an interval of four years, during which period he was the nominee of his party in two unsuccessful contests, shows that he was considered a fit and popular standard bearer of his party.

It is of the side of Mr. DAVIDSON that I knew best that I wish to speak for a moment. He was a man of unfailing courtesy and kindness of heart, always considerate of others, absolutely conscientious, and with the highest moral courage; devoted to his duty and to his family and his friends; and I have never yet seen a man, woman, or child who knew JIM DAVIDSON who was not his friend.

Naturally he had sharp political and other differences of opinion with many people, but such differences never caused anyone to lose his admiration for him as a clean and honorable opponent and a courteous, high-minded, lovable gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I can say only that which I know. I knew him and loved him, and those who knew him loved him and miss him.

His life and death were a beautiful fulfillment of the admonition of the poet:

> So live that, when thy summons comes to join
> The innumerable caravan that moves
> To that mysterious realm where each shall take
> His chamber in the silent halls of death,
> Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
> Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly of JAMES H. DAVIDSON as a man. For 26 years I have known him well. It has been my good fortune to have been associated with him in many ways and to have known his reaction to many different circumstances.

JAMES H. DAVIDSON loved people. His home life was beautiful. As husband and father he counseled and advised. He felt and knew that each must live his own life and that there is, therefore, no place for a dictator where democracy is or is to be.

He used to walk to and from his office along Algoma Street. There was always a cheery greeting for everyone—a wave of the hand, a smile, and a word. This did not come from habit nor was it assumed. It was the genuine expression of his love for folks. Farmers used to go up to his office just to greet him, and go away again reassured that JIM DAVIDSON was just as human as ever.

And he loved his town and his State and his country and all mankind in the same sincere, human way. You could not shake his hand and look into his kindly eye without knowing that he had a philosophy of life that was genuinely human through and through.

And therefore he had friends wherever he was known. The newsboy, the bootblack, the mill hand, the lumberjack, the storekeeper, the farmer, the captain of industry, the minister, the statesman, all knew JIM DAVIDSON and loved him. He had many opponents, but no enemies. This was not because he lacked clear judgment or because he lacked will power. On the contrary, his judgment was clear and farseeing; his mind, once made up, was constant and unswerving. He saw the big things in big ways, and he also saw in each person that he met the substantial and fundamental elements that make human life a thing of priceless value.

And so he went about his work in a kindly, sympathetic, farseeing way. He refused to be troubled because some things did not go just as he thought they ought to go, for he knew that his way was not the only way, his view was not the only view. This explains that almost unexampled consideration which he showed, and also that gentlemanliness which was so characteristic of him. He was schooled in the forms of politeness, but he was never formal. Politeness and gentlemanly conduct were as natural with him as was the beating of his heart.

JAMES H. DAVIDSON was a man to whom those in trouble instinctively turned, and never in vain. It was not that people expected him to remove the cause of their trouble so much as it was that they knew he could help them to adjust themselves to a changed world in a reasonable way. His advice and counsel were sought on all sorts of troubles, for he knew how to find the brighter side. He knew and lived the philosophy which Longfellow expressed in his poem, The Rainy Day; that philosophy which led Garfield to say to that great crowd in New York immediately after the assassination of Lincoln: "God reigns, and the Government at Washington still lives."

It was this faith in the final outcome of things, this faith in the integrity of the human soul, that gave him his poise and his balance. He was serene and undisturbed by things which caused frenzy in some who had less interest in the outcome than had he. He never lost command of himself, and therefore he never lost the confidence and respect of those with whom he was associated. He did not have to retract and explain and start anew. Instead he kept steadily on, gaining every day in knowledge, in insight, in power, and in genuine worth.

He was an incessant worker. He wanted to know all that was to be known about the subjects that came to his congressional committees. If a new woodworking machine had beeen installed in one of the factories of his home town during his absence, he wanted to know all about it. And in all that touched his life, and especially in all of that for which as a public servant he had a responsibility, he sought information, knowledge, and understanding. He never formed snap judgments, and he was not ashamed to say that he did not know. He was devoted to the underlying truth of things, to which even his partisanship never blinded him.

And it was thus that he developed a judicial attitude of mind. He weighed the pros and cons of things, turned them over in his keen and fertile mind, and thus reached conclusions that were sound. He was never wrong on great, fundamental issues.

And thus he was a self-made man—not simply in the sense that he sought and struggled and won, but in that deeper sense which means that through his efforts he became one of God's noblemen, "fed from within with all the strength he needs."

Such a man is loyalty itself. He saw the faults of men, but he estimated men in terms of their virtues. He was a party man because he saw that only through parties can come that adjustment and readjustment of social relationships which spells progress; and therefore, while he was a party man, he regarded his party as a means to an end that was greater than the party. That end was to him the welfare of his country, of our democracy. And even beyond all this was an abiding faith in the brotherhood of man in the fatherhood of God. Matrixed in this faith, he was always loyal to those things which square with it.

Kindly, sincere, clear-sighted, conscientious, considerate, gentlemanly, sound, loyal—such he was when the Angel of Death summoned him from our midst. And now he sleeps in the bosom of Mother Earth, beside the river he loved so well, missed and mourned by those whom he had loved and helped—sleeps until God shall call him home.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, we are again gathered to pay our last tribute of respect to one whom has gone from us to join the vast silent majority who have crossed the river of death.

I wish to add my tribute to those of my colleagues who have so ably described the worth and manhood of JAMES H. DAVIDSON and to lay upon his grave the wreath of kindly memory that he so well deserved. It was my privilege to meet him in the Sixtieth Congress. I was a new Member and he an old one, and I shall long remember his cordial welcome to me and the helping hand he extended in advising and counseling his new confrere from the Badger State.

JAMES H. DAVIDSON had the sturdy common sense and rugged sincerity that came to him as a priceless inheritance from his ancestors, and living as he did in the robust and liberty-breathing air of the great Northwest he partook of all the characterictics that make the men of the forests of Wisconsin such splendid citizens of a splendid country.

He was an ardent and consistent Republican, but free from all that was narrow in his partisanship; he placed a true and steadfast Americanism above all party creeds, and was never afraid to voice his convictions on all public questions as his own conscience dictated. He was defeated a few years ago, and those of us who had remained were glad, indeed, when the news came that he had been returned, and we found our old friend and colleague the same genial, rugged, and sincere man who had left us for a season. But he did not remain with us long. He "came back" triumphantly, but it was but for a little space, and then, in the full vigor of his manhood, he was stricken and died practicaly in harness.

All that is left now of JAMES DAVIDSON is the memory of his manly character and the name he has left behind him, but it is the priceless heritage of an unstained reputation that he has left and a name that will be remembered as long as honest worth, sincerity, and integrity are hallmarks of gentility in a Republic that does not depend on the quarterings of heraldry to make her noblemen and aristocracy.

Robert Burns has well said:

A king can mak a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that,
But an honest man's abuin his might,
Guid faith he mauna fa' that,
For a' that and a' that,
Their riband, star, and a' that,
The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The mon's the gowd for a' that.

So let us, as we stand beside the bier of one who has gone before, see in his life and death the lesson that in this country of ours a reputation based on honesty and sincerity is worth more that the ratings of a commercial agency or the accolade of a monarch; that the confidence of a constituency and the respect of a community is worth more than a patent of nobility; and that in this democracy of ours we shall still build monuments to those who hold fast, as JAMES H. DAVIDSON did, to the simple, sturdy virtues that have made our country the hope of the world, the despair of the tyrant, and the last abiding place of the spirit of freedom that shall never die while America holds her place among the nations of the earth.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of Wisconsin, I have known for many years of the large and eminent services of our colleague, the late Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON, and wish to-day to bear testimony of his noble life and distinguished career, always devoted to the best interests of his district, his State, and his country.

Though stricken in the very prime of life, he had still wrought long enough and well enough to leave his memory and services indelibly impressed upon his associates, his State, and his Nation. Such men never die.

His kind, genial, and manly spirit teaches us to-day that "honest toil is holy service, faithful work is praise and fame."

JAMES H. DAVIDSON was known as an able and conscientious legislator and tireless worker, and brought to bear both in the committee room and upon the floor of the House rare judgment and efficient leadership. He stood ready always to do his best when duty called. He taught us to carry hopeful hearts and cheerful brows, and that we must mold the life of our Nation by the force of great moral ideals, and rule through the royalty of principle that can never be discrowned.

His public life, as well as his private life, was marked by a purpose of real service and uplift in which sacrifice of self was never considered but freely spent for those he loved and served. The words of the great Christ find a rare application in the life of our lamented colleague when he said, "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister, and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."

JAMES E. DAVIDSON was happiest when he could be of the greatest service to his fellow men and his country. He always resolved to exert to his utmost his rare mental and physical powers to the end that there might be maintained in this world a permanent Christian civilization and life. Our friend and colleague, always true in his fellowship, tender in his sympathy, and noble in his ideals, will continue to live and to bless the world.

We bow at his grave to-day with profound sorrow and mingle our grief with the grief of his family and of those who knew and loved him best, and sincerely mourn the loss, in the very prime of life, of one of Wisconsin's noblest sons, of whom it may well be said:

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart throbs:
He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
Life is but a means to an end, that end
Beginning means an end to all things—God.

At this point Mr. BUTLER resumed the chair.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that some Members are not present, I ask unanimous consent that an opportunity may be afforded to all Members to insert remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. JAMES H. DAVIDSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM A. JONES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, February 16, 1919, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and adoption of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 582.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, late a Member of this House from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] will take the chair.

Mr. FLOOD took the chair.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, exercises by this House in memory of my late colleague WILLIAM A. JONES have been delayed in order to obtain copies of the memorial proceedings had in his behalf by the people of Manila and the Legislature of the Philippine Islands, proceedings so appropriately related to this occasion that I request unanimous consent that they may be made a part of the memorial record of our deceased colleague.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the memorial proceedings referred to be made a part of the memorial record of our deceased colleague. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent that any absent Member unavoidably detained from these exercises to-day may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia also asks unanimous consent that any Member unavoidably detained may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, amidst the accumulated work and labor of the closing days of this Congress, the last of the 14 Congresses in which my late colleague continuously served, we may well pause to recall the life, character, and public services of a Representative so able, faithful, and successful.

WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES was born at Warsaw, the county seat of Richmond County, Va., on March 21, 1849, and there he lived until his death in the George Washington University Hospital, in the city of Washington, on April 17, 1918. He came from honorable American stock. His great-grandfather, Joseph Jones, was a general in the Revolutionary War, an intimate and trusted friend of Lafayette, and subsequently postmaster of Petersburg, Va., by appointment of Jefferson. Thomas Jones, the son of Joseph, married Mary Lee, the daughter of Richard Lee, long a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses from Westmoreland County, a first cousin of the famous Richard Henry Lee; and from this marriage was born Thomas Jones, the second, who married Anne Seymour Trowbridge, of Plattsburg, N. Y., who were the father and mother of him to whose memory we would at this hour pay homage. I should add that James Trowbridge, his maternal grandfather, was recognized by the Congress for his gallantry at the siege of Plattsburg in 1814. So he came of goodly heritage, a heritage of which he never boasted, but which he exemplified by a life of high purpose and eminent usefulness.

His boyhood fell upon the stormy days of the great war between the States and upon its abhorrent aftermath. His father, a man of character and force, an intrepid soldier upon many a field of battle, a lawyer of success, and a judge of uprightness, realizing the temper and promise of his son, entered him as a cadet in the Virginia Military Institute in the fall of 1864, where he remained until the evacuation of Richmond, serving as occasion required with the corps of that famous institute in defense of the capital of his State. Thus as a boy of 16 he did arduous and valiant military service. He was then placed in Coleman's School, at Fredericksburg, a fine academy, from which he entered the University of Virginia in October, 1868. In this institution, with a corps of great professors and with a remarkable student body, upon all of whom he made an enviable impression, he worked faithfully and successfully, graduating with distinction in its school of law in June, 1870. Here, too, he was noted as an athlete, as those of us who knew him 25 years ago in his great vigor and physical beauty can well appreciate.

But, Mr. Speaker, education is not alone obtained from academies and universities, from study and observation, but largely though unconsciously from environment and the habits and traditions of the social group with which one comes into immediate contact. Perhaps not since the days of Athens did so small a section of country with a population so negligible in numbers ever put upon the stage of public activity in so brief a time so many great and illustrious men as were found in the period just prior and subsequent to the Revolution, in the Northern neck of Virginia, a narrow strip of country lying between the Potomac and Rappahannock Rivers. Within a few miles of Mr. JONES's home were born Washington, Madison, and Monroe; "Light Horse Harry" Lee, of revolutionary renown; Richard Henry Lee, the mover of the Declaration of Independence and the rival of Henry as the orator of the Revolution; Francis Lightfoot Lee, the signer of that document; Charles Lee, Attorney General in Washington's Cabinet; Arthur Lee, the negotiator of the treaty of 1778 between the United States and France, and later Robert Edward Lee, ranked by many eminent critics as the foremost military captain of the English-speaking race; while close by lived John Taylor, of Caroline, who wrought mightily for free institutions, and George Mason, the author of the first Bill of Rights formulated in America, and regarded by Washington as having the finest intellect of his time.

These mighty names and their mighty deeds, contributing so largely to the standards of patriotism and public life of America, found young JONES not unresponsive to their nourishing influences and ennobling traditions. Such an atmosphere, such historic and patriotic associations, constitute a fortunate school within which to rear an American statesman.

In July, 1870, he was admitted to the bar of his native county, where his character, ability, learning, and industry soon bore him to the very front of his profession. Within three years after coming to the bar he was elected Commonwealth's attorney by the people of his county, which office he filled with rare distinction and satisfaction for 10 years. He was a fearless, sometimes a stern, but always a just prosecutor. In the year 1890, when he was elected to the Fifty-second Congress, he was at the head of the bar of his section of Virginia, appearing with success in many important cases in the State and Federal courts. At the bar as upon the hustings he was a powerful advocate, a student of facts and of law, presenting his cases not always with the utmost tact but with a directness and power of argument that was usually irresistible. He did not thrust the rapier, he rather wielded the broad blade, and, sustained by a moral force, a mental vigor, and a commanding presence, he made one of the most formidable and successful advocates of his State before juries and courts, nisi prius and appellate.

Mr. Speaker, by heredity, by education, and by historic and patriotic environment, it seemed quite inevitable that he would devote himself to public affairs. So we find him very early in life the bold and brilliant defender of his party's faith and the fame and good name of his Commonwealth. He was frequently impressed for duty upon the hustings, and in some instances he met in debate the ablest men of the opposition from home and abroad. And none met him who ever forgot him, and many of his ablest antagonists cherished no wish to cross swords with him again. At times he was almost merciless in debate. His intensity of conviction, his accurate and quick perception of the weak joint in the armor of his opponent, made him one of the most formidable debaters of his State in his day and generation. This may seem exaggerative by those of this House who only saw him of recent years, bending under the weight of pain and disease, but those who have known him as I have known him, who have heard him as I have heard him, will unhesitatingly confirm this appreciation of his extraordinary forensic power.

Mr. Speaker, the qualities which I have mentioned, together with his compelling personality, his vehement confidence in the potency of free institutions, and his contributions of speech and pen to the public questions of the day led to his nomination to the Fifty-second Congress in a memorable campaign over a very popular opponent, the Republican Member of the district. Nor was his victory ephemeral. He was no erratic comet, but rather a fixed star, growing in steady and expanding radiance. So from his election in 1890 to the day of his death he received the continuous and deepening confidence of a great constituency, and it may be truthfully affirmed that had he lived through the fall of 1918 he would have been nominated and elected without opposition.

Once or twice his district was changed, but these changes brought him constituents of equal if not increased friendliness and confidence. Nor did he employ the usual methods of securing political support. In his long career and contests he never by word or letter personally solicited a single vote, unless appeals to the people through the press and from the rostrum should be so construed. Indeed, save in rare instances he never sent out a public document unless he had a specific request therefor.

He approached his constituents as he would have them approach him, upon a plane of mutual respect, consideration, and confidence. But no Member of this House was ever more watchful of the rights and interests of his constitutents, singular or collective. He never spared himself in their behalf, and among the last of his public acts, performed with great pain and inconvenience, was his irrefutable presentation of a great harbor improvement to the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. Speaker, I should not undertake on this occasion to assemble and assess all the public services of my late eminent colleague, but I would mention two instances as best exhibiting the true temper and test of his political ideals, which were to be found in his unvarying and vehement conviction of the right and success of peoples to govern themselves.

The first instance was the effective part he took in his own State in behalf of the direct election of United States Senators by the people, and, pending its accomplishment by constitutional amendment, his able, brilliant, and persistent efforts in behalf of a ballot primary as the means of instructing or controlling the State legislature in the selection of Senators. The wisdom of his statesmanship in advocacy of such methods I will not discuss, my purpose being only to show his political convictions, his confidence in the right of the people to elect their political agents as essential to the proper maintenance of free institutions.

The second instance evidencing the same faith, was his able and indefatigable efforts to give to the Filipinos the fullest measure of self-government compatible with their political development, and with the ultimate purpose of their complete independence. The merits or demerits of his views upon this subject I will not now discuss save to observe that his service in behalf of these distant peoples was the crowning achievement of his public life as it was the supreme evidence of his political faith and philosophy. He firmly believed that all just governments should rest upon the consent of the governed—this conviction was the source and object of his constant activities.

Mr. Speaker, many here recall his presence on this floor battling for this ideal and for this legislation. We recall how he seemed to forget his physical limitations, and with a memory of all the facts and history involved in the question, with his soul aglow at the prospects of the larger liberties which the legislation would promote, by argument and tact and tenacity, he guided through this House that great measure which will make his name blessed for evermore by the people of these faraway isles, as it is already embalmed in their grateful and fervent affections.

I accompanied him from the House to his committee room after the final passage of that measure. Tired and worn was he, but no word of personal exultation did he utter, only with winsome smile and subdued voice was a simple expression of gratitude that he had helped in his day and generation to extend the frontiers of human freedom. This was the great achievement of his long career, an achievement that will be memorialized in enduring form by the peoples of the Philippine Islands, and a culmination worthy of the best traditions of American statesmanship.

Mr. Speaker, I must now close my inadequate appreciation of this incorruptible public servant, this brave man, with resolute tenacity of purpose, with abounding confidence in the merits of any cause which he espoused, and fearless determination to give to it all of his strength and courage, to speak most briefly of his capacity for friendships. He had many friends and in them he saw little but what was good. He was slow to give his affections, but once given they were inflexible. It would be invidious to call the roll of his true and tried friends. But one I will ever remember, who from college to casket gave him an unbroken flow of affection, and who with sad face and moist eyes came in the early morning from another State to view the remains of his dead friend. And there are those of this Congress, amidst the associations of this Hall, who will recall the beautiful friendship so long existing between him and the brilliant De Armond of Missouri.

I would not lift the veil which hides the outer world from the activities and felicities of his home life, save to say that he was a kindly neighbor, a delightful host, a dutiful and affectionate son, a true and faithful husband, and a generous and loving father. He truly met all of the near and tender relations of life.

His death has wrung grievously the hearts of many and he will long be missed by his district, his State, and this House, in which he was for so many years a distinguished Member. The funeral committee of this House will ever vividly recall the glowing and gorgeous spring morning when troops of friends and neighbors gathered about the open grave in the cemetery of Saint John's Church, in full view of his home, when amidst the singing of birds and the moaning of friends he was laid away in the soil he loved so well.

Mr. Speaker, he was ready for the summons. He was aware of the slender thread of life left him, for the pain and agony of his fatal disease told him only too plainly of the nearing end. But—

> Men must endure
> Their going hence as their coming thither;
> Ripeness is all.

He was indeed the "full corn in the ear," ripe and hanging lightly to be plucked by the Hand Divine. With courage and hope he quietly met the end, and at this hour I pay my homage to the memory of a true patriot, a great public servant, a noble and high-minded man, Virginia's loyal son, America's defender, and my dear friend.

Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the request heretofore granted, I insert herewith the memorial in behalf of our late colleague by the people of Manila and the Legislature of the Philippine Islands:

THE PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE TO WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES.

SPEECH DELIVERED BY SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR RAFAEL PALMA ON THE OCCASION OF THE MEMORIAL SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE IN HONOR OF THE LATE CONGRESSMAN JONES, AUTHOR OF THE FUNDAMENTAL LAW OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The event which we have now the honor to commemorate, while it would seem as already past, awakens in our soul the indefinable emotion of a fresh anguish, of a painful and deep stab that but yesterday was in our hearts. On the 16th of April this year the faint accent of the cable transmitted from one end to the other of this archipelago the news that Representative Jones of Virginia was seriously ill. This message of sorrow produced in all parts of the islands a sensation of anguish and the soul of the whole country felt the profound alarm that something was being lost which was a part of it, something which was to it intimate and familiar. When after a few days later the cables flashed the sadder news of his demise a general consternation overran the Filipino homes, drowning their inhabitants in profound mourning and meditation.

It is not necessary to reason out, to look for the explanation of, this logical sentiment. The world lives on the law of contradiction, on opposing ideas, on schisms of interests, on passions that mar. But amid all these contradictions and antitheses the sentiment that compels man to recognize with piety, with love and gratitude, the value of a good received, of a favor generously and disinterestedly lavished, is uniform, is universal. It is thus that the Filipino people, after experiencing the first moments of stupor and pain, arose like a single soul to give a vigorous expression to its sincere condolence for the bitter loss, and in the messages which came from the remotest confines of our municipalities, from our political, civic and social organizations, as well as in the memorial services rendered for the departed, the language of man exhausted the vocabulary of pain, that vocabulary that can not, and can never, inclose the multifarious sentiments of the human heart. After all those manifestations of pain, after all that expression of love and gratitude which the memory of Congressman JONES kept burning in the soul, this legislature, as the incarnation of the Filipino people, can not forget him during these sessions. This legislature is his own creation, his own work, as well as of Congress, and it would be guilty of a breach of courtesy and gratitude if it were to let this session pass without honoring the memory of that great public man, who, belonging as he did belong to a distinct race, thought much of the Philippines, identified himself with the interests of the Filipinos, and who, in justice and in truth, has a right to claim a place in the honor roll of our own heroes and to own a sanctuary in every Filipino home and heart.

William Atkinson Jones, in fact, more than a glory to America, is a glory to the Philippines. America might have been the scene of his efforts and triumphs, but the scene of his glory is the Philippines. It is here where his work exerted and will exert a beneficial and lasting influence. It is here where his spirit and his genius have been most understood and appreciated and where the legislation that bears his name will yield the most timely fruits and will be the object of the veneration and the admiration of generations and generations of Filipinos.

It is wonderful, it is interesting, to observe how, once in a while, history presents to us men of extraordinary minds and character, of pure and elevated principles, whose work and whose influence, instead of ending with the confines of their country, extend far beyond, stamping their profound impress on the ideas and on the political life of other races. For this reason, Lord Chatham and Lafayette are better loved and venerated in the United States than in their own countries; Pi and Margal and Morayta more popular in the Philippines than in Spain. And something more: These men may belong to their own countries by birth, but they belong more principally to the countries they have chosen for the scene of their conquests, as the object of their zeal and love, countries that received the nourishment of their doctrines and examples and profited from their deeds and exploits. Thus the geniuses who enlightened the world by the inventions of their science, Franklin, Newton, Marconi, are said to be men without a country—they belong to humanity.

It is true that in his land, Virginia, William Atkinson Jones will receive the honor and the respect it owes him as one of its illustrious sons. But I doubt very much whether they could love him with the same piety and the adoration of the millions of Filipinos, to-day and to-morrow, who owe to him in their present situation the restitution of that God-given attribute of leading a life as free citizens of a country, as a people who can manage their own affairs and whose ultimate destinies they can mold in accordance with their own principles and inspiration. I doubt whether Virginian posterity can lavish on his memory the blessings and prayers which will be lavished upon it by Filipino posterity that has seen the progress of the cycle of its emancipation—that cycle which has proved and is proving too difficult for many countries to traverse—by means of that magnificent piece of legislation that is now constituting the cornerstone of our political life.

William Atkinson Jones is not only a glory which we may claim; he is besides a symbol, the symbol of true and genuine Americanism. He is for us one of the exemplars of that American tradition of not reconciling the conscience and the judgment to the insecure opinions of the vulgar but only to the permanent interests of human liberty. He did not concur in that absurd commonplace of considering the acquisition of the Philippines as a design of Providence or as a rich spoil of war destined to render commercial benefits and political aggrandizement to his Nation. On the contrary, he has been one of those rare and privileged minds who, placing themselves above all and any kinds of national egotism, resorted for inspiration to the ideals of that noble galaxy of men who prepared the American Declaration of Independence and dictated the principle of liberty to the peoples of the world.

Hailing from Virginia, and saturated with the atmosphere of that land enhallowed by the examples of life and death of Washington, readily did he see in the Filipino struggle for liberty an honorable object to which he could worthily dedicate the best efforts of his upright mind and of his generous heart. When, with wondering eyes, he beheld that far from the confines of his country the war was being waged on a weak and defenseless people that did nothing but to uphold its right to liberty, surely, he did not find it difficult to understand that the Filipinos were sustaining their cause with the same spirit of valor, with the same unutterable passion for liberty which burned in the soul of the American colonists of '76 when they tried to cast away the chain that bound them with England.

In this way, thereafter, with a consistency which resisted all fatigues, with a vigor and courage which seemed not the attributes of his years, with a clear vision of the rôle his nation was destined to play in the shaping of world destinies, he dedicated the last 15 years of his public career to sustain outside and inside the American Congress the sacred cause of Philippine independence. For years his generous attempts failed to arouse any interest in Congress. But when in 1912 the men of his party assumed the reins of power, it did not take him long to present his first bill on Philippine independence, providing for the establishment of a Filipino government which, after eight years, was to be declared independent. The presentation of this bill proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Democratic party honorably intended to give a definite solution to the Philippine problem to the chagrin of those men who saw in the promises of the opposition party mere whims that would never be realized when said party comes into power. The bill did not pass through successfully, due to the stern opposition which confronted it in and outside Congress, but such did not in any way serve to discourage the efforts of Representative JONES, for whom defeat served but to double his energy and to reinforce a will which not only awaited the victory but desired the compensation. In this way he introduced another bill on the same subject, which, after passing through countless obstacles, was finally converted into law, that law which is at present the organic charter of the Filipino people and the reach and consequence of which, while apparently affecting only the Filipinos, will undoubtedly, in course of time, inevitably affect the fortunes of the other dependent peoples on earth.

Must I speak yet of the patience, the tenacity of purpose and action, the spirit of sacrifice and of valor, which he showed during all that time in the defense of the Filipino cause as if it were his own cause? Did he expect any favor or recompense from the Filipinos? No; he alone depended on his conviction, on the traditions of his country, and for this reason stood alert, restless, but always firm, maintaining his belief and his interest till the end, in the confidence—what do I say?—in the assurance that in such way his nation not only was doing justice to a dependent people, but was also showing faith to its traditions, those traditions which have come to make of the American Continent the universally recognized continent of freedom.

He saw what others did not see. With ample prophetic vision he faced not only the present but the future and, purging it of all prejudice of race and civilization, endeavored to assure, more than the material supremacy, the permanent spiritual sovereignty of the United States in the Filipino heart. Was he deluded? No, a thousand times, no. Never had the Filipino people shown more faith in the American Nation than when under the government established by the Jones law. Never the American flag was held dearer, more respected, in Luzon as in the Visayas and Mindanao, as to-day the clouds of uncertainty of the past were dispelled and the eyes could see with clearness the indubitable sign of the future. Never as to-day had the Filipinos felt and expressed their loyalty with more freedom from timidity and baseness, with more frankness in the expression of truth, and never had they shown more willingness to maintain public order, to render their bit of sacrifice with America in her critical moments. Never had the interest and the patriotism of the Filipinos been more active and energetic as in these days to develop the sources of wealth and of common prosperity, to initiate and stimulate those enterprises so necessary to the enhancement of the highway of national greatness. Against all the auguries and predictions of the pessimists, the progress in all the walks of ordinary life in this country is moving with order and regularity, under the protection of an honorable, efficient, and judicious government.

These results plainly justify the confidence which Representative JONES has deposited in the Filipino people. He had faith in the goodness of man, in the work of his creation, in human nature. He was of those who think that the Creator has never denied a people the power and the intelligence to lead its own life, to develop its own prosperity, and attain its own well-being and happiness. With what pride, therefore, and with what satisfaction he must have greeted the noble and gallant response of the Filipino people to the confidence placed in them, by discharging efficiently the new additions to their powers. And when death closed the last page of his life, Congressman JONES brought to the grave that greater satisfaction born of the conviction of having planted the seed of goodness and seen it burgeon on the furrow. If the teachings of his doctrines and of his works are to mark the path of the future, if the motives enunciated in the preamble of his law and written down by his own pen are to serve as the guide and measure of the future relations between the American and Filipino peoples, I do not have the least doubt that his spirit, wherever it might be, will feel satisfied at seeing the realization of a work which death has cut short.

It is just that we should pay our tribute to the memory of Congressman JONES, that we offer on this occasion the most precious flowers of veneration and love for him who has been the loyal champion, and will be, in history, the father of the Filipino Nation. It is just that we vote resolutions expressive of our sorrow, in the name of the Filipino people whom we represent, and erect on his resting place in Virginia a mausoleum paid in public subscription by the sons of the Philippines. All this, and much more, the illustrious dead deserves for all that he has done for our country. We can not answer for the future. But if the life of an individual is short that of a nation is long. The Philippine nation must have to emerge some day, and the final outcome of the events in Europe, assuring for the future the formula of a just peace and the relations of sympathy and understanding among nations big and small, not founded on violence but on free will, would seem to assure its realization. I hope, therefore, that the Filipino nation will prove that it never forgets those who worked for its well being. And in the capital of the nation, when this shall have built its valhalla (temple of fame), Congressman JONES will figure among our greatest heroes and his statue will stand in a public place to remind not only the American people but the entire world of the truth of the maxim that "the greatest good, the most positive good that can be rendered all peoples is that of their own liberty."

ORATION DELIVERED BY GOVERNOR GENERAL FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON AT THE MEMORIAL MASS MEETING SERVICES FOR THE LATE HON. WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, APRIL 30, 1918.

As an American I am proud to listen to the eulogies of Representative JONES by leading men of the Filipino race; as a friend of the Filipinos I am glad to witness once more an enduring proof of their gratitude and recognition of the noble work done in their behalf by an American leader.

Through many years of a long and honored life Mr. JONES labored earnestly and without self-interest for the liberties of the Filipino people. He was fortunate to live long enough to see a great part of his work crowned with success. He had also the satisfaction of knowing that his great fight for the immortal principle that Government should exist only with the consent of the governed is the truest exposition of Americanism. Thus, his struggle was not only in behalf of Filipino ideals but to uphold American principles.

I had the privilege of knowing Mr. JONES well during the years of our congressional service together, and what always impressed me, in addition to the nobility and generosity of his character, was the absolute sincerity of his nature and his deep devotion to principle. He had, moreover, a thorough understanding of the Filipino people and a complete confidence in their abilities and in their future.

It is impossible for me to describe how much I owe to him and to his memory. At all times and upon every occasion he was prompt, decisive, and unfailing in his generous support of my work here. He enjoyed the entire confidence and respect of President Wilson, and has been of inestimable value to the Filipino people during these years of uncertainty so happily resolved by the passage of the law of liberty which bears his honored name. His work will now be taken up and carried on with vigor by his distinguished successor, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

As long as the Filipino nation shall endure, the memory of Mr. JONES will live, not only in monuments and in name but in the hearts of the people. Happy indeed is the man who can go to his eternal rest with the gratitude and affection of an entire race; who can enjoy to the last the blessing of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"; who can carry with him the conviction that each and every Filipino, from the highest to the most humble, has secured a greater opportunity in life through his efforts. The pity of it is that he could not have lived on to see the independence of the Philippines he loved so well.

This is a wonderful thing—this demonstration to-night, in memory of a man who lived and died 12,000 miles away. If we could suppose his immortal soul to be still sentient of human emotions, we could believe that his heart would now swell with joy. But it is not enough that he should know of this in those immense and distant regions to which his soul has been drawn. He should know that through generations yet unborn his name will be mentioned with respect by orators on the platform, and that his memory will always "smell sweet and blossom in the silent dust" of the Philippines. He will expect more from all of you than respect and honor. When that glorious day shall come that you take your stand among the sisterhood of nations, you must remember that Mr. JONES's spirit up above will be watching over you with deep and tender solicitude; that through the trials and tribulations of a young republic, through sunshine and through shadow, in gladness and in sorrow, in failure and in success, his spirit will be with you; and, could he from far above speak to you in human voice, I am sure that he would call in clarion tone: "I expect every Filipino to do his duty."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the service of WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES as a Representative from the State of Virginia began with the Fifty-second Congress. He became chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs at the commencement of the Sixty-second Congress. It was at that time I became associated with him as a member of that committee, and such association continued until the time of his death.

Under the rules of the House all proposed legislation concerning the islands which came to us as a result of the war with Spain is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Insular Affairs. A brief period of military occupancy followed the adoption of the treaty by which we assumed jurisdiction of the islands—an organic act under which the Philippines were governed until the passage of the law now in operation was enacted by Congress in 1902.

Under the act of 1902 the complete pacification of the islands was accomplished. Local laws were enacted, courts of justice established, sanitation effected, a public-school system inaugurated. In general great progress in all directions was made. Still it was understood both by the people of the islands and by the people of the United States that the law of 1902 was but a temporary enactment and that the time had arrived for further legislation under which a larger measure of self government should be given the islands. To the character of such legislation the gentleman from Virginia had given much study and thought, and to its formulation he gave serious attention immediately he became chairman of the committee.

The original draft of the bill was exclusively the work of Mr. JONES; but preliminary to its submission to the full committee it was informally submitted for consideration to the ranking member of the majority, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and to myself as ranking minority member. Frequent and sometimes prolonged consultations were held. Although there was frequent disagreement, our relations throughout were the most cordial. When the bill was presented to the full committee there was little controversy over the legislative provisions. The only controversy that arose and upon which there was political alignment was over the preamble.

The preamble referred to stated in several whereases the future purpose of the people of the United States with regard to the Philippines. This declaration of purpose had its origin in a series of events which it may be of interest briefly to review:

March 20, 1912, at the opening of the Sixty-second Congress Mr. JONES, for the first time chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, introduced a bill "to establish a qualified independent government for the Philippine Islands and to fix a date when such qualified independence shall become absolute and complete." The bill provided that "on and after the 4th day of July, 1921, the full and complete independence of the Philippines shall be, and is hereby, acknowledged."

The bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs and placed on the calendar of the House. Opposition developed among the majority and it was not pressed for passage. Soon afterwards the Democratic Party in its national convention at Baltimore announced its platform regarding the Philippines, declaring for the independence of the islands not at any fixed time, but "as soon as a stable government can be established."

In accordance with this announced policy of his party, on July 11, 1914, Mr. JONES introduced a bill in the preamble of which it was declared that the purpose of the United States was to give the Philippine Islands "absolute and complete independence" when "a stable government can be established." The bill was favorably reported by the committee and passed the House, but failed of consideration by the Senate.

Practically the same bill was introduced by Mr. JONES in the next Congress. The bill was favorably considered by the committee, but was not reported by reason of the action of the Senate. The chairman of the Committee on the Philippines in the Senate [Mr. HITCHCOCK] introduced in the Senate a bill alike in substance with the Jones bill. As it was reported from the committee, however, it had a different preamble, which declared that independence would be given the Philippines "when in the judgment of the United States it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands."

The debate in the Senate centered around this declaration, and after it had proceeded several days the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] introduced an amendment directing the President to withdraw our authority and control of the Philippines, and to recognize their independence in not less than two years and not more than four years from the approval of the act. The amendment was adopted to the astonishment of everybody, the preamble was withdrawn, and the bill passed the Senate and came to the House. When considered in the House, the debate centered on the Clarke amendment, which was finally stricken out and the Jones bill, with its preamble promising independence "as soon as a stable government can be established," was substituted, adopted, and is now the law.

It was only an act of simple justice that in this manner was brought about the passage of the Jones bill. Without much division of sentiment that was the desire of the House. The minority, while opposing the preamble, favored the legislation, of which the preamble was really not a part. Besides, the minority recognized the power and right of the majority to enact its views into law, and if any bill giving expression to such views was to pass, the minority desired it should be the bill prepared and presented by Mr. JONES, who was held in highest esteem by the entire membership of the House.

In the minority report on the Senate bill, which I prepared and presented, I said:

The minority members of the committee are glad to express their profound respect and affectionate regard toward this nestor of the House [Mr. JONES], whose record of continuous service is longest among the entire membership of that body. It may not be improper to express the hope that his party associates in the House may substitute his bill for the Senate bill, so that its passage may be the crowning act of a long, an honorable, and a distinguished career of public service.

In practical operation the Jones law has proven successful and satisfactory. Under it the people of the islands have continued progressive and prosperous. The proof given by this legislation, with its large measure of self-government, has satisfied the people of the Philippines that the United States has no other desire than the happiness and well-being of their people. In the enactment of the Jones law the United States was but carrying into effect the declaration of President McKinley, made in 1900, that the government of the islands which the United States intended to establish was "designed not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the Philippine Islands."

The effect of this legislation has been also satisfactory to the people of the United States. They have a higher respect for the capacity of the people of the Philippines for self-government. They have a greater belief in their gratitude and loyalty. The spontaneous exhibition of patriotic devotion given by the people of the Philippines when the United States entered the war against Germany and the generous offer of their sons in defense of this country and in support of the cause for which we fought has touched the hearts of Americans most deeply.

The people of the Philippines early learned of the devotion of Mr. JONES to their cause. He was from the first their champion. They watched the progress of his bill with continued and deep interest. When its success was finally announced their enthusiasm was most strongly made manifest by cheers and honors for its author. When the sad message was carried across the Pacific that their friend and benefactor was dead there was universal grief and mourning in the islands.

The Philippine Review, a most excellent and remarkably able journal, said:

When the sad news of the death of WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, the name that stands with that of Rizal as the greatest sponsor of Philippine liberties, was known to the Filipino people, the profoundest sorrow was felt in every home in the islands. His death is considered as a national tragedy and mourned by the entire nation.

The Hon. Manuel L. Quezon, now president of the Philippine Senate, who, as Delegate from the islands to the Congress of the United States, was associated with Mr. JONES throughout the long struggle to secure the passage of the JONES law, and without whose able and devoted labors its passage could not have been secured, said:

The death of Mr. JONES, the most loyal and sincere friend of the Filipino people and constant champion of their liberties, is the greatest national loss suffered by our country since Rizal was taken away from us. The most patriotic Filipino could not have consecrated himself more completely to the defense of our interests.

Hon. Aergio Osmena, the able and greatly loved speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives, said:

It is impossible to express in words the profound grief which now shrouds the Filipino people. If Mr. JONES had been a Filipino, his never flagging interest for this country would have given him the right for the complete recognition of all. The fact that Mr. JONES, without being of our race, concentrated all his energy and enthusiasm for nearly 20 years to our cause, makes him so deserving of our respect and our gratitude that it would not be sufficient that with a throbbing heart before his tomb we tender him our tears and our affections. He will live while there breathes a Filipino.

It is a great accomplishment to have been of real service to ten millions of people. It is a still greater accomplishment to have won their confidence and love. To have become a necessary part of the history of a people is to reach the highest place to which human ambition can aspire. Such was the accomplishment, and such will be the place in history of WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, whose memory we honor on this day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the man whose memory we formally honor to-day in accordance with the custom of the House was an intellectual and physical aristocrat, but a temperamental and spiritual democrat.

He was born of Virginia and Massachusetts. Through his veins there coursed the best blood of the Old Dominion and the Old Bay State. His father was of the proud and honorable citizenry of Virginia; his mother a most conspicuous representative of the culture and charm of Massachusetts.

Thus bred, he could not normally have been other than the gentleman he was.

The district which he for so long a time represented in the Congress of the United States is made up of a territory as historic as any spot of like dimensions on the earth. Within its confines were born three Presidents of the United States—Washington, Madison, and Monroe—men, by the way, who were not made great by becoming President, but who made the presidency great. They were practical architects and builders of states and nations.

There, too, was born Gen. Robert Edward Lee. Others might be mentioned—statesmen, writers, soldiers, clergy. That section of tidewater Virginia has produced them all. Scarce a square mile of that territory but is hallowed by some tradition which is sacredly great.

Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES was worthy, both personally and officially, the fine traditions and spirit of that great section whence he came.

Physically he was of well-nigh perfect proportion and build. His features were of finest line, his bearing was one of gracious dignity and unostentatious knightliness. His gentlemanliness came from the heart out. It was inbred; it was of the warp and woof of his spirit.

Intellectually I think we may justly say, measuring our words as we say it, that he was profound. He had a very thoroughly disciplined mind, and a very active and nimble one. He discerned in a flash what many others were compelled to toil and grope for. He was a broad-based lawyer. I mean by this that he understood the philosophy of the law, comprehended its purposes, appreciated its deepness.

Quite naturally, possessing the mental traits he did, he understood history. I do not mean simply that he knew history; I mean that he understood it. He comprehended its philosophy, too. He caught the significance of events as applied to human life and destiny. Thus, Mr. Speaker, he was prepared to be and was a great lawmaker. Understanding life, knowing human nature, having information of the past which was accurate, and being able to analyze with quick and usually unfailing accuracy the significance of great activities, he was prepared for great work, and he rendered it.

It is no part of my purpose to review here to-day the history of our acquisition of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico.

It is fair to say that the former came to us unexpectedly to 99 per cent of our population. Their coming marked an epoch in the life of our Republic.

Whatever views gentlemen may entertain as to the ethics, the policy, the wisdom of our taking them, all will join in the assertion that it was epochal.

It brought new and unknown problems for our solution. The gravity of our responsibility was appreciated nowhere more than in the House of Representatives of the United States, which prepared to meet it.

There was accordingly created a committee to deal with these grave and intricate things—the Committee on Insular Affairs.

I think it is safe to assert that no stronger legislative committee was ever created than that first Committee on Insular Affairs. Of course, all the big men in the House could not be placed on it; there were too many, but all who were placed on it were big, intellectually and morally.

Mr. JONES was made the ranking minority member of this great and then overwhelmingly important committee. From that time forth the solution of problems affecting the Philippines and Porto Rico became his great official life work. Other duties he met, of course, but the insular themes were his first and constant study.

He had very pronounced convictions as to both the theoretical and practical phases of these problems. I was not a Member of this Congress during the early years when these questions were being dealt with, and of course my knowledge of what occurred is only historical, but from what I then learned by reading the current news and comment and from what I later learned of the character and force of Mr. JONES by personal contact with him, I can readily understand that although in the minority upon the committee, his force must have even then been greatly felt, and I dare say modified in a measure, at least, the general policy pursued by the Congress.

In later years, when his party came into power, he became chairman of this committee. His death, by the way, removed from the committee the last of the Democrats who were appointed upon it at the time of its organization. I am not sure, but I think our colleagues, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, who was its first chairman, and the former Speaker of this House, Mr. CANNON, are the only Members of the House now who originally were upon that distinguished committee.

When Mr. JONES became chairman he immediately set himself to the task of trying to write his ideals into the law. He had no easy task, as I have good occasion to know, because I had the honor of being intimately associated with his activities and know the difficulties that confronted him, both in Congress and out.

He did not, indeed, succeed in accomplishing the full measure of his purposes and desires, but he was able—having in this the cooperation of almost all—to greatly increase the quantum of power to be exercised by the people of Porto Rico, and to liberalize the government of the Philippines to a point that was scarcely supposed possible by many a decade ago. The Philippine bill likewise carried in it a declaration of purpose on the part of Congress which gives assurance of ultimate absolute independence.

This latter thing was the great hope of Mr. JONES from the time I first became officially associated with him upon the committee in the Fifty-ninth Congress. If he could have but seen the full consummation of his great dream of Philippine independence I think he would have died supremely and superbly happy.

I need not dwell here upon the feeling which exists toward Mr. JONES in the Philippine Islands, because I am sure all know that his is the best-loved name of all the Americans who have had to do with Philippine affairs.

He justly deserves these honors. He was from the beginning struggling for these ideals. In this, I think, he represented the real, deep thought and feeling of America. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this thought has been nearly always reflected, but it has not been always possible of accomplishment in the measure that Mr. JONES was able to give.

Just here I think it quite proper to say that the first chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs—and that was before my first service in Congress—was Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, as I said a few moments ago. I happen to know historically of a very great fight for a very great principle made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I happen to know—or, at least I think I know, and I think when the history of the Philippine Islands is written—by Filipinos or by Americans—that those writing it should know and say that it was largely due to the forceful energy of the gentleman from Wisconsin that there was put into the original organic Philippine act the recognition of the principle of representative government in the Philippines; that is to say, the election of an assembly. The gentleman from Wisconsin did great work along the line of self-government even in those days.

The gentleman from Virginia followed under different conditions and in different days. He wrought well and wisely. He was grounded in the principles of liberty. He was grounded in the spirit of democracy.

I think I shall not refer to any of the personal phases of our relations. He was a man of intense convictions—I do not know whether it would be proper to say prejudice or not. It has always been a difficult thing for me to distinguish at times between convictions and prejudices. He was a very aggressive man. When he felt, in committee or elsewhere, that he was being obstructed for trifling purposes, or for any purpose that was not sincere and in good faith, it was very terrible to have to deal with him.

He was a most lovable man in his private life, as I know, because I had opportunity of being associated with him. He was a man of tender sentiment, graceful in person, gracious in his temperament and demeanor, a chivalrous, splendid, knightly gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a melancholy pleasure to pay tribute to the memory of a man who was both wise and good. In the course of my service of 22 years in this House I have met no man who in my opinion measured more fully up to that high standard than our lamented friend.

Soon after coming to Congress I was thrown into more or less intimate relations with that chivalrous Virginian gentleman, WILLIAM A. JONES, and as that intimacy grew so did my love and respect for him. He was tall enough to see beyond the confines of a congressional district, or even over the boundary of a State. In his desire for justice he compassed the universe. He stood for justice and humanity everywhere and fought for the rights of Asiatics just as earnestly and courageously as for those of his own fellow Americans.

The greatest work done by our distinguished friend during his long legislative service was of a purely American nature, although primarily in behalf of aliens. His public service was a reaffirmation, by vote and speech, of the rights of man as set out in the Declaration of Independence. His character and mind were illustrated in his noble efforts to help a foreign people on whom an outside power had imposed an unwelcome government. That it is a beneficent government, and in the main wisely administered, does not alter the fact that it is unwelcome. I recall no instance in all history where alien government has been acceptable to any people. No people of spirit have ever cheerfully consented to it, and the Filipinos, who were the special wards of Mr. JONES, have repeatedly shown that they do not lack spirit.

Mr. JONES did not believe in the government of the conqueror. He was too thoroughly American for that, and held firmly to the fundamental American faith that Governments derive all just powers from the consent of the governed. He was not dazzled by the glamour of colonial empire, nor drawn into a compromise with conscience by the possibility of profitable trade.

An honest thinker, the thought never came to him that a political act which would be wrong when done by a German or Austrian could be right when done by an American, and even less so when associated with the possibility of profit. He had no patience with the cant and hypocrisy that plead for democracy and self-government on one continent and deny it on another. He could not be persuaded that principles are lost in crossing the seas, or less insistent in Asia than in Europe and America.

He was the commanding figure among many leaders in the fight for justice for the Philippines from the time those islands passed to the control of the United States. Although occasionally defeated, he was encouraged and sustained by the thought that right must ultimately prevail. His devotion to their cause earned him the gratitude and love of 10,000,000 people, and his memory will be forever linked with the blessings of liberty and independence which they are destined to enjoy.

He was a member of the Anti-Imperialist League, an association of gentlemen who for 20 years have given freely of their time and means to see that American principles of government shall be applied to the Philippines. That organization, more, perhaps, than any individual, in or out of Congress, knew and appreciated the work that Representative JONES did for the establishment of the political rights of the Filipinos. It relied on him, and he never failed to meet its expectations.

Mr. Speaker, it may be said to the credit of the American Congress that, with all but a relatively few Members, the occupation of the archipelago has always been regarded as a temporary measure. In the minds of most Members, including many who have for this or that reason voted against the grant of independence to the Filipinos, there has persisted the thought and purpose to concede it to them at some convenient season. In some instances these votes were, I believe, in response to party exigency and political platforms and not a true reflection of the views of Members. It is one of the evils of party government—which system, let me say in passing, I believe in—that such things do occasionally happen.

Of course, strange as it may seem, there have always been some of our fellow citizens who believed that we should keep the islands for commercial exploitation, but I will not reflect on my countrymen by believing there have ever been more than a negligible number. It is the basest form of kaiserism.

I was here when Dewey won his victory at Manila, and like most of my countrymen I began to make the acquaintance of the Philippine Islands, which until then had been a mere geographical expression. Instantly and instinctively I saw what might happen and what, in fact, did happen later, if we should assume political control of that far-away territory, and my fight against it began at once. So did that of my friend WILLIAM A. JONES. As he and I saw it so did many others, some of whom occupied high official positions. It was frankly said by such men that the association would be unfair to the people whom the fortunes of war had made politically dependent on us for the time being and would in the end mean disaster for the United States.

The inconsistency with the political principles of the Declaration of Independence and with our declared policy as to the American continents was pointed out and the whole policy of expansion by military conquest protested against.

These were the circumstances that compelled, and the people who organized the Anti-Imperialist League. The loyalty of that association to true Americanism commands the respect of all thoughtful and patriotic people.

In these days political writers and speakers are expressing an old thought in a new phrase. "Self-determination," which President Wilson pleads for so eloquently, and to which our associates in the great war are pledged, is only the American idea of government by the consent of the governed. More than 140 years ago we declared any other form of government to be unjust, and it can not be made just, even when imposed by our own Republic. Our ancestors made themselves immortal by that declaration, even as Rizal, Quezon, Osmena, and other great Filipinos are marked for immortality for doing precisely the same thing.

Mr. JONES rejoiced in the prosperity and comparative freedom that came to the Filipinos under American direction. He pored over the statistics of their growing trade and was pleased that a large share of it is with the United States. But he rejoiced more that the ease and comfort that came to the Filipinos did not seduce them from the thought of independence. I believe that if they had ever shown any lessening of loyalty to that principle it would have broken his great heart. For the nearly 20 years that they have been bound to us by the treaty signed in Paris he labored in their interest and in harmony with sound Americanism to break the tie. In that cause he never slept at his post, never ceased from his labors.

In 1912 he and I, on his suggestion, visited the governor of New Jersey, then become the presidential candidate of our party, to invite his attention to the repeated declarations in Democratic national platforms in favor of the complete independence of the Philippine people. The progress since made in the direction of conceding to them the right of self-government, which we claim for ourselves may, in some measure, be due to the earnest argument made on that occasion by Representative JONES.

From the beginning of the war we have all hoped for an early victory over the hosts of autocracy and evil headed by the German Emperor and that civilization would be rescued from its great peril and the council of peace assembled. The President has said that the small nations shall live and shall have their own governments based on the will of the people to be governed and that they shall determine its form. It is a noble thought, nobly expressed, but has its embarrassments. How will we meet the jeers and scorn of the despoilers of Poland, Serbia, Rumania, Bohemia, and Belgium, if our own hands are not clean, if we still maintain unwelcome government in the Philippines? Surely, sir, our own house must be set in order before we can undertake to direct the affairs of Europe. Such, I feel sure, was the wish and thought of Mr. JONES.

He died happy in the knowledge that his work had been practically finished, that the Congress of the United States had solemnly declared in the act approved August 20, 1916, that the complete independence of the Philippine Islands should be formally recognized "as soon as a stable government can be established therein."

He was profoundly gratified that the Philippine government had become stable and that the Filipinos were demonstrating their fitness for independence.

Now, in the great world crisis they did even more to merit this recognition. They prepared and tendered an army of 25,000 men to serve with the United States and their allies in the war for democracy and "self-determination" in Europe. Shall we be faithless to the character of our own country and outrage the memory of the great Virginian whose memory we are honoring to-day by refusing to give him the greatest memorial possible, by refusing to link his name forever with the history of a free, independent, and grateful people? Shall we not be just to the Filipinos?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, for printing in the RECORD, as a part of my speech, resolutions of respect to the memory of WILLIAM A. JONES adopted by the Anti-Imperialist League, and an estimate of his character and services by Mr. Erving Winslow, of Boston, the secretary of that organization.

MEMORIAL OF THE HON. WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES.

(By Erving Winslow.)

WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, whose public service in the Congress of the United States was unprecedently monumental in quality as in duration, will be honored there by his colleagues for what it contributed to the national welfare, as Virginia has testified to his devotion to that of his State, and as those who regarded him as his wards "in loco parentis," the Filipino people, have in every possible way manifested their gratitude for his great share in causing the door to be opened for them presently to enter into an independent life.

It may be permitted to add a humble but most sincere testimony to Mr. Jones's memory for his noble world service, such as few men of our own or of any time have rendered to mankind. In the good fight which he fought he gave us encouragement to believe that his hands were stayed up by our loyal support, such as the warrior lawgiver of old received from his followers when his were made steady, like our hero's, until the going down of the sun.

To Mr. JONES is due a conspicuous part in the establishment by statute of the United States of a great principle which has acquired such momentum that both sides in the great war claim it as their own—one in sincerity and the other with the hypocrisy which is the tribute paid to right by wrong.

The right of "self-determination" to be a free and independent nation was conceded by many great men of both the Democratic and Republican Parties as one to be granted within a measurable period of time, even at the moment when sovereignty was obtained over the Philippines by the treaty with Spain. A declaration to this effect was in fact only defeated in the Senate by the casting vote of the Vice President. Mr. JONES supported the original position of the Democratic Party, and joined in those assurances given to the Filipinos through their friends and the party platforms and our declarations that with watchful waiting their cause was being kept alive. He took an active part in the preparation of the bill H. R. 79, which was introduced in the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress by Senator WILLIAMS, then a Member of the House, while the Filipinos were still fighting for their liberty, promising it to them after a few years' probation if they would lay down their arms. No action was taken upon it by the committee to which it was referred.

From April 11, 1899, when the transfer of sovereignty from Spain to the United States took place, to July 1, 1902, the distracted Filipinos were subjected to three distinct forms of government, differing materially from each other. On the latter date what was fitted to be, as it was declared to be, only a temporary measure of civil administration was put in force and limped along with much dissatisfaction in the United States and the archipelago.

Before the first inauguration of President Wilson Mr. JONES, in his devotion to the cause of Philippine independence, had prepared and submitted to him the draft of an "organic act," which obtained Mr. Wilson's approval, establishing a system of self-government, with such conditions as would lead up, in his opinion, to a status that might deserve and receive the grant of independence—such as had been the platform of the Democratic Party in three preceding national conventions succeeding its attitude upon the question taken when the treaty with Spain was pending. The bill H. R. 22143, Sixty-second Congress, that Mr. JONES offered, was reported from the Insular Committee, of which he was chairman, April 26, 1912. The bill fixed the date for this grant as eight years from its passage; but it was never acted upon, because immediate concerns of Philippine administration of a critical nature, relating to the Friars' lands, took precedence of opportunity given in the House to the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs. Not until August 26, 1914, could Mr. JONES introduce as an "organic act" his bill H. R. 18459, which, while containing a statement in its preamble that the United States "purposes to withdraw its sovereignty from the Philippine Islands," did not fix a date therefor. Mr. JONES said in his report accompanying the bill:

"It has not been deemed wise to attempt to fix the precise time for establishing Philippine independence, inasmuch as conditions may be of a nature to render possible such separation even sooner than could be properly fixed in an act of legislation. The theory upon which the proposed measure has been framed is that the Filipino people possess the capacity for self-government and are entitled to enjoy it. It is believed that with the opportunity for conclusive demonstration of their ability in this direction the date of complete independence will not be long deferred."

Though, under conditions of enfeebled health, Mr. JONES, in charge of the bill, supported by the eloquent and earnest champion of his people, Commissioner Quezon, made a brave and successful contest for his "creation," which was passed October 14, with a few amendments, and sent to the Senate, where, however, it failed of adoption.

With characteristic perseverance and enthusiasm, Mr. JONES presented substantially the same bill as H. R. 1 on the opening day of the Sixty-fourth Congress, December 6, 1915, which was referred to the Insular Committee. In similar form, a bill (S. 381) was passed in the Senate, sent to the House of Representatives, and referred to its Insular Committee also, with the startling amendment, that had been offered and engineered by Senator CLARKE, which established the "transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control of the Philippine Islands, to be completed and become absolute not less than two years nor more than four years from the date of the approval of this act." Senator CLARKE's characteristic audacity had swept away the Senate's opposition, and, though Mr. JONES with his political acumen must have recognized the fact that in practical details the enactment would require much reshaping, his single-hearted devotion to the cause and loyalty to the administration which had approved it led him to cause S. 381 to be substituted in his committee for his own bill H. R. 1, and to be reported favorably. It was fated to defeat in the "House of its friends." Once more the high-hearted and gallant JONES faced the situation and moved the substitution of his "organic act," H. R. 1, with its strong preamble as follows:

"Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

"Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

"Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence:" etc.

This act was passed by the House May 1, 1916, and sent to conference. It was reported to the Senate August 14 and passed August 16, reported to the House August 15, passed August 18, and approved by the President August 29.

It is believed that Mr. JONES first suggested to the President the name of Governor General Harrison, whose appointment was so fortuitous, and which has led to a well-controlled development of Filipino self-governing capacity beyond all expectations.

It is most gratifying to know that he who was the best possible judge of this success, as preliminary to the goal—Philippine independence—though his own share therein sought no public expression, felt a grateful consciousness of it. In a letter he wrote a few weeks before his death to a friend, he said:

"From what I have been able to learn of conditions in the Philippines, never before have their inhabitants been blessed with an equal amount of happiness, contentment, and prosperity to that which they are now enjoying. This, I am assured, even by those who doubted the wisdom of the passage of the organic law under which the Filipinos are now living, is chiefly due to the enactment of that legislation, and never before have the Filipinos manifested a like amount of good-will for the people of the United States. The state of general contentment which exists throughout the islands, and the many manifestations of loyalty on the part of their inhabitants to the American Government, is not due, as has been asserted in certain quarters, to the alleged fact that they have lost their desire for complete independence. On the contrary, I believe it is true that the increased measure of autonomy which they now enjoy has but stimulated their desire for complete autonomy and absolute independence."

At one time when Gov. Gen. Harrison had expressed some doubts whether his health would permit his longer retention of his post (fortunately since dispelled) only one name was mentioned among the Filipinos and their friends for the succession—him who thus might actually share, as the representative of the United States, in the coronation of his work. A once contemplated visit to the Philippine Islands was hailed there with enthusiastic anticipation as the opportunity for a national welcome by a grateful nation.

From the long campaign, implying a close touch and much correspondence with Mr. JONES, it is difficult to discriminate between the admirable characteristics exhibited by our great and good friend. Perhaps that modesty and courtesy which welcomed his followers and admirers to a cooperative place in his counsels were most impressive to them.

He was firm in principle, but accessible to compromise or concession in detail; fiery in zeal, but capable of patient restraint; quite independent, but dutifully so within the circle of party and official loyalty; brilliant in repartee, but with a thrust so fair that its keenness left no festering wound! The Anti-Imperialist League, cohort of the legion which followed the eagles of "the noblest Roman of them all," has expressed thus its sense of their loss—the loss of two nations:

"Resolved, That the Anti-Imperialist League, in mourning the death of WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, which evoked such deep feeling among its members, is anticipating the response which will come from the grateful people of the Philippine Islands when they hear that their patient and zealous advocate is no more.

"During the latter part of his veteran service in Congress he gave himself without stint to the cause of the Filipino people, especially to that which he believed to be of the first importance, preparation for their independence, believing it to be the fulfillment of the duty owed to them as well as to the United States.

"As chairman of the Insular Committee of the Sixty-fifth Congress he was enabled at last to obtain acceptance of his own 'organic act' (the Jones bill) for the self-government of the Philippines, which, though in feeble health, he supported against embittered opposition with wonderful tact, discretion, and courtesy such as won him the respect of his adversaries, the admiration of the league, and the passionate devotion of the Filipino people, who kindled bonfires on every hill, held meetings to applaud him, and gave his name to public places.

"Not only did this act establish a well-considered system of self-government and make a reality of what was once a catch-word, 'the Philippines for the Filipinos,' but it contained a promise that in due time the United States would grant autonomy to the archipelago.

"Mr. JONES lived to see his work tested thoroughly, to see abuses corrected, extravagance checked, and executive, legal, and legislative offices working well and in entire harmony with the supreme representative of the United States, Governor General Harrison, but he felt that his great reward would come when the end should crown his splendid service, hoping for 'his people,' as his last letter said, that everything would 'serve to hasten the hour when they should be granted complete independence.' To that end we, his associates and followers, as his best memorial, pledge our renewed devotion."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered together to-day to pay those tributes to the memory of a departed friend which are prompted by the affectionate regard in which he was held in this body. In length of service in the House of Representatives, Mr. JONES was exceeded by only one Member from his native State, in the entire history of that Commonwealth, and paralleled by but few in the entire country. He was first elected in 1890, and at the time of his death was rounding out a notable career of continuous service.

WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES was born in Warsaw, Va., in 1849. As a boy he served for a time in the Confederate army, principally in the defense of Richmond. At the conclusion of hostilities, he resumed the studies which the war had interrupted, and graduated in the department of law at the University of Virginia in the year 1870.

That same year he began the practice of his chosen profession in his native town. His success was rapid and uninterrupted, and graduated in the department of law at the University early turned to politics, and took an active part in the heated controversies, both local and national, which marked that period. In 1890 he was first elected to Congress, and from that time forward he was successively chosen from his district to represent it in this body.

There are several things to be noted in connection with this long and unusual service. In the first place it very clearly shows that Mr. JONES represented a homogeneous people, holding a steady attitude toward public questions, and free from those violent fluctuations of sentiment which so often defeat a representative, at the very time that he is attaining a position to be of the highest service to his constituents. Again this fact of long and continuous service, indicates that the representative was in some degree an unusual man, and by reason of conspicuous merit was able to maintain his hold upon his people. Even a constituency in the highest degree stable and conservative in its attitude would not retain in its service for so protracted a period a man who did not establish in their judgment his supremacy over his compeers and competitors. Mr. JONES, particularly in the early period of his career as the Member from the first district of Virginia, had some hard-fought political battles, in which the issue was in doubt. But as time progressed, he so established himself in the confidence and affection of the voters of that portion of the State that both nominations and elections became a mere matter of form. Our friend possessed a clear intellect, a cool and well-poised judgment, high ideals, rugged integrity, a natural aptitude for debate, and unusual capacity for hard and grinding work. It was inevitable that a man possessing these qualifications would succeed, first at the bar, and then in this deliberative body, where he served so long, and with such distinction.

The district which he represented comprises the bulk of those counties in which the first settlements were made in Virginia. These counties were the birthplace of a number of the most distinguished men that Virginia has contributed to the councils of that Commonwealth, and of the Nation. Washington, Madison, Monroe, Lee, and many other great men, hailed from that portion of our State. The present population of the district are in large measure descended from the first settlers, with but little admixture of other stocks. Nourished upon the traditions of their great forbears, living somewhat away from the established lines of travel in Virginia, they have preserved to a large extent the old outlook upon fundamental national questions, a profound reverence for the Constitution, and an indisposition to accept in haste new doctrines, destructive of the old, and in many cases with nothing to be said in their behalf, save the insistent demand that they should be accepted merely because they were new. Cherishing this attitude himself, Mr. JONES was the ideal Representative for such a constituency. I would not for a moment be understood as suggesting that either he, or his people, were narrow, provincial, backward, and unprogressive. Far from it. He kept abreast with the movements of modern thought, accepting after full consideration that which upon the whole seemed to represent progress, but firmly rejecting the chaff that was presented to him in the name of progress.

By virtue of his membership on the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. JONES was naturally brought into intimate contact with the problems of life, and government in Porto Rico, and the Philippines. He was the firm friend at all time of the people of those islands, and believed that they were capable of self-government, and home rule, in the present, not at some indefinite time in the future.

He took an active part in the construction of the last Philippine act, an act that may almost be called a constitution for the islands. While the act fell far short of his conception of a proper measure of home rule for the islanders, it represented a great step forward, and if he had lived, it would have given him the keenest delight to read the last report made by Governor Harrison, upon the progress that the Filipino people have made in the direction of substantial self-government, a government in which efficient native administrators have largely replaced foreigners, and have evidenced the very highest capacity to administer civil government in all of its details. Knowledge of this success on the part of his Filipino friends would have delighted his heart, justifying as it has done, his confidence that if given the opportunity, the people of those islands would show themselves capable of self-government, and entitled to be relieved from a condition of foreign tutelage.

As a debater in this body until ill health overtook him, Mr. JONES shrank from no encounter. He possessed in an unusual degree the power of lucid and perspicuous speech, though at times he rather overelaborated his subject by too great attention to detail. He was held in high esteem by all of his colleagues who recognized the purity of his ideals, and the clarity of his intellect. During the latter years of his membership in this body he was not a frequent participant in its debates. The steady progress of the disease which finally overcame him, while it did not seem in any wise to affect the vigor of his intellect, indisposed him to physical exertion. His last extended appearance on the floor was in connection with the Philippine bill, a measure that was very dear to his heart. His contributions to the debates upon that measure, both to the general debate, and under the five-minute rule, showed that he had lost nothing of his informing capacity when dealing with a measure which he had made the subject of study. Throughout the entire progress of the bill, he showed himself a master at all times of the whole subject matter, both in the large view, and in the minuter details which are so often inadequately apprehended by the committee reporting a bill, and insufficiently presented.

Mr. JONES was one of the most indefatigable members of this body in looking after the interests of his constituents, whether those interests took the form of legislation, or of some detail requiring attention at the departments.

It was this indefatigable industry in all matters large and small, his rugged integrity, his power of lucid speech, his devotion to the interests of his constituents, his high ideals, and his upright life, that explain his remarkable hold upon his constituents. No district, it may be said without offense to any one, or implied criticism of any one, ever had a more faithful representative, or one serving them with an eye more single to their interests. He was a valued friend, and I mourn his loss, feeling that Virginia, and in particular the district which he represented so long, and so ably, are the poorer by his death.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. DE VEYRA] is recognized.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. SPEAKER, I must not elude my duty to participate in the memorial services of to-day. Being a Filipino and one of the representatives of a nation for whose welfare Congressman JONES dedicated his best efforts, I would be uneasy, I would be recalcitrant to my official duties, if I should desist from joining this affectionate tribute given him by his comrades. This is because Filipinos owe WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES a gratitude great and sincere; we are his debtors forever.

It was Commissioner Quezon, my predecessor in office and a coworker of Congressman JONES in the same enterprise, who said that, after that of Rizal, our national hero, JONES's death is the greatest loss that has befallen the Filipino people. Mr. Quezon had a happy thought when he uttered that great truth—a great truth echoing the beatings of every Filipino heart.

The names of Rizal and JONES will, indeed, go down in history intertwined. They signify the moral union of two peoples, the American and the Filipino. The altruism of one and the gratitude of the other make them brothers.

Rizal and JONES are two symbolisms. Rizal dispelled our sleep of centuries and awakened the conscience of the masses. JONES enthroned our rights, making us conscious of a juridical existence with a promise of a grander national future cheering us on and on. The one was a hope, the other a reality. Rizal was the flower containing the pollen in which JONES had become the fruit. Rizal launched the campaigns for our social rehabilitation and laid the bases of our nationalism. JONES espoused the seasoned effects of those campaigns and revealed to the American people a national unit desirous of enjoying the full rights and attributes of an independent existence. The Filipino patriot was the key of gold which unlocked the destinies of a people; the American patriot was the clarion which blazoned forth America's official recognition of their national aspirations. Rizal fell a victim to Spanish muskets, singing:

> I die just when I see the dawn break,
> Through the gloom of night, to herald the day.

JONES was summoned by death hardly having witnessed the operations of the law he indited; but he, like Rizal, died on the eve of the great readjustments which surely must transpire when the greatest treaty in history shall have been concluded. Thus, together, Rizal and JONES—their epochal labors—may be said to constitute the foundation stones of the future Filipino nation.

One of the best eulogies of Congressman JONES delivered in the Philippines was that of Senator Rafael Palma, the present secretary of the interior, in the joint session of the two houses of our legislature. In summarizing the general impression produced by the death of the noble Virginian, Mr. Palma said:

> On the 16th of April of this year [1918], the faint accent of the cable transmitted from one end to the other of this archipelago the news that Representative JONES of Virginia was seriously ill. This message of sorrow produced in all parts of the islands a sensation of anguish, and the soul of the whole country felt the profound alarm that something was being lost which was a part of it, something which was to it intimate and familiar. When after a few days later the cables flashed the sadder news of his demise, a general consternation overran the Filipino homes, drowning their inhabitants in profound mourning and meditation. * * * The Filipino people, after experiencing the first moments of stupor and pain, arose like a single soul to give a vigorous expression to its sincere condolence for the bitter loss, and in the messages which came from the remotest confines of our municipalities, from our political, civic, and social organizations, as well as in the memorial services rendered for the departed, the language of man exhausted the vocabulary of pain, that vocabulary that can not, and can never, inclose the multifarious sentiments of the human heart.

Nothing would be lost—rather, it would be proper to repeat here the expressions of grief, of love, and of gratitude of the Filipino people on the death of their benefactor. But it is not easy to comprehend their feelings, impossible to accurately portray them here. This is because the Filipinos have come to regard Congressman JONES not only with fondness but also with an affection that approximates idolatry.

JONES's colleagues in this House and his friends have spoken and will ever speak of his legislative works and of the distinctive phases of his attractive personality. Certainly he possessed a noble spirit, an admirable self-denial, an absolute unselfishness; he had a devotion to duty that was characteristically American; he was persistent and resolute in his battles for lofty ideals; he was a good friend, a loyal companion, an affectionate father; in short, the irreproachable model of a citizen.

The Filipinos have much to say concerning him which, though identical with what Americans say, may have a different significance, because it comes from the lips of another race possessed of different customs.

Note, nevertheless, that although we are different from you in various respects, there exist fundamental elements which make possible mutual understanding between us. We are Christians; we are the only Christian nation in the Orient. Our Christianization is not of one, two, or three generations merely. It dates far back into the sixteenth century. It began even before the discovery of the Mississippi, before the foundation of the thirteen colonies, and long before the arrival of the Mayflower in the waters of New England. For three centuries occidental civilization had been transfiguring our national structure. Thus it was that America, much to her surprise, found in the Philippines a people fairly well occidentalized.

From across the Pacific, therefore, Filipinos and Americans can, figuratively speaking, shake hands. We understand you well. Our sense of gratitude is the same as yours. And we are well known for our gratefulness. "In this country," said a Spanish governor general, referring to the Philippines, "there blooms as if by spontaneous growth the flower of gratitude."

Permit me to illustrate my point by an emotional incident. On April 8, 1918, my wife and I learned, with great alarm, that the night before Congressman JONES had been suddenly attacked with paralysis. We hurried to the hospital to visit him. It was not a case of mere courtesy, but of an affection almost filial. The patient was in bed unconscious. Mrs. Jones and Mrs. de Veyra had already met each other in Manila and had seen each other here many times before. When they saw each other then they embraced and bitterly wept together, the tears of the American lady mingling with those of the Filipino in common grief. That incident conveys a meaning which no eloquence can adequately explain. It is an incident which is entirely private and whose mention in this august Hall might be inappropriate, but is justifiable in order to show with what regard Congressman JONES is held by the country.

We like him as a father. The immense good which he had done for our country has evoked in us this sentiment. It was with a paternal spirit that he dealt with my predecessor. JONES and Quezon had helped one another for full six years promoting a common cause. When Commissioner Quezon left for the Philippines, to be the bearer of the new enactment, the two men parted in tears.

We like JONES, indeed, as a father. He was always willing to help us in our difficulties and his counsels we always sought. More than this, it was he who gave our country political recognition. It was he to whom we are indebted for the modernization of our institutions. He was the author of our new organic law, bearing the promise of this Republic that the Philippines will in time be made absolutely free. He is to us, therefore, what King John and the framers of the Magna Charta are to Englishmen. He is to us what Jefferson and the signers of the immortal Declaration of Independence are to Americans.

If I may justify this parallelism, permit me to recall the situation of the Philippines before August 29, 1916, the date when President Wilson affixed his signature to the Jones law. What were we then? An almost voiceless people, with a peculiar system of laws, neither a colony nor a territory—a thing undefined in terms of colonial history.

Imagine a people which Spain had educated for three hundred and fifty years, but whose national ideals had been repressed. It was a nation which believed in the doctrines of democracy and was impatiently desirous of seeing itself completely independent. It had no mother, and it did not wish to have a stepmother. In the transmutation of its social and political institutions it studied the conditions of your Commonwealth, the most democratic Commonwealth of the world. Far from silencing our aspirations, the study convinced us that those aspirations were legitimate, and they accordingly flamed anew. The youthful nation felt in its veins the awakening of a new life, was the more encouraged, and became more impatiently eager to direct its own destinies.

For a time, however, it seemed as if fate had wafted us forevermore under the domination of this Republic. Influences counter to altruism and ambitions which defile democratic traditions had won the day in this country. The Philippines was placed first under a military régime, and then under a provisional civil government from the year 1902.

The man whose memory we honor to-day was then already a Member of the House. As a member of a party which had championed the best traditions of America, he sympathized from the very beginning with national aspirations of the Filipinos; and although, with his party, he was defeated in Congress on the question of what should be the status of the Philippine Islands, he did not abandon the enterprise, pinning his hopes upon better times.

The opportunity soon came with the victory of his party in 1912. The Democratic Party, as already indicated, has always cherished the national tradition of not embarking in an enterprise which carries with it the domination of an alien race. In the presidential campaigns of 1900, 1904, 1908, and 1912 it had consistently maintained the same policy concerning the Philippines, with minor alterations as to form.

Hence it was that stupendous forces had to array themselves in order to bring about the ratification of the treaty of Paris. And even in the discussion of the organic act of 1902, the claim of the Democratic Party that the desires of the Filipino people be respected was vigorously asserted.

Congressman JONES was not unmindful of these antecedents when in 1912 he presented his first bill giving autonomy to the Philippines. Being a man of conviction and of courage, and, more than this, a man of lofty ideals, he felt that the opportunity he awaited had come, and he renewed with vigor the campaign for the restoration of the political rights of the Filipinos. Four years later he was triumphant.

It was through Congressman JONES, therefore, that the Democratic Party fulfilled a promise that was proclaimed repeatedly during four consecutive presidential campaigns. It was through him that America translated into concrete letters an item of her genuine democracy—the nondomination of another people against their consent.

America should appreciate the generous endeavors of this illustrious son! The Democratic Party should revere him as one of their brilliant satellites! Both America and the Democratic Party owe him a debt of gratitude for having thus staged in colonial history the pageant of a lustrous altruism!

In the hearts of the Filipinos the memory of WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES will ever be dearly cherished. Long will we pay tribute to that magnanimous man. While it can not be said of him that for the Filipinos he is "First in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," indisputably he is the American most dear to our hearts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, WILLIAM A. JONES, of Virginia, was my friend, and for him I entertained a high regard and sincere friendship, commencing with my coming to Congress in the winter of 1910. I first met him in November, 1909, at Butler, Mo., where he attended the funeral services of his close personal friend, the gifted DAVID A. DE ARMOND, whose tragic death brought sorrow to so many. I was first attracted to Mr. JONES by the known close friendship that existed between him and DE ARMOND, who for nearly 20 years represented here with marked ability the sixth congressional district of Missouri, beginning their terms together in 1890, their relations were as close as brothers. The fact that I was the successor and friend of Mr. DE ARMOND brought me more quickly into a personal relation with WILLIAM A. JONES, whose friendship and courtesy I deeply appreciated. For two years I was a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which he was the able chairman for a number of years. During that service he was the author of constructive legislation for the Philippine Islands and for Porto Rico, meeting the hopes of those peoples and the best judgment of our own country. With singular ability he met the task assigned to him, and for the work done he will long be held in grateful remembrance in the affections of both the Filipinos and the Porto Ricans who yearned for a happy settlement of their troublous conditions. I hope the laws enacted by Congress through the guidance of this distinguished Virginian will help to bring lasting peace and prosperity to these countries now so closely allied to us.

It was my fortune a few years ago, with two other Members of Congress—Judge TOWNER, of Iowa, and Judge HARDY, of Texas—to go on a delightful trip by boat down the Potomac into his district as his guest. He showed us many places of interest, among them, Stratford, the historic home of the Lees, in Westmoreland County, Va. It was at Stratford that Robert E. Lee and Light Horse Harry Lee were born and reared. A wonderful brick mansion of ancient structure nearly 300 years old still graces this home. He took us also to the place where George Washington was born, and where a beautiful shaft is erected as a monument to his memory, upon the spot where once stood his colonial home, his birthplace, now long since destroyed by fire. This shaft was erected through the efforts of Mr. JONES. In this same county, he showed us where Monroe, of historic fame, one of the Presidents, had lived. A ragged old oak tree stands there as a modest sentinel near where the house once stood in which Monroe lived, but now long since gone. No monument there to mark the home of him who gave name to the famous Monroe Doctrine, only an old field, uncultivated and uncared for, now owned, I was told, by an old negro man, a relic of the days of slavery, when master and slave lived in harmony together. The recollection of this trip will always be a pleasure to me.

Long service in Congress, his faithful discharge of duty, his marked ability, and his success as a legislator, and particularly as chairman of the committee which he honored, made him the fit and worthy Representative of a great and historic Virginia district, which continued to send him here for a long period of years, serving at his death his fourteenth term in Congress. What a tribute to a great public servant, so long honored by his district, whose confidence he deservedly retained, faithful to the end. The high office was to him a position of trust, worthily bestowed and honorably held. He died in the harness of official life and the memory of his charming life and the splendid record left by him will not only be a sweet heritage to those who loved him but will be his monument, worthily erected by his own services well rendered by this distinguished Virginian and strong American citizen. He lived a good life. He traveled safely along the paths of a well-ordered career. From the mysteries of life he has gone into the shadows of the great beyond, and if a well-spent life and honorable career can open the gates of eternal life to a true soul, WILLIAM A. JONES is now already safe in the enjoyment of an assured reward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. YANGCO].

Mr. YANGCO. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly grateful to the House for the privilege extended to me of saying a few words on this occasion. I have anxiously desired to pay in this Hall a formal tribute of affection and respect to Congressman WILLIAM A. JONES, of Virginia, not only that I may echo the voice of my country, but also that I may express my proper sentiments.

I met Mr. JONES on one of my visits to this country four years ago. The personality of the Congressman was simply arresting, and the impression he left in me on that first meeting I shall never forget. His mode of speech, measured, firm, and emphatic, was such as to send a thrill of admiration in one's being. That gentle and piercing glance, lucid eyes, spoke of a grandeur of soul within the man. They concealed firm resolve and devotion to a just cause.

I have seen Mr. JONES many times thereafter. As if by a magnetic force I found myself being drawn to him, and I have liked him more and more. He was one of those few individuals whose influence, once felt, is difficult to elude.

As chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. JONES was well known in the Philippines. His repeated attempts to secure for the Philippines a more liberal form of government, one that was to be consonant with the rapid advancement of the archipelago, were hailed there with delight; and the people have looked upon him as the leader of their cause in this body.

The early part of the year 1916 was a period of intense labor for Congressman JONES. He had just secured the favorable report of the committee on his bill with regard to the Philippine Islands, and the Senate Committee on the Philippine Islands was disposed to take the same favorable action. That was the same bill which to-day is the new organic act of the Philippines. It did not embody all that Mr. JONES had desired to be embodied in its provisions, nor was it a complete response of America to the righteous claims of Philippine nationalism, but it was the only kind of more liberal legislation for the Philippines which bore the promise of sanction in both Houses of Congress. As Senator ROBINSON has said in one of his recent speeches, the opposition to that bill, as well as to the Clarke amendment, "was organized and powerful, and the contest was one of the fiercest he had observed in Congress during 15 years' service." Mr. JONES worked for the passage of the bill with the energy, the firmness, and the fortitude of an apostle. He was even branded as a traitor to the Republic, but his adamantine courage faltered not. He was convinced of the justice of the cause he championed, and he labored on and on. Who knows but that his exertions then were the immediate cause of a physical collapse which soon thereafter ensued.

But the bill of his endeavors passed both Houses of Congress, and he heard from across the ocean the jubilant acclaim of a grateful people.

The month of September, 1916, ushered a new era in the history of the Philippines. It was then that the Jones law operated in full force. The government of the Philippines was reorganized. Many changes were introduced. Among these were the creation of the Philippine Senate, elected by direct popular vote. In every department of government the natives were given a participation greater than ever before. For the first time they became real participants in the guidance of their own affairs. It was the boon of the Jones law, and the name of the Congressman was on every lip from one end of the archipelago to the other.

The Jones law was not a premature piece of legislation. The Filipinos have more than measured up to the expectation of its author. The machinery it created is to-day functioning smoothly. The people have become more contented. Knowing that America's promise of complete independence will some day be redeemed, they have concentrated their energies on the task of making the progress of the land most substantial. We are to-day advancing by leaps and bounds. We will set a record in colonial history.

A little incident is not out of place in this connection. I remember that when the Jones bill was being discussed in Congress there was a prominent American attorney in the Philippines who hurried to these shores in order to aid in the general campaign against the passage of the bill. He went back disappointed. Shortly before Mr. JONES's death the same attorney appeared at his office and congratulated him for the splendid results which the new form of government has brought about in the Philippines. "But, my friend," inquired the Congressman, "were you not here two years ago to oppose with your influence and power the passage of my bill?" "It is true," replied the attorney, "but you were right and I was wrong."

Hardly, however, had the new order of things been inaugurated when our benefactor and friend passed into the Great Beyond. His death is a national loss to my country. His name will ever be chiseled in the tablets of our memory. We love him, because he made possible for us the dawn of a grander day; because he opened the vista of a cheerful national future. The greater Philippines that is hoped to be coming, when the realignments of the world's dominions shall have been completed, will be the most fitting monument to his name and deeds.

Mr. Speaker, I find no words forceful enough with which to express the grief of my people for the death of Congressman JONES. Never in the annals of our land have we, as a people, felt so bitterly the death of an alien friend. It seems as if something has been wrenched away from our national being—something torn away from the very fibers of our hearts.

From most of the provinces and municipalities of the Philippines resolutions of condolence have come in numbers; many municipalities have already taken steps to perpetuate his name in stone, if not in marble. Manila, the capital of the archipelago, will name after him the largest and most costly bridge that spans the Pasig River. The Philippine Legislature has appropriated funds for the erection of a mausoleum over his tomb in Warsaw, Va., his home town, and a monument in Manila. All these, gentlemen, are but the pallid signs of the gratitude of my people to the man. In our heart of hearts we miss him and mourn his loss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA].

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, less than two years have elapsed since that memorable occasion, of singular historical significance for the people of Porto Rico, when a venerable and manly voice rose in this Chamber, filling it with the intonation that comes only from true greatness and farsighted statesmanship, to urge, I dare say, to demand for the last time, as it had repeatedly demanded before, that a new charter of liberties, involving reforms of a fundamental character, be granted to that island of the West Indies which destiny brought within the folds of the American flag as a result of the Spanish-American War. The voice was that of the late Hon. WILLIAM ATKINSON JONES, of Virginia; the occasion was the final debate in this House on the organic act now in force in Porto Rico. It is, therefore, but fitting that I, as the representative of the people for whose betterment and progress he did so much from his office as a Member of this Congress and from his post of honor as chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, in this solemn moment, when the daily labors of this body have been suspended and his former colleagues congregate to do honor to his memory and to mourn his loss, should unite my voice to theirs in formal and heartfelt recognition of his noble and successful efforts in behalf of my countrymen.

Representative JONES took the first step in the path of our liberty, supplying the basic draft for a new law, which although it does not contain all the justice that Porto Rico demands, it, nevertheless, represents considerable progress in the recognition by Congress of our political rights. Other statesmen will come after him to continue the work he started, applying thereto broad views and, as in his case, a great spirit of justice; but to him should go the credit for having initiated this worthy task.

It was my good fortune and privilege to have met and admired Mr. JONES during the later days of his life, some months before his death deprived this body of his able counsel and services, and I found it a source of great satisfaction to me that my personal contact and association with him, although regrettably short, should have enabled me to confirm the esteem and admiration that I had previously conceived for him at a distance, from Porto Rico, where his altruistic utterances had already resounded. It is not for me, however, to recount his many virtues and the brilliancy of his record as a Member of this august assembly; others have done that more ably and eloquently than I can.

But I would be derelict in my duty were I not on this solemn occasion to record the fact that the demise of this venerable statesman caused profound grief among the people of Porto Rico, who loved and honored him in life as they will continue to love and honor his memory, and who look upon his disappearance as a great loss, not only to the present, but also to the future generations of the island—to the present one, because it knows that it has lost a friend who was ready at any time to place the formidable power of his energy and prestige on the side of those who struggle for immediate and wider concessions to the native islanders along the line of self-government; and to the future ones, because, if his enthusiastic espousal of the reform measure, which is now a law, is to be taken as an index of the attitude he would have adopted with reference to the determination of the final political status of the island as regards her relations to the central Government of the United States, we feel warranted in the belief that, had he lived and statehood for Porto Rico as a solution of this problem should be concluded impracticable, as it is believed by prominent leaders here, he would have supported with equal enthusiasm and vigor the establishment in Porto Rico of an independent republic, politically removed from this great country, but bound forever to it by indissoluble ties of friendship, gratitude, and interest. And I am sure that he would not have proposed any measure of definite character with regard to our status without a previous consultation of the people of Porto Rico in accordance with the right of self-determination.

No posts in the legislative system of the American Government are so vital to the people living in our island possessions as are those of chairmen of the committees of the House and Senate dealing with our insular affairs. Upon the views of the men who occupy these two positions the hopes and aspirations of the island people depend to a degree that can hardly be realized by those Americans who live within the confines of the continental United States.

At no time since Gen. Miles and his army of deliverance landed on their shores 20 years ago has the status of the Porto Rican people been clearly defined. The Philippines coming into the American system under similar conditions and practically with the same aspirations has had its future definitely mapped out, due largely to the untiring and statesmanlike labors of him whose memory we have met to honor to-day; and the status of Porto Rico alone has remained unsettled, although he did much toward establishing a definite policy and system of government for that island.

It is not too much to say, Mr. Speaker, that during the tenure of his office as chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs more was accomplished in this direction than in all of the preceding years of the American occupation. That fact was fully recognized by our people and for that reason the reorganic act which bears his name will keep his memory alive in Porto Rico for generations yet to come. I have recently referred upon this floor to the anomalies of our status, and this is not the occassion to more than refer to the subject. But I am glad of the opportunity to say that from the Stygian darkness that surrounded the Porto Rican situation for nearly 20 years Congressman JONES did much to lead his country to the light. And for the beginning that we were able to make, by reason of his assistance, along the road which leads to complete sovereignty we will always feel profoundly grateful.

That gratitude was manifested in an official way by the Legislature of Porto Rico, speaking for the people as a whole. I was requested by cable to express their deep sympathy to the family in their bereavement. And when I accompanied the casket back to the Old Dominion to lay him at rest in the soil that has received back so many illustrious sons whose labors in this life have been spent in the unceasing struggle for human freedom, I went not only as a member of the funeral committee of this House, but as the official representative of a million and a half Porto Ricans who mourned his death as sincerely as did the people of Virginia.

I am glad to have heard the name of my country from the lips of the chairman of the committee on Insular Affairs, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the Representative from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], and the Representative from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON]. I thank them for their recollections. I feared that the name of my country was to be entirely ignored and that no mention was going to be made of the efforts of Mr. JONES in favor of Porto Rico. I do not say that as a complaint. I recognize that the work of Mr. JONES in his labors for the independence of the Philippine Islands was more conspicuous than the work done in favor of Porto Rico, and it is natural that the speakers should have given special attention to the principal achievements of our lost friend. I want, however, to remind you of the fact that there is an island in the Caribbean Sea belonging to the United States, which wants to be fully known to this country, and which expects to receive in the near future entire justice at the hands of the people of the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in offering a word of respect to the memory of Mr. JONES, I can not pretend to speak with the intimate knowledge of his character and career possessed by others who have preceded me. Before I came to Congress my acquaintance with him was but casual. My home in Virginia was remote from his own, and there was but slight intercourse between his constituency and mine. But his ancestors on one side had gone from my section of the State, and his kinspeople were among my personal friends and neighbors.

It was for this reason that I felt an interest in his career, and that when I came here I sought with him, as opportunity offered, relations of respect and good will. While, by reason of his failing health, our intercourse was limited, I came close enough to his life and work to conceive great respect for his character and ability.

He was no ordinary man. In the mutations of public life no ordinary man can stay in Congress 27 consecutive years. In a popular government it is inevitable, and it is right that the people should differ respecting public measures, and the Representative who to-day is in the high tide of public favor may to-morrow find his opinions have ceased to reflect the constituent will and be compelled to yield place to another; likewise, should no public measure intervene conflicting personal ambitions not infrequently arise to work a change in representation. But notwithstanding these causes for change, ever operative in Virginia as elsewhere, Mr. JONES succeeded in retaining the undiminished confidence and support of a high-class constituency for nearly 30 years. With one exception, no man in Virginia has come to this body for so long a consecutive period; and of the ten thousand, living and dead, who, since the beginning of the Government, have attended here, but few, indeed, have enjoyed such unbroken public favor.

Such a record speaks for itself; and without high qualities of head and of heart no man could hold it.

It would be interesting to speculate upon the causes of success in a public career so long sustained. Men differ, perhaps, less in intellectual endowment than they do in industry and force of will. Were I called upon to analyze Mr. JONES's personal equipment for the public service, without detracting from his mental ability, I would say his will power and capacity for labor were his distinguishing characteristics. Who of those called to witness his last days could question the will and the industry that, despite disease and infirmity, held him to the ceaseless grind of our routine work here and enabled him to meet daily the exacting demands of public duty? What an inspiration to others was the spectacle of his leaning form and enfeebled step as he slowly wended his weary way in and out among us nearly to the end! Rarely has there been such a triumph of mind over the weaknesses of the flesh.

Strong will and persevering endurance were certainly marked traits in his character. But in this world of balanced compensations we are frequently called to pay a penalty even for our virtues, and these traits may at times have betrayed him into a too persistent maintenance of his own opinions. There were some, perhaps, urgent upon their own views, who thought him obstinate, and his leadership was sometimes embarrassed by what they deemed his unwillingness to compromise conflicting opinions. That he was a man of warm feeling and positive convictions was undoubtedly true, and that he was emphatic and, occasionally, combative in their assertion is likewise true. He had that kind of courage, none too common in public place, to stand up and be counted even in a minority of one.

After all it is not so easy to draw the line between personal conviction and public duty—between the respect a man owes himself and the regard that is due to the opinions of others. The Representative who has no convictions of his own we should not expect to long defend any cause. The thoughtful student of our institutions would, perhaps, say that there was less of courage than intelligence in public life, and that public assemblies were more in need of backbone than of brains. Whatever else he was, Mr. JONES was not a timeserver nor a courtier; the band wagon had no attractions for him; he never crooked the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift might follow fawning.

He was not an old man, as men reckon time, but he had lived to see many changes in the history of his country. He was born under the institution of slavery, in a slave Commonwealth, and when there were 4,000,000 slaves in his native land; he lived to strive to give freedom and independence to 10,000,000 dependents in the far-away isles of the Pacific. As a cadet youth he bore arms for the Southern Confederacy; he died a lawgiver of the restored Union. He saw the end of an era—one civilization pass away and another civilization rise to take its place. He saw the domestic institutions of his people—their whole social and economic fabric—perish in the shock of war; comfort, ease, and wealth destroyed in the twinkle of an eye, and poverty, toil, and want come in their stead. He underwent the rule of the stranger and the freedman—a combination of avarice and ignorance which well nigh extinguished the hopes of his people; but he lived to see the survival of the fittest at last, and to take a man's part in the restoration of his country.

Surely a life crowded with such scenes and activities as these was neither uneventful nor unimportant.

Mr. Speaker, I was among those designated in the past year to attend the funeral obsequies of our deceased colleague. It was a melancholy privilege, yet I doubt if any who were of that company will ever forget the occasion and the journey to his last resting place. The contrast between the dust and toil of this crowded Capital in times of war and that remote Virginia hamlet could not have been greater had we been transported to another world. In fact, we were in another world, yet fragrant with the breath of the past and surrounded on all sides by monuments of a bygone age.

There on the tidewater between the Rappahannock and the Potomac beat the heart of the Old Dominion in the days before the Revolution; hard by were the birthplaces of many of the fathers of the American Republic; and here and there towering above the silent landscape like lone sentinels of the past stood "Stratford" and "Mount Airy" and "Sabine Hall"—the venerable mansions of the Lees, the Taylors, and the Carters. The gracious hospitality of the people bespoke the old civilization. Returning spring had brought back the green grass and the sweet flowers of nature; the whole scene was that of tranquillity, and the very atmosphere was restful.

There upon his native heath, amid the scenes of his childhood, among his kindred and his friends, we laid our distinguished colleague to rest.

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the people of the first congressional district of Virginia desire that on this occasion I testify anew to the love and esteem which they bore the Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES. He was their Representative in this Hall for many years. He was my friend. Yet I know that I can not tell how completely his people loved and trusted him.

Mr. JONES was unostentatious. He was unaffected. He loved the truth for itself. To him the language of fulsome flattery would have been repelling. Given his choice now, he would select the language of unfeigned affection, and, as best I may, I shall try to set for my remarks here the limitations he would most prefer.

Memorial exercises must carry a note of sadness. Yet when a Member dies it is fitting that his fellows see that he is not forgotten. It is well that they pause long enough to strew flowers upon his tomb, and to wreathe immortelles for his memory. The death angel ever hovers near. During the past 12 months death has been busy in this Hall. His shafts have been flying fast. For many the last roll call has sounded. Fortunate is the man whose life has been crowded to the full with labors well done and worth the doing. Fortunate is the world when one's life has been crowned with achievements which have added to the sum of human happiness. Such a life we contemplate now. So lived and died WILLIAM A. JONES.

We turn to-day to Mr. JONES in last farewell, to tell the story of his life, to pay a just, though humble, tribute to his memory, and to say to him, in the language of love, "Dead but not forgotten." Other tongues used to the language of eulogy will tell how faithfully he worked and how full of wisdom were his words of counsel. Be it my part to say, "His people loved him." As the years passed, there came the abiding assurance that while he might be here, then to the extent that he could control justice would be done and right would prevail. With calm confidence in his judgment, industry, and truth, they were content. When the sad intelligence flashed forth that their old-time friend and counselor was gone, their heads were bowed as one. They lamented sorely him upon whom they had learned so completely to rely, for with them the question as to any matter had ceased to be, "What will Mr. JONES do?" but it was, "What is the right of the cause?" for well they knew that as Divine Providence gave him the light to see the right, so the right would be done.

For nearly 28 years Mr. JONES served his people in this Hall. He saw many changes. His colleagues from Virginia have all gone. With him in that first Congress wherein he served were, among others, in this body Charles T. O'Ferrall, William H. F. Lee, and H. St. George Tucker, while in the Senate were the eloquent John W. Daniel and the beloved John S. Barbour. On this floor, not to mention many illustrious names, were Hilary A. Herbert, John H. Bankhead, and old Joe Wheeler, of Alabama; Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia; Jonathan P. Dolliver, of Iowa; Isidor Raynor, of Maryland; Henry C. Lodge, of Massachusetts; Bryan, of Nebraska; De Armond, of Missouri; Bourke Cockran and Sereno Payne, of New York; Joseph W. Bailey and Roger Q. Mills, of Texas; and William L. Wilson, of West Virginia.

The now splendid States of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah were then only Territories.

The times have changed. Others have come to occupy the stage, and new issues confront the world. Great questions have been settled or have become of minor importance. The chasm left wide open by civil strife has slowly closed. While here Mr. JONES saw that valiant son of the South, his former colleague on this floor, old Joe Wheeler, leading the Federal armies to a glorious victory. He lived to see the sons of men who had worn the gray fighting side by side with the sons of men who had worn the blue, and doing and dying for the glory of their reunited country. Soon peace waved her magic wand. Agriculture smiled, and industry made merry music. For a little while the doors of the Temple of Janus were closed, and Mr. JONES knew the heart-cry of his people that they might remain closed forever. But that could not be, and ere he went to sleep, war had again descended on his land.

In his career here, Mr. JONES played a manly part. He was a constructive statesman. To the solution of many perplexing problems he brought a well-trained and an honest mind. He kept ever before him the splendid ideals of his country and her fundamental principles. Nor did he swerve either to the right or to the left in their application. He was a man of strong personality, of courageous convictions, determining for himself the right of every cause and fighting to uphold that right to ultimate defeat or to final victory. For him there could be no compromise where the question was one of right or wrong. On such a question there could be for him neither half way ground nor answer of expediency. Having entered the lists, he fought with massive strength and crushed his adversary beneath an avalanche of important and pertinent facts. He who dared once to weigh him lightly as a foe never made that mistake twice.

Mr. JONES's life was given to service. The youth heard Virginia call, and bared his breast in her defense. The man served his State as prosecuting attorney until his fame spread beyond his county. Then, called to the service of the Nation, he gave the best that was in him. He looked ever to the Constitution of his country and emulated the spirit of its founders.

Time will not suffice to chronicle in detail his distinguished career. By his services for the Filipinos and Porto Ricans he made himself immortal. As their champion he will always be remembered and loved. As the eyes of free America must turn to Virginia and rest lovingly on the birthplace and the burial place of Washington, so the eyes of a different race in a distant sea, through coming years, will turn with increasing love to Warsaw, Va., and pay the tribute of a tear as they rest upon that green grave in a quiet churchyard wherein sleeps their great champion and friend.

In this great service which Mr. JONES rendered there is no mystery. In his district the first apostle of American freedom, Nathaniel Bacon, had closed his mighty labors and found a final resting place. Mr. JONES was born in a county adjoining that wherein the Father of his Country first saw the light of day. Hard by was the birthplace of that great Virginian, Robert E. Lee. Just a little way was the home of Light Horse Harry Lee of immortal fame.

Not far away was the home of James Monroe. The district which he represented was inhabited by a people who gloried in the splendid traditions of a mighty past, and who acknowledged no masters. With them Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Tyler were household words. Each epoch of our country's history had here the echo of heroic deeds. In his district the final struggle for American freedom had been fought and won, and it is not strange that in his periodical visits to his people, as he paused for a little while on the sacred plains of Yorktown, his soul caught the exultant cry of his fathers, and the freedom which they had won for him, his sympathy, his love, his unwavering zeal and his splendid genius made possible for the Filipino. Though strength failed, there was no abatement in his mighty efforts. He fought on until Filipino freedom was assured.

Hear him as the great work of his life reached consummation. When standing on this floor he said:

> Mr. Chairman, permit me to say in conclusion, that fervently believing with that great apostle of human liberty, Thomas Jefferson, "that the people of every country are the only safe guardians of their own rights," my prayer is that the day is not far distant when we shall see arise in the Far East a free and independent Christian nation, to be known throughout the world as the "Republic of the Philippine Islands."

Speaking of the great measure which came from his hands and carried hope and comfort to the Filipinos, Mr. JONES said:

> When the President of the United States affixes his signature to this already too long-delayed measure of justice and right, it will mark an epoch in the history of this Nation as well as in that of the Philippine Islands, for the pages of the annals of the world will be searched in vain for its counterpart. For it not only bestows upon the Philippine people a measure of self-government such as they have never enjoyed under the sovereignty of this or any other nation, but it establishes what to them is dearer than all else—the everlasting covenant of a great and generous people, speaking through their accredited representatives, that they shall in due time enjoy the incomparable blessings of liberty and freedom.

I can not close, Mr. Speaker, without calling attention to the tribute which on August 18, 1916, the able delegate from the Philippine Islands paid Mr. JONES on the floor of this House. It is worth repetition here. Voicing the sentiments of his people, that delegate, turning to Mr. JONES, said:

> Mr. JONES, I have witnessed your untiring work on this bill; I have seen your unselfish devotion to the cause of Philippine independence, honestly believing that it was demanded by God's own law, but also by the best interests of your country and mine. As the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, which is in charge of legislation affecting the Philippines, you have considered it to be your paramount duty to write into law the covenant of your fathers and the spirit of America—freedom for all. By this bill, which is the result of your hard labor—labor you have carried out at the risk of your own life, for you have been working in spite of ill health—you are entitled, in my estimation, to a prominent place in the list of the advocates of human liberty. Surely your name will be written in letters of gold in the history of the Philippine Islands. You have earned not only the eternal gratitude but the love of every individual Filipino. God bless you.

In less than two years from that day the summons had come. The last roll call had been answered.

To-day the eyes of the world rest upon Paris. America stands there as the hope of the future, and President Wilson has been greeted as the personification of freedom. Permit me to say just here that when our late great struggle came on, and liberty-loving, unselfish, glorious America sprang to the front, the work of WILLIAM A. JONES for Filipino freedom sent her forth as the champion of liberty, bearing an untarnished escutcheon and flashing a stainless blade.

In conclusion, let me say of him what he said on a similar occasion of another great Virginian. Standing on this floor, Mr. JONES said of John S. Barbour that which is so true of himself that I now pay to him the tribute which he then paid to another.

> He was a politician of stainless honor, a statesman of spotless personal character, and a patriot who loved his country with all the intensity of a heart that was comprehensive enough to embrace humanity itself. And again, he was, withal, the kindliest, tenderest, and most generous of men.

At this point Mr. BUTLER resumed the chair.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOSHUA F. C. TALBOTT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On motion of Mr. MANN, by unanimous consent,
>
> Ordered, That the order heretofore agreed to, fixing Sunday, February 9, 1919, as a day for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOSHUA C. TALBOTT, late a Representative from the State of Maryland, be set aside, and that Sunday, February 16, 1919, be designated for such addresses.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 583.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOSHUA F. C. TALBOTT, late a Member of this House from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] will take the chair.

Mr. LINTHICUM took the chair.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I presume I knew Comrade TALBOTT as well during my fifteen years of service here as any Member outside of his own State. I knew him as a friend and gentleman of the highest type. I remember a roll call when my so-called dollar-a-day pension bill was pending, when he (being a Confederate soldier) voted "aye." That vote always appealed to me. Another brave Southern soldier, Capt. Lamb of Richmond, Va., who served on the staff of Gen. Robert E. Lee, also voted "aye." Mr. TALBOTT, if he had lived to the end of his term, would have served 24 years in this historic Chamber, longer than any Member who ever represented the State of Maryland. I remember in 1911 there were but 391 Members of Congress and of that number only four were Members 20 years before, or in 1891. They were JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois, SERENO E. PAYNE of New York, General BINGHAM of Pennsylvania and JOHN DALZELL of Pittsburgh. This House of Representatives is a political slaughterhouse, it seems, for new Members. From 1865 to the commencement of the Sixty-fifth Congress, a period of 50 years, 5,447 had served in this uncertain Chamber and of that number only 22 had served for 20 years. To-day of our whole number of 435 Members we have only present here on this floor three Union soldiers, Col. HOLLINGSWORTH of Ohio, Mr. OSBORNE of California, and myself. And there are only two Confederates, Gen. ESTOPINAL of Lousiania and Col. STEDMAN of North Carolina. An old soldier who served in that war on an occasion of this kind in talking of a departed comrade can not fail to be reminiscent. It seems to be natural.

I remember one battle of the Civil War—the battle of Franklin, Tenn.—on the 30th of November, 1864, when there were, all told, about 85,000 men engaged, and there were more generals, more major generals, and lieutenant generals killed in that battle of five hours than in all the great "world's war," where 17,000,000 were engaged. That is a startling statement, but I believe it to be true. This, because modern warfare is mostly at long range. The peculiarities of our Civil War pertain to no other war in all history. It was the only war in all history where the soldiers on the march and around the bivouac fires at night sang patriotic songs of their own composition. That was true both of the North and the South, and the literature of that war is among the best in the English language. In a time like that and amid the intense feeling which prevailed both North and South patriotic inspiration rose above the level plane of prose into the higher altitude of inspired song. Hence it is true that with the exception of Lincoln's Gettysburg oration, that wonderful story by Edward Everett Hale—A Man Without a County—one or two orations by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and one by Henry Ward Beecher, the literature of the war is its lyric poetry. On the southern side it is equally true, with the exception of one or two state papers by Jefferson Davis, some orders to his soldiers by Stonewall Jackson, and Gen. Robert E. Lee's farewell to his army, the literature of the South was its poetry. We had during the Revolutionary War of seven years not a single patriotic song written, during that whole period, and none by soldiers. The same in the Mexican War and the same in the War of 1812; but in our Civil War there were over 50 patriotic soldier songs written in the North and nearly as many in the South. Among the most notable of those songs on the part of the North was Julia Ward Howe's great lyric poem, The Battle Hymn of the Republic. Sheridan's Ride, by Thomas Buchanan Reade, is probably the most powerful dramatic poem of the war.

And the most dramatic lyric of the South was Maryland, My Maryland, written by James R. Randall, of Maryland. I remember an incident in connection with that song. I was made the field officer of the day in east Tennessee upon our arrival under Gen. Burnside, and I was selected that night, as the field officer of the day, to locate the picket line around our army at the bend of the Holstein River, 20 miles south of Knoxville. I was just locating the left of the line along a road that ran by the river, and was about to return to camp, when I heard a fine soprano voice singing:

The despot's heel is on thy shore, Maryland!
His touch is at thy temple door, Maryland!
Avenge the patriotic gore
That flecked the streets of Baltimore,
And be the battle queen of yore,
Oh, Maryland, my Maryland.

I had not heard the voice of a woman in song for over a year. I looked down in the thicket, and there I saw through my field glass a girl at a piano singing, and an officer standing behind her, and I saw, by the turn of his collar, that he was a Confederate officer. Just then one of my pickets fired a shot; then I heard the clang of sabers and the clanking of hoofs, and a band of Confederate scouts rode out into the darkness. I never knew who wrote that song until at Salisbury, N. C., after the war. It was printed on a piece of brown paper, and signed by James R. Randall, of Maryland.

Another song that was sung in the South after the war was written by Father Ryan, of Mobile, who was chaplain of an Alabama regiment, "The Conquered Banner." He wrote that song at Knoxville, Tenn., in a single hour the day after Lee surrendered. All the emotions of his heart, all of human sympathy and human sorrow was expressed in that wonderful song. Here is a couplet from it, that I remember:

Furl that banner, for it's weary;
Round its staff 'tis drooping dreary.
Furl it, fold it, it is best,
For there's not a man to wave it,
And there's no one left to lave it
In the blood which heroes gave it.
Furl it, hide it, let it rest!

One of the most poetic and beautiful songs of the war was written by Marie La Costa, of Virginia, entitled, "Somebody's Darling." It was sung all over the North during the war without its southern origin being known. It seems as if it might be called the universal mother cry of all war-cursed nations.

There was another peculiarity of our war. None of the antebellum poets, except Whittier, wrote a patriotic war song during the whole war. All the patriotic songs were written by men who were obscure before the war. And another peculiarity of our war is that not a single patriotic song has been written of national import in all the 50 years since the war. And here at the close of this great war, a world war for democracy, with the most alluring shibboleth that was ever put before an army, we find not a single poem has been written that will live in history, during this whole war.

As to my departed friend, let me say he did his duty well. His record here, for 23 years, shows him standing as a Member devoted to the best ideals. He had the courage of his convictions. He stood true to his convictions with absolute fidelity during his whole career. I am proud to do honor to his memory. In September, 1867, at Columbus, Miss., a band of splendid southern women, only two years after the war decorated the graves of Union and Confederate soldiers alike. This act, so patriotic, so courageous at that time, inspired one of the grandest poems of the after-war period, written by a gifted Mississippi poet, Francis Miles Finch. I recollect a couplet:

No more shall the war clouds sever,
Nor the winding rivers be red.
They banish our anger forever,
When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and dew
Waiting the judgment day,
Under the lilies the Blue,
Under the roses the Gray.

In that quiet cemetery at Cockeyville, in that old graveyard at the rear of the church, lie the last remains of our departed friend, and his memory will be kept green by those who loved him best. With every coming spring kind hands will strew flowers over his grave, and above the grass under which he sleeps the snowy magnolia will diffuse a sweeter balm, and the wild passion flower, winding its sweet tendrils among the waving grasses, will gather tears beneath the stars and shed them in the sunlight.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, our well-beloved friend J. FRED C. TALBOTT, was a member of what may not be improperly denominated "The Old Guard" of the House of Representatives. Since TALBOTT departed there are only two left—Mr. Speaker CANNON and Gen. SHERWOOD. Long may these two remarkably preserved and able veterans remain as splendid samples of a generation which has passed away. In the last decade TALBOTT's thoughts were almost entirely of men and things of the past. Not only his thoughts but his conversation and his anecdotes concerned them. He talked most interestingly about the distinguished men who were on the boards when he first entered Congress away back in 1879 and in the years immediately following.

According to his way of thinking there were giants in those days. Samuel J. Randall, one of his heroes, was speaker. In the Senate were John T. Morgan, of Alabama, Augustus H. Garland, of Arkansas, Henry M. Teller, of Colorado, Orville H. Platt, of Connecticut, Thomas F. Bayard and Eli Saulsberry, of Delaware, John B. Gordon and Benjamin H. Hill, of Georgia, David Davis and John A. Logan, of Illinois, Joseph E. MacDonald and Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, William B. Allison and Samuel J. Kirkwood, of Iowa, John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, James B. Beck, of Kentucky, Hannibal Hamlin and James G. Blaine, of Maine, William Pinkney White, of Maryland, George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, Thomas W. Ferry and Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan, William Windom, of Minnesota, L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi, Francis M. Cockrell and George G. Vest, of Missouri, John P. Jones, of Nevada, Roscoe Conkling, of New York, Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina, Allen G. Thurman and George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, J. Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania, A. E. Burnside, of Rhode Island, Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee, Richard Coke, of Texas, George F. Edmunds and Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, and Matthew H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin—with others hardly less distinguished.

Some of the more celebrated Members of the House in TALBOTT's first Congress, the Forty-sixth, were James B. Belford of Colorado, Joseph R. Hawley of Connecticut, Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia, Joseph G. Cannon, William M. Springer, Adlai E. Stevenson and William R. Morrison of Illinois, James B. Weaver of Iowa, James A. McKenzie, J. Proctor Knott, John G. Carlisle, J. C. S. Blackburn of Kentucky, Randall L. Gibson of Louisiana, Thomas B. Reed and William P. Frye of Maine, George D. Robinson of Massachusetts, Julius Cæsar Burrows of Michigan, Hernando D. Money and Charles E. Hooker of Mississippi, Richard Parks Bland, A. H. Buckner, and John F. Phillips of Missouri, Samuel Sullivan Cox, Fernando Wood, Levi P. Morton, Warner Miller, Frank Hiscock and Elbridge G. Lapham of New York, Benjamin Butterworth, John A. McMahon, Joseph Warren Keifer, Frank H. Hurd, Thomas Ewing, William McKinley, jr., and James A. Garfield of Ohio, Henry H. Bingham and William D. Kelly of Pennsylvania, Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, Robert Love Taylor, Leonidas C. Houk and Benton McMillan of Tennessee, John H. Reagan, David B. Culberson, and Roger Q. Mills of Texas, John Randolph Tucker, Joseph E. Johnston and Eppa Hunton of Virginia, John E. Kenna of West Virginia, and Edward S. Bragg of Wisconsin.

No wonder our genial friend TALBOTT liked to talk of these men. They were splendid themes for any conversationalist. He was essentially a hero worshipper, and the talents and virtues of his friends lost nothing when he discoursed about them.

He was a very young Confederate soldier and was fond of relating his war experiences, some of which were highly amusing.

Had he remained continuously in the House from his first entrance to his final exit, his service would have been 39 years; but his victories were mingled with defeats, so that he served only 22 years.

The great problem nearest his heart and to which he devoted his energies was a big navy. He thought about it, talked about it, and no doubt he dreamed about it. Now that he is gone from among us, it is pleasant to remember that his last appearance in the House and that, too, with the seal of death upon his face, was to get the conference report creating a big navy adopted. He had ridden his hobby for nearly four decades; his task was done. So, happy in the achievement of a great work, he fell asleep. Assuredly, some battleship should be named the J. FRED C. TALBOTT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the poverty of my language will deny to me both the opportunity and the privilege of adequately expressing the deep sense of appreciation of the high character and the warm personal friendship that I entertained for Mr. TALBOTT. For 12 or 14 years, laboring together on the Naval Committee of the House, we were associated very closely and very tenderly, and during all those years there was nought else for him except the very highest regard and the tenderest feelings.

I regarded him as a man of high character, noble impulses, and lofty aspirations, a man who was intensely devoted to the interests and the welfare and the success of the American Navy. He was proud of the history of the Navy. He had a high esteem for the officers and the men of the Navy, and never at any time did there come to him any thought except the thought of devoting the best efforts, the best aims, and the best purposes of his life, to the upbuilding and the stabilizing of the American Navy. And I can truly say that the Navy, and, beyond the Navy, the country, owes him a deep sense of appreciation for his untiring effort and his unceasing labor for placing the American Navy upon the pedestal of respect and confidence and honor which it enjoys to-day in the public esteem, not alone of the American people, but of all the world.

He was also deeply interested in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. He believed that the Naval Academy was the agency, the instrumentality chosen for the production, for the training, for the development, for the broad and yet deep and fundamental education of the officers of the Navy, who should give the Navy character and who should render it efficient and capable at all times of discharging the duties and meeting the obligations that rested upon it.

There is a little coincidence: Mr. TALBOTT was a Member of Congress in the Forty-seventh, the Forty-eighth, and, I believe, the Forty-ninth Congress. During that time Gen. Washington C. Whitthorne represented in Congress the same congressional district that I have the honor to represent, living in the same town, and Gen. Whitthorne, during the time that the Democrats had control of the Congress, was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; and Mr. TALBOTT served with him as a member of that committee, and he served with me during the years that I have been a member of that committee, both as a member and as chairman. Out of this there grew an interest and a friendship, a sentiment, if I may so speak, that coupled my thoughts back into the history of the Navy when it was very small. Back in those years the appropriations for the Navy, all told, were perhaps less than $20,000,000. Mr. TALBOTT lived in his service to see them grow in the last year to $1,600,000,000 and more in one year. That, of course, was a war period, but he had seen the Navy become the pride of the American people, and he had the satisfaction of knowing that during these years he had contributed materially and substantially to its growth and development and was entitled to a share of the gratitude and appreciation of the American people.

Mr. TALBOTT was a man of a lovable personality. I select my words with care, and I wish to emphasize the expression—a man of a lovable character. There are men who have their strong intellects, who may have great energy, who may have strong points, and yet are repellent in their approach. Mr. TALBOTT possessed a lovable personality in a degree that drew to him a large circle of friends. It was to me a source of pride and gratification that when I attended his funeral and his burial and saw the great concourse of people gathered, it was one constant chorus, one unbroken expression of love and affection that his people manifested and expressed for him. Mr. TALBOTT was possessed not only of a lovable personality, but he possessed a sweet spirit. Often have I heard him speak tender sentiments to manifest the sweet spirit that he possessed toward his fellow Members and toward his acquaintances.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that it is a good thing to be a great man. I want to reverse it. It is a great thing to be a good man. And Mr. TALBOTT, with his lovable personality, with his sweet spirit, with the other traits of his character that endeared him not alone to his associates here, but to all who knew him, was a good man.

He was a man who had a keen sense of humor. He was not what you would call in the ordinary term a humorist; he was not what you would designate as a wit; and yet he had a keen, delicate sense of humor. He did not always look at the somber, serious, disconsolate side of life.

There was in his disposition and in his temperament that sense of humor that gave a sparkle to his life, that gave a zest and a pleasure to be with him where one could see, in his own life and in the association of his fellows, that which carried with it that light of humor and friendship that endears men to each other.

He was a fine judge of human nature. He had the faculty of sizing up men. It seems that some men have that faculty by intuition, to look into and analyze the character and the elements that constitute the composition of human nature. He was a fine judge of human nature as it manifested itself in everyday life. I have already said that he had a strong hold upon his friends. He gripped them to him because his friends saw in him and realized that he was made up of those noble qualities, those essential attributes, that we characterize as the noble attributes of a noble man. And that is why it was that he was, all through these many years, able to keep himself in-gratiated in the love and the affection of his people, to receive their commendation, and to hold himself close to their hearts. He exercised, by virtue of his intellectual and his noble qualities, a great influence in the community in which he lived.

That was one of the things that I heard expressed so often when I attended his funeral and his burial. The plain people, not speaking designedly, not testifying in flattery, but expressing the feeling that was uppermost in their hearts, spoke of the great influence that during all these years he had exercised in the community. And likewise he exercised a great and a lasting influence and made an impression upon the democracy of his State and of his community.

Greatly beloved, highly honored, and much respected, he reached a ripe old age, full of honors and full of love and respect. Like the corn, he ripened for the shock. The end came. I thought, and I have often thought, of that illustration of the apostle: The seed, the flower, and the fruit. We take in our hand the little seed. We can not understand it. It looks simply like an object. We do not know the inherent life that is in it. We may subject it to the microscope, and still we can not see the life in it. You may analyze it, and you can not find the life in it through the chemist. But place it in the ground and let the sunshine and the moisture come on it, and there comes the beautiful growth, full of the flower, radiant and brilliant in beauty, and then the rich, full, luscious fruit. And so it is when we place the bodies of our loved ones "earth to earth, ashes to ashes"; not more mysterious, but along the same lines, the providence of God can bring out the flower and the fruition of an eternal life from the crumbling of the clay in the breaking down of the mortal.

We placed him in the grave in that beautiful country churchyard, where loved ones who had gone before were buried. Alongside of his loved ones we placed him, on the western slope of the hill, toward the sunset, and on that beautiful afternoon the sun was making it all radiant in beauty, and making the western horizon a vast expanse of golden loveliness. The thought came to me that the soughing of the winds amidst the tresses of the trees will be a requiem—a sweet song over the grave of an honest man; and the rays of light, breaking through the foliage of the forest trees, will shine upon the grave of a man whose life was a blessing to his country, and whose work was a benediction to his people. We laid him away in that thought, looking to the higher, the better, the nobler, the grander life that comes to the just and the pure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] is recognized.

Mr. COADY, Mr. Speaker, the first session of the present Congress began on Monday, April 2, 1917, in pursuance of the proclamation of the President.

Since that day, thirteen Members of the House of Representatives have died, and of all these deaths—an unusually large number—none created more real, genuine sorrow among our Members than that of my colleague, the Hon. JOSHUA FREDERICK COCKEY TALBOTT, who represented the second Maryland district in this body for over twenty-three years.

There are only two Members whose first service here antedates Mr. TALBOTT's. They are the gentleman from Illinois, former Speaker CANNON, and the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD; and only three Members who have to their credit more terms than he had.

Mr. TALBOTT had been a Confederate soldier, and his death leaves on this side of the Capitol only two others who followed the Stars and Bars, the gentleman from Louisiana, Gen. ESTOPINAL, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Maj. STEDMAN.

Mr. TALBOTT was born on July 29, 1843, near Lutherville, Md., where he spent the greater part of his life, and in which town he died. Early in his life he was elected State's attorney for his county, and almost continuously thereafter he held public office; and all the public places he held, except one, he was elected to fill by the votes of the people. From the very start of his career he assumed a leadership in politics that was never thereafter successfully challenged, and for a half century he was active in the councils of his party, and for many years he was Maryland's representative on the Democratic national committee, a highly coveted honor.

Mr. TALBOTT had been a member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House for a long time, and ranked next to its chairman. He was a big Navy man—the Navy was his hobby, and he never wavered in his support of all measures for its enlargement. To the work of this committee—work that he loved—he devoted his time and energy. Because of his impaired health he was unable to participate actively in the debates on the various naval appropriation bills, but he was always on the floor when such measures were under consideration, conferring with his colleagues on the committee, and assisting them with his counsel and advice. He was an authority on the Navy and a highly respected one; and he was known and loved by everyone in the service. This love was shown by the presence at his funeral services of three admirals, other naval officers, and a large number of sailors and marines.

In announcing his death to the House I said I had never heard him speak ill of anyone, and I want to repeat that statement. He was kind, affable, and one of the most delightful companions I ever met. It was a real treat to be in his company, and I always enjoyed a chat with him. He was bright, always optimistic, and brimful of interesting reminiscences. He was loved by his friends, and he had an influence in this body that was remarkable.

I consider it a privilege to have served with Mr. TALBOTT. As a Marylander, I am proud of his achievements, and, in common with his other friends, I deeply deplore his death.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it was given to me to know the Hon. J. FRED C. TALBOTT, intimately only during the late years of his life, which will always be a source of regret to me.

Even before I knew him I had learned to respect and admire his many sterling qualities, and to marvel at the place held in the affections of his people.

When we consider that he was first elected to public office nearly a half century ago, or, to be exact, 48 years ago, and that he was the acknowledged leader of his party in his county and district at the time of his death; and that his people manifested their love and esteem for him at all times and places, his hold upon their affections seems to me little short of marvelous.

That section of Maryland where Mr. TALBOTT was a dominant power for so many years is perhaps the richest section of Maryland. The county where he lived is the largest in population and contains more wealth than any other county in the State.

Many strong men from an intellectual and political standpoint came forward in that long period, but none ever contended successfully with him for political supremacy; and most of those who might have made formidable competitors in the field of politics became his friends and personal followers when they learned to know the man and admire his many sterling qualities of heart and mind. "Marse FRED" TALBOTT, as he was known throughout his native State, loved his people and delighted to serve them, and they in turn delighted to honor him, and manifested their affection at every opportunity.

One of the last official acts of his long and active career was to come here from his home near Baltimore to try and be of service to the son of one of his neighbors, and a volume could be written and not hold one-tenth of the acts of kindness and helpfulness performed by this remarkable man during his many years in public life.

He at all times voted his sentiments and convictions, as a public statesman of the school of thought to which he belonged and was proud to represent; and he told me upon one occasion that his people had never criticized a single vote of his on any important question during his long career in the House of Representatives.

During the long deadlock over the naval appropriation bill last summer he remained here in Washington as one of the conferees, taxing his failing strength beyond what a man in his condition could expect to endure, because he believed with his country at war it was his duty to remain and assist in every way in facilitating an early and harmonious agreement with the Senate.

I visited him at his hotel in Atlantic City in August of last year, when he was somewhat improved after the breakdown which followed his work here on the naval bill, and he told me with pardonable pride of his unanimous nomination by his party for reelection, and that it was his ambition to serve one more term in the National Congress. This ambition was denied him, for he died before the election was held.

As Mr. Coady has said, Mr. TALBOT was what is known as a "Big Navy Man." He believed we should have as big and as powerful a Navy as the country's interests demanded, and he worked for that principle in season and out of season, and few of those who heard him will forget the pride in his voice and manner when he took the floor the day before the United States declared war upon the Imperial Government of Germany and said:

> The Navy is ready! We are ready to fight at the drop of a hat, and I am going to maintain that position as long as I represent my people, and I do not believe my people will change me as long as I say that.

I desire to read in part his address upon that memorable occasion, when the Nation he loved was about to be plunged into the black and unfathomable abyss of war, and the branch of the service he loved and had helped to build to its present great strength and power was to be tried in the fire of achievement:

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to address the House on this resolution, because every man, woman, and child in the congressional district that I represent knows as well as they know that they live that I am for my country and for every right that belongs to it on the land or on the sea. [Applause.] I would not make an address at all, except some gentlemen have addressed the House and have indicated that there is a lack of preparation for this emergency. That is not correct. This Nation to-day is prepared to meet any other naval power on the globe except England. Man for man, gun for gun, ship for ship, we can lick the world; and it is not good taste and it is not patriotism to try to convey to the people of this land that we are not prepared when we are. [Applause.] We are a great deal better prepared than the world knows of, and it is good policy that the world should not know all that we are doing and have been doing in the past. This resolution is going to be adopted, and it is a very serious and a very critical time in the history of this Nation. War is all that Gen. Sherman said it was, and he helped to make it so [laughter], and I would tell him so if he were alive.

I had a little something to do with it, not very much, but in my humble way I did, and I do not wish to talk about it. What in the world is this Nation to do? What in the world can we do except fight, and we know how? We have got to fight. Now, do not be uneasy, do not be at all uneasy, about the outcome. It is going to cost some money and it is going to cost some lives. Now, this war is not half as vital as some people think. It is not half as dangerous just now as some people think. We had a hearing in the Committee on Naval Affairs where everybody asked questions, although I did not ask many. Admiral Benson, I think, was on the witness stand. I said to him, "Admiral, if this country was to get into trouble and we had to transport an army to the Philippines or to Hawaii or to some place, and as admiral of the Navy you would be called upon to see that they got there safely, what is the first thing you would do?" He said, "The first thing I would do would be to clear the ocean of the enemy's fleet." Now, that is all in a nutshell. [Laughter and applause.] That is the whole case. Now, before the enemy gets here they must clear the ocean of our fleet. For God's sake, let us have a fleet and have one that they never will clear off the ocean. [Applause.] Now, that is all of it. We need not fear invasion.

We need not fear any power on earth so long as we have a Navy, one that can not be cleared off the sea. It is the duty of our people to see that we have a Navy like that and to maintain it. You know I am the proudest man in this House, and I have the right to be. I introduced in the Forty-seventh Congress the original resolution giving authority to the Naval Affairs Committee to take up the question of the rehabilitation of the Navy of the United States and had it passed, and introduced an amendment that established the gun factories. I am a Navy man, and I believe a Navy is the one safeguard of this Nation [applause], and if you will only have a Navy you can lick the world. [Applause.] Now, I am not going to talk about the resolution. Everybody knows who knows anything about me that I am ready to fight at the drop of a hat. [Applause.] And I am ready for my country to fight at the drop of a hat, and I am going to maintain that position as long as I represent my people, and I do not believe my people will ever change me as long as I say that. [Applause.] Now, some gentlemen may for various reasons vote against this resolution. Some people may say, I have got this kind of a constituency or that kind of a constituency. They are all mistaken. Any man who votes here because he has got a constituency of a certain nationality and votes to please them makes a mistake. [Applause.] I want him to know that the people who he is voting to please came here to get rid of that kind of a government. [Applause.] That is why they are here. They are not here because they love us so much, but they hated where they came from. [Laughter and applause.] I want to tell you one thing. Do not you think for a moment that by so voting you are going to please them. They will not respect you for that vote. [Applause.] And the people that agree with the President of the United States and me will not respect you. [Applause and laughter.] So you are going to be caught, like the nigger's coon trap, agwine and acomin'.

Mr. Speaker, it is good for an American to have known and to have enjoyed the friendship of FRED TALBOTT. Kindly, fearless; a two-handed fighter, yet kindly, filled with homely philosophy and axioms; rich in the history and rue of the past; alert to his duties and to the needs of the present; clear eyed and unafraid as to the future; accommodating and full of good logic and sound and wholesome advice; to know him was to love him and to cherish his suggestions and respect his full judgment.

To have lived, to have been honored by a loyal, patriotic people for so long a period is a great achievement. To have held their love to the end of his long life is testimonial to his strong and lovable character, breadth of mind, and innate goodness of heart.

Happy is he who knows that he will go to his last resting place, when the day comes, with as rich a heritage of love and esteem as was given to FRED TALBOTT by the people who knew and trusted him.

And when the twilight hour drew near,
He stood beside the silent sea;
And in his heart there was no fear
Of all its dread immensity.

He waited there in perfect faith,
And while the fading day grew dim,
The boatman's hail, the voyage of death,
Meant only going home to him.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleagues, Mr. MUDD and Mr. PRICE, both of whom are unavoidably absent to-day, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, be permitted to extend and revise their remarks in the RECORD; also all other Members of the House who may care to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Speaker, no one appreciates more than I do my inability to say anything that would add to the high esteem in which we all hold the memory of the late Hon. J. FRED. C. TALBOTT.

My first recollection of Mr. TALBOTT goes back to the days when he was bitterly opposed in the primaries, when my father was opposed to him on one occasion. There was a paper published in our county (the name of which I have forgotten), and it came to our home. I, then a boy 10 or 12 years of age, had been reading this paper, and had formed a very unfavorable and unfair opinion of him, based upon what that paper contained.

About that time, upon leaving my father's office one day, I met Mr. TALBOTT on his way to Calvert Station in Baltimore, and walked with him about two squares; and from that day until his death we were friends. As a boy I was impressed by his wonderful kindliness, his keen sense of humor, and his friendly treatment of me, the son of his principal opponent.

My relations with Mr. TALBOTT were very intimate. I know that he would have made a brilliant success as a lawyer, and that his sound business judgment would have brought him success in any field of endeavor that he might have chosen. But, as we all know, he chose for his life work to represent his people in this body. He lived through two of the most important periods in the history of the American people. He served as a Confederate soldier when a youth. At the close of the Civil War he returned and took up his work among his own people. Big as his heart was, and as much inclined as he was to stand by his friends as individuals, I know that the real love of Mr. TALBOTT was for his country and for the great party with which he was allied. A goodly share of his love was for his people at home. Mr. TALBOTT loved the people of Maryland. He loved more people than any man I have ever had the pleasure of knowing, and I sincerely believe there were many, many people, great and small, who loved him—and they had abundant reason for so doing.

Upon one occasion we were returning from Manchester, in Carroll County, Md., in an automobile with former Representative Henry of Texas, and Mr. TALBOTT said to Mr. Henry: "Bob, you live a long way from your constituents, and it has some advantages; you are not bothered by them at all; it is too hard for them to reach you. But, while I live within an hour's ride of my constituents, it has its advantages; and one big advantage is that rarely a day goes over my head that I do not have the opportunity of making some poor fellow feel happier." We all know that to be true; and when a man is inspired by such feelings—love of country, love of State, love for his people—an intelligent man, a humane man—one can readily understand why he possessed such great influence in national affairs.

The Baltimore Sun in an editorial published a short time prior to his death paid Mr. TALBOTT the following tribute:

Mr. TALBOTT'S very serious illness will bring not merely passing regret but genuine grief to a larger number of Marylanders than would a similar illness of almost any other man in the State. The second district Congressman has not always been enlightened in his politics, but he has always been unexceptionable in his human sympathy. To the whole of Baltimore County he has been really a friend and neighbor, helpful, thoughtful, kindly. These qualities in him were inherent; they were not the result of calculating political sagacity, and his success in political life was largely due to the fact that there was no sham or pretense about him. His fine humanity won for him the absolute devotion of his constituents and his followers; it won for him the affection and respect of his fellow-Congressmen. Their unfeigned sorrow at this time is a splendid tribute to him.

Mr. TALBOTT had the confidence, esteem, and friendship of President Wilson. During his last illness the President wrote Mr. TALBOTT as follows:

My Dear Mr. TALBOTT: I need not tell you how distressed I have been, along with all your friends, at your illness, but I send you this note of genuine sympathy with the hope that it may cheer you a little to know how anxiously and affectionately your friends are awaiting for your recovery. Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

No reference to Mr. TALBOTT would be complete that did not call attention to his foresight as to the needs of the Nation when, more than 20 years ago, he began the advocacy of and constantly fought for a large and effective Navy. He told me last spring, when he was quite ill, that no matter what anyone said to him he was going to sign the conference report on the naval appropriation bill if it killed him. He did sign it, and I believe the work he did in that committee for his country and for the Navy and for us all, at a time when his health was seriously impaired, unquestionably helped shorten his days. I believe that he felt his work was largely done, and could he have lived to see the present war successfully concluded he would have considered his work finished.

Mr. TALBOTT held the affection and esteem of his constituents through all the years of his public life; he won and retained their loyalty and confidence to the end. No one could have had more sincere friends among the Members of Congress than he. To mention his name to a Member is but to bring forth the most sincere expression of esteem and friendship. He lived a long and useful life in the service of his country, respected, honored, and loved by his constituents and associates.

At this point Mr. COADY took the chair.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, "Hon. JOSHUA FREDERICK COCKEY TALBOTT," as historians will know him; "Uncle Fred," as his friends knew him; "Marse Fred," as he was affectionately called by his colored admirers; and "Just for Congress TALBOTT," as his political friends were wont jokingly to speak of him, has passed to the great beyond.

Born on the 29th of July, 1843, educated in the public schools of his native State, he was truly a product of Maryland in every sense. He reflected it in his daily life, in his intercourse with the people, and in his work in Congress. Ever alert to the welfare of the country, he was particularly animated and interested when the interests of Maryland were concerned. Though a great admirer of the people of all sections of our country, having a broad and comprehensive vision, a man who stood steadfastly for the Union, and a friend of the man in blue, yet he felt that the interests of Maryland and her people were largely wrapped up with the Southland; that her love and friendship were a part of its very fabric and foundation; that the beauty and glory of its history and the mandates of its traditions should be the admiration of all. The well-groomed or the tattered form of the man in gray—the man of the lost cause—needed but to approach Mr. TALBOTT when he became the personification of kindness and hospitality itself. Not alone did he talk for the South, but he fought for her; he was willing to lay down his life for the cause.

In 1864, at the age of 21, he joined the Second Maryland (Confederate) Cavalry, and served to the close of the war. He was so genial, lovable, humorous, and generous that he made friends in every walk of life and in every line of endeavor he traversed. In the Army he was the life of his company and the pal of the boys; as John Williams—his barber in the Capitol barber shop—who was a body guard in the Confederate Army, tells us, when he saw him at Petersburg, Va., "He was here and there and everywhere making fun for the boys, and singing 'Maryland, My Maryland.'" He was a boy among the boys until his very death, and a tower of strength and action among the men who make business and mold history.

If I should be asked what contributed most to Mr. TALBOTT'S success in business and public life, I should say it was his high regard for his word. A promise once made by him was worth more than a bond with a hundred golden seals. He made few congressional speeches, but his word to support a measure carried with it not alone his vote, but his active influence as well. He was a plain man, devoid of hypocrisy and deceit; he did not pretend to be what he was not, nor to favor a measure or proposition when he was opposed to it. He never tried to balance himself on the stilts of neutrality, but rather to adopt that scriptural injunction, "He who is not with me is against me." When he took a position he remained put, and all the king's horses and all the king's men could not move him from it.

I shall always consider it a precious heritage that I was his colleague in Congress for more than seven years. I was with him when the glory of the Democratic victory and control of the House shone upon his countenance as we organized for the extra session in 1911, when Mr. TALBOTT, strong and vigorous, swore in Hon. CHAMP CLARK as Speaker, as he did at each succeeding Congress, being dean of the Democrats. I was with him when he returned from his greatest sadness, the funeral of his wife, Laura Cockey Talbott. She was the playmate of his boyhood, his sweetheart of youth, and his dearest companion and wife for more than 44 years—the pride and glory of his young ambition, the sweet ornament of his mature fame, and the best love of his ripened age. From this time on one could see that, though Mr. TALBOTT was trying to be his former self, there was a gnawing sadness, a lonesomeness beyond repair.

I was with him when the war in Europe broke out, in August, 1914. I can see his grave face and apprehension, but never did he have the least fear that Germany could cope with the American Navy. If he had been a fetish worshiper the American Navy would have been his god.

I was with him when America declared war, in April, 1917, and I beheld in him the old war horse of former days. I can well imagine what he was thinking as he looked back through the corridor of time, some 50 years, to Civil War days. "Oh," thought he, "how I would like to have the strength and vigor of those days when my horse and I swam the Potomac and I fought with Harry Gilmor's men. To-day I should have a chance to fight a real enemy and not my countrymen."

I was with him during the succeeding months of his life while Congress voted billions of dollars and provided the mobilization of millions of men, while he, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, labored day after day with energy and zeal, though his form bent lower each day under the strain and his eyes began to lose their luster of former years.

The great naval bill appropriating more than a billion and a half dollars had been passed by both Houses; it was in conference. Mr. TALBOTT, worked down to weakness itself, often tottering to the Capitol on the arm of a page or sometimes on that of a colleague, refused to leave for a rest until the bill was finally passed. He then took a vacation; but the damage had been wrought. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

The last time I saw him he was surrounded by his friends at a gathering in his district where he was the central figure of 5,000 of his people. I had spoken in his stead, and was to leave the following day for the battle fields of Europe. I took his hand; he clasped mine in both of his, saying, "See all you can, but don't risk unnecessarily, and come back safe; we will all be glad to welcome you home." Thus I left him in the mellow sunset of a well-spent life. Though it was not accorded me to see him again, I shal profit by the years I spent with him as his colleague, his friend, and his great admirer.

He was a friend of truth, of soul sincere;
In action faithful, and in honor clear;
Who broke no promises, served no private ends,
Sought no title, and forsook no friends.

On the 8th day of October, just two days before I reached America again, he was laid to rest in his native county, surrounded by hundreds of his friends, committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, admirals of the Navy, and amid the firing of a salute by sailors of the Navy, and the sounding of taps. Did he know he would soon leave us? I believe he did. One afternoon he came to my office and saw my wife, who was his staunch friend. As he handed her his autographed picture he said: "Here is something I want you to have." This hangs conspicuously in our home to-day.

He had reached that time of life when the souls of the great and small alike beat at the bars of the cage of life in an effort to catch a glimpse of the great beyond, to hear a whisper of those who have gone, to feel the faintest spiritual "touch of a vanished hand," the faint "sound of a voice that is still."

Mr. TALBOTT, a great success as a lawyer, early took up a political career and was a well-known figure at State and national conventions for many years. He was first elected to the Forty-sixth Congress, and, with few interruptions, remained in this body until the time of his death. His great work was upon the Naval Affairs Committee. He saw the vision long before most men beheld it, and stood always for a big Navy. He believed America should be in position to protect herself, and refused to rely upon the protection of another. He preached "big Navy" in season and out, and on several occasions prevented the House by his vote and silent work from cutting down its naval program. I am glad that it was granted him to see the great wisdom of his decision, to realize the appreciation of the people for his work. It can not be adequately estimated just how much his services meant to the Navy, and thereby the safety of the American home and the success of the war. It is a delicate and touching tribute that a destroyer will bear the name Talbott.

A man who can continue as leader for the many years Mr. TALBOTT did and be returned to Congress during 40 years has a testimonial which needs no elaboration. Kipling has expressed the thought most admirably:

Old Ninevah town has nothing to give
For the place where a man's own folks live;
He might have been that, or he may be this,
But they love him or hate him for what he is.

Maryland is proud to have contributed many great men to the American Government and is proud to have added another to the list of her distinguished men. This man of practical ideas, dreamer of great dreams, a man to whom principle was the correct thing in life, a fighter who loved a fight and believed in the justness of his cause, a devoted husband, a loyal friend, and a patriot who was an American through and through.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD by printing the funeral sermon on Mr. TALBOTT delivered by Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kingsolving, St. Paul's Protestant Espiscopal Church, Baltimore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

At this point Mr. BUTLER resumed the chair.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD E. ROBBINS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. CRAGO, by unanimous consent.

Ordered, That Sunday, February 16, 1919, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. EDWARD E. ROBBINS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for their immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 584.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. EDWARD E. ROBBINS, late a Member of this House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the last session of a Congress which will go down in history as probably the most momentous Congress in our Nation's existence, we pause for a few hours to record our estimate and appreciation of the life and public career of one of our number who in the very midst of his public service and days of usefulness answered the summons—lights out; rest; eternal rest.

Col. EDWARD EVERETT ROBBINS, a Representative of the twenty-second district of Pennsylvania in the Sixty-fifth Congress, who had been reelected as a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress, died at Somerset, Pa., Saturday, January 25, 1919.

Owing to the fact that I have enjoyed a personal acquaintance with Col. ROBBINS extending over a period of more than a quarter of a century, I have deemed it proper to embrace in my remarks a short record, giving dates, where possible, of some of the important events of his life.

Col. ROBBINS was born on a farm near Robbins Station, Westmoreland County, Pa., September 27, 1861. His father was Joseph Robbins and his mother Margaret Christy Robbins, whose ancestors had settled there during the early years of the existence of Westmoreland County. He spent his early life on his father's farm, attending the public school. Later he attended the Elders Ridge Academy, the Indiana State Normal School, and Washington and Jefferson College, from which college he graduated in the class of 1881. At the time of his death he was a trustee of this famous institution of learning. After graduation from college he took a course in law in the Columbia Law School, New York, and then entered the law office of John F. Wentling, one of the most prominent members of the Westmoreland County bar. A few years later he was admitted as a member of this bar, where he practiced the profession of law until the time of his death.

POLITICAL CAREER.

Soon after his admission to the bar Mr. ROBBINS began to take an active interest in politics and soon was made the nominee of his party for district attorney. He was a Republican, believing thoroughly in the principles and policies of his party. In 1888 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania State Senate for the regular term of four years, and here he may be said to have begun his political career. After completing his term as senator he resumed the practice of law, but in 1896 he became the nominee of his party for Representative in Congress from what was then the twenty-fifth district, and was elected a Member of the Fifty-fifth Congress. From this time until he was again elected to Congress in 1916, he always took an active part in political affairs, and during the campaigns was often called upon to preside at meetings and make addresses for his party and its candidates. In 1916 he was nominated as the Republican candidate in the twenty-second district, composed of the counties of Westmoreland and Butler, and was elected to that office by a large majority. Soon after taking his seat he began to take an active part in the work of this body. He was constant in his attendance at the sessions of the House and followed closely all the matters under consideration. He was ever alert and active, watching every bill which could in any way affect his district and State. His knowledge of the people and the business interests of his district made it possible for him to render efficient service; and few Members worked longer hours and gave greater thought to their duties than did Col. ROBBINS. He was renominated as his party candidate for the Sixty-sixth Congress without opposition, and at the general election was elected by a largely increased majority.

MILITARY CAREER.

In 1887 Col. ROBBINS enlisted as a private in Company I, Tenth Regiment, National Guard of Pennsylvania. In 1889 he was appointed by Col. A. L. Hawkins, as quartermaster of the regiment, with the rank of first lieutenant; it was while serving in this capacity during the Homestead strike in 1892 that my personal acquaintance with Col. ROBBINS began, and this acquaintance and personal association has continued all these years. In 1894 he was appointed quartermaster of the Second Brigade, with the rank of major, on the staff of Brig. Gen. John A. Wiley. While serving in this capacity he answered the call of the President in 1898, and reported with his brigade at Mount Gretna, Pa.

When the Pennsylvania National Guard was mustered into the service no officer above the rank of colonel was mustered in, and as a result the brigade and division staff officers were not taken into the Federal service.

Gen. Wiley was, however, later commissioned by President McKinley, as a brigadier general of Volunteers, and Col. ROBBINS, then a member of Congress, offered his services and was commissioned as captain, and assigned to duty as quartermaster of the First Brigade, Third Division, First Army Corps, Chickamauga, Ga., on the staff of his old brigade commander, Gen. Wiley. He was promoted to major, and sent to Porto Rico, and later to Cuba, as quartermaster of the U. S. transport Seneca, and served in Porto Rico and Cuba until the end of the war. Soon after being mustered out of the United States service, when the National Guard of Pennsylvania was reorganized, he was appointed quartermaster general of the Pennsylvania Division with the rank of colonel. In this position he served for several years, and then severed his connection with the National Guard and, while always interested in military affairs, he never again took an active part as a member of any military organization.

LEGAL PROFESSION.

Being admitted to the Westmoreland County bar in 1886, while holding public office and positions of trust in business affairs, Col. ROBBINS continued the practice of his profession, and at the time of his death was a member of the law firm of Robbins & Wyatt. That he was held in high esteem both as a man and a lawyer the sentiments expressed by the speakers at a meeting of the Westmoreland Bar Association attest. Judge Copeland said of him:

He lived an active, deedful life, and died while yet the future beckoned to him with the alluring promise of future work and success. He had the good fortune to be born in the country. The distractions of the town and city are there lacking and a boy thus becomes acquainted with himself and becomes sensible of the great mysterious world within himself before the attractions of the outer world make their appeal to him. He practiced law, served in the State senate, served twice in Congress, had experience in military life. He was engaged in the coal business, the banking business, and numerous enterprises, and in all he strenuously sought to excel.

Mr. Albert H. Bell said of him:

That 35 years of rather close association with him, beginning in our student days, had cemented a friendship between us that neither political differences nor the most heated conflicts in professional life had ever weakened. This intimate, early association with Mr. ROBBINS gave an insight into his inner life and character which has rescued me from the error of misjudgment of him and has kept the taper on the altar of our friendship burning with steady light at times when he was assailed by the fiercest storms of his political and professional life.

He had a mind of fine natural endowment. He could perceive quickly, assimilate readily, reason correctly, and reach convictions that he could express with force and vigor. He was a man of tireless industry.

BUSINESS LIFE.

The practice of law by one who gives his whole life to it is not always attended with great financial returns, and thus it is that many practitioners of the law turn their thoughts to some line of business which promises greater financial returns. Living in a section of the country rich in mineral wealth, chiefly bituminous coal, and being associated closely with men engaged in the production of coal, Col. ROBBINS became interested in coal mining and bought much undeveloped coal land. To this work he brought that same energy and perseverance which had brought him success in other lines, and he succeeded in accumulating a sufficient amount of wealth to make it possible for him to live well and maintain a family in every comfort, and this phase of his life made his work in Congress a pleasure, for while he continued some of his business connections, they were so organized that he did not need to give them much personal attention, and he thus could give himself unreservedly to the work of Congress.

He was a Presbyterian in his religious affiliation, being a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Greensburg, Pa.

He was vice president and director of the Safe Deposit & Trust Co., of Greensburg; a member of the Westmoreland Country Club, the Americus Republican, and the Athletic Clubs, of Pittsburgh, and the Elks Club, of Greensburg.

The history of Westmoreland County, Pa., is rich with important events of our development as a Nation. In marking locations and preserving the evidences of this early period the people of the county have taken a great interest. In this work Col. ROBBINS took an active part, and on different occasions he has made historical addresses in dedicating memorials erected to mark the locations where events of world moment happened more than a century and a half ago.

FAMILY LIFE.

Col. ROBBINS had been practicing law for ten years, had served in the State senate of Pennsylvania for four years, and had established at least a State-wide reputation when he was married, in 1896, to Luella Stauffer Moore, of Greensburg, Pa. To this union two sons, Edward E., jr., and William M., were born. Both the sons and Mrs. Robbins survive Col. ROBBINS, and mourn the loss of a father and husband, whose home and family were to him a constant joy, and a place which ever had for him the real meaning of the word "home." His domestic life was ideal, and, after all, when we recall the triumph in business, in politics, in social life, and all the other activities of society, the one place where there is perfect accord, where there is real happiness, where life is really lived, is the happy old-fashioned American home, where free from the struggles, safe from the flings and stings of those with whom we have contended, a man can plan and purpose for those he holds most dear and know that in that charmed circle every heart beats in sympathy with his own, and there he can renew the strength which carries him through life's never-ending struggle.

To-day we mourn the loss of a trusted associate taken away in the full vigor of life, when for him there seemed to be in store many years of useful service. His family can hardly realize that the one to whom they looked for guidance in every crisis is no more. Business men, professional men, strong men in every walk of life mourn his departure and realize that he filled a place, gained by his own indomitable energy and will, which will be difficult to fill. Here in the presence of death all enmity and discord cease, and through the gloom men look out on life with a new realization that no one can know nor foretell the hour when through the twilight and the dark we swiftly pass from this to endless life.

Citizen, soldier, business man, statesman, father, husband, friend, the record is written and well written; and on memory's altar will ever glow a wealth of love and affection for one who through life was loyal to home and country, and measured up to the full stature of man.

How well he fell asleep!
Like some proud river widening toward the sea;
Calmly and grandly, silently and deep,
Life joined eternity.

* * * * * * *

Gone, the light and glory of the day,
Here, the solemn silence of the night,
There, the faith that ever leads the way,
Faith which visions endless light.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we assemble to pay tribute to our colleagues, whose lives were closely linked with the war Congresses, and who recently passed from human mystery to Divine understanding. Each in his way performed his duty, as he believed to be right, each rendered valuable service to the country, each left affectionate recollections in our hearts.

I speak more particularly of my friend and fellow colleague of Pennsylvania, who faithfully and conscientiously represented his district in formulating the laws of our Republic.

He was a student of economic questions, familiar with the polite literature of all ages, a man of acute knowledge of the industries of his State, which he jealously guarded, a learned lawyer of wide experience, a banker of keen perception, a soldier who rendered important military service to the Nation during the Spanish War.

Life, in the abstract, is one chain fettered together by human conception—men die, but their minds live, thus civilization moves onward. There is no limit to the intellectual development of the human mind, the mind is God's will, the mind never dies, thus society progresses through the unbroken chain of the mentality of man.

Men are singled by nature, with positive powers, to evolve new thoughts, new ideas, for the benefit of the world, leaving in their wills a heritage to all mankind. Why one is born to power and another to live in obscurity is a secret that rests with Providence.

EDWARD E. ROBBINS was an indefatigable worker; his mind was being daily repaired by diligent application. He had strong logical powers and exercised them in debate. He studied legislation with attention and deep thought. He had high regard for virtue. His opinions were mastered by lofty ideas. He gave his talents in the interest of the public good, for peace and concord.

Simplicity always prevails in a noble nature. This trait of character governed his policies. He swayed an influence of leadership. Thus recognized, he was called to positions of trust, in the religious, social, political, and business activities of his home town. He had the welfare of the Government at heart, never wavering from his convictions. He was a patriot persuaded by truth and reason.

We are born to die, then live again, immortal, in the kingdom which has no end, a kingdom of glory and of peace. So our colleague passed on to immortality.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, an early training in western Pennsylvania, where he was born, rounded out at the Columbia Law School in New York, equipped our colleague, the late EDWARD EVERETT ROBBINS, to return to his home in Westmoreland County to practice law. The young man had been a member of the bar for the short period of two years, however, before the people sent him to the State senate of Pennsylvania. There is no better stepping stone to the councils of the Nation than that afforded by the State legislature. Well grounded, both in theory and practice, with the experience which one must necessarily acquire in the senate of the second State of the Union, it was logical that the aggressive young lawyer and State senator should advance to the Congress of the United States. This he did upon election from the old twenty-first district, now the twenty-second, in 1896. He was 35 years of age when he reached this body. That was before the Spanish-American War. It so happened along with his other activities that Mr. ROBBINS had taken a deep interest in the affairs of the National Guard of Pennsylvania. He enlisted as a private in the famous Tenth Infantry in 1887, and aided in the upbuilding of that organization, the personnel of which has figured so creditably in the war in Europe, until 1894, when he had attained the rank of major.

We have often heard with patriotic pride of the Muhlenbergs and the Bakers, who having been in Congress when war broke out, departed from these legislative Halls to don the military uniform for active service, and it is a source of gratification to-day that we can point to Members of the present House who yielded up their service here for actual service at the front. It is no less a matter of satisfaction, exemplifying the patriotic alertness of our departed colleague, to know that he is entitled to rank with those who made this noble sacrifice. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, in 1898, he quit the Fifty-fifth Congress to enter the military service as a volunteer. I shall not give in detail the record he then made, except to say that in various capacities, his usefulness and serviceability constantly increasing, he held on to the end of the war, being mustered out as a major. Subsequently, in 1900, the governor of Pennsylvania conferred upon him the rank of colonel and made him quartermaster general of the National Guard of Pennsylvania.

Col. ROBBINS returned to Washington for the Sixty-fifth Congress. He had devoted himself during the interim to his law business, to mining, and banking, and other commercial pursuits, for which he seemed thoroughly well adapted. It was apparent upon his reentering Congress that the intervening years had broadened his mind and increased his power to serve the people.

He was here when a state of war was declared against Germany. His practical experience with respect to Army organization gave to his views upon such war problems as came before the Congress a special significance. To some extent also he specialized upon mining problems, particularly those relating to the fuel supply and the acquisition of minerals needed for war purposes. He was a student of all legal problems. It was his practice to watch bills relating to the judiciary and to methods of procedure in the courts. Probably no Member devoted himself more assiduously to Supreme Court opinions as they affected the interpretation of statutes. It was noticeable that Col. ROBBINS was jealous of the integrity of the law-making power.

Mr. Speaker, in this great body of 435 picked men, coming as they do from every corner of the Nation and representing views sometimes so divergent as to excite our special admiration of the national unity which prevails, it is difficult for one man to advance far ahead of his fellows. It is only by the closest application and the strictest adherence to details and to duty that this can be done. Those who have risen in influence and leadership have not ordinarily done so through mere popularity; nor is ability without application the talisman. Col. ROBBINS evidently knew all this as a result of his earlier experience in the House. It is not clear that he aspired to leadership, but it is known to all his surviving colleagues that he was gradually attaining a position amongst his fellows here that commanded their respect and confidence.

His industry and his attainments counted for much, but his close study of details, the thoroughness with which he went at his work, the regularity of his attendance, the readiness with which he participated in debate, all tended to prove that he was one of the strong men in council, and that the day was not far off when he would be recognized as one of the Nation's leaders.

But, Mr. Speaker, as we have so often observed, it is not for us to question the taking off of those of our colleagues who are called in their prime. In the case of Col. ROBBINS, whom we knew so well and esteemed so much, we may wonder, we may even ask, if there be another who can fill his place. Our hearts may be heavy with the thought that what was builded so high in our hopes for him is so suddenly and so ruthlessly shattered. We may sympathize with the bereaved ones and let out to them the emotions that afflict our souls. This we may do as a duty we owe to the memory of our colleague, to those he loved, and to ourselves. But we can not overcome the inevitable. We must "carry on," even as did our lamented colleague, doing the best we know how, serving faithfully as he did, until "taps" sound for us as they did for him.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, EDWARD EVERETT ROBBINS was born, reared, educated, lived, worked, and passed away in the State of his nativity, Pennsylvania. The hurrying months have come and gone until the circle of two years has been well-nigh completed since first we met here. Meanwhile death has invaded our membership all too frequently, and but recently it has "laid its pallid hand upon the strong man and the strong man has fallen and the flashing eye is dimmed." Whenever a friend or a relative is taken away men are accustomed to pause for a short time from their daily activities, some mourn in silence, some give expression to the sad sighing of their hearts in words of sorrow that fall from their lips, and some there are who for a moment reflect upon the significance of birth, the meaning of life, and the mystery of death. And yet the problem remains unsolved. Whenever a colleague or an associate or one who has attained distinction passes away, there rises a duty which the living owe to the dead. In the discharge of that duty, solemn as it is, we are met here this day. EDWARD EVERETT ROBBINS was my office neighbor. He came from my State. He was my associate upon the floor of this House. He knew many of my acquaintances. We have strolled the streets of this city together at different times. We have exchanged views upon important pending legislation and on varied subjects. He was my friend. I grew to know the man, his methods, his purposes, his opinions, and his work. His education, his wide range of duties in civil life, his military experience, his participation in the halls of legislation of his State and his country gave him a great fund of information of inestimable value in equipping him for the serious work upon which he entered when this Congress convened.

He brought to the investigation of any subject under consideration a trained mind. His arguments were logical, forceful, his statements concise, and his judgments sound, his mental processes were rapid, his industry intense, his integrity was unquestioned, his character above reproach, and that, after all, is the best asset a man can have. He was resolute and firm in his convictions. His reputation was not confined to the boundaries of his own district, it extended far beyond. He was a most potent factor in the deliberations of the House, and a commanding personality therein. His voice, his wisdom, his judgment, and his experience will be greatly missed in the solutions of those perplexing and vexing military, economic, and social problems which have already risen above the horizon of our national life. Some men like so to live that when they have gone they will be held in loving remembrance by those whom they have left behind, some there are who like so to work that when the last dread summons comes they may know that the influence and the results of good deeds wrought here may be projected far into the future. Our colleague has secured both of these. He lived as though he were to die to-morrow, and he worked as though he were to live forever. His labors are finished, his life is ended, the door was open, he had crossed its threshhold; he is absent but not forgotten.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, this day has been set apart to pay tribute to the life and character of EDWARD EVERETT ROBBINS, late Representative from the twenty-second congressional district of Pennsylvania.

My acquaintance with the deceased extended over a period of many years, beginning with our student life in Washington and Jefferson College from which Mr. ROBBINS graduated in the year 1881, and later was selected as a trustee of that institution, and was such at the time of his death. At no time was there a suggestion of a difference in our friendly relations.

Following his graduation from Washington and Jefferson College, he took a special course in the Columbia Law School, of New York City, and was admitted to the bar of Westmoreland County in the year 1886, and shortly thereafter enlisted in the National Guard of Pennsylvania as a private in Company I, Tenth Regiment Infantry, and subsequently was engaged in the Spanish-American War, doing service in Porto Rico and Cuba, and because of special and noteworthy service rendered, was advanced to offices of trust and honor in his command, and gained and maintained the confidence of all who were under his authority. The death of Congressman ROBBINS marks the first among the members of Congress who served in the Spanish-American War.

My association with Mr. ROBBINS following his graduation was at no time close, and for that reason I do not have first-hand knowledge of the many political struggles through which he passed in his native county before his recognition as one of the leaders in the party of his choice in the section of the State where he resided.

He was engaged in every political contest of note in his city and county and always contended earnestly and openly for the candidate of his choice and made all of his fights in the open, and as a result bitterness was engendered at times, but through it all my friend always observed the amenities of life and emerged from every contest with his record for fairness maintained.

My first association with him, after our graduation from college, was at Harrisburg, Pa., at the time of his election as senator by the voters of his native county in the year 1888, and I observed his course with a great deal of interest, as he early evinced an aptitude for legislative work and gave every promise of being further honored by the people whom he served. His ability soon carved a place for him and brought early recognition from his large constituency, who at a later period showered him with yet greater honors.

In the year 1896 he was elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress and at that time showed great familiarity with the tariff legislation of the country and was engaged in many colloquies upon the subject of the tariff with the Hon. John Dalzell, one of the acknowledged leaders in the lower branch of the Congress at that time, and in all of which Mr. ROBBINS lost nothing by comparison.

He left the Fifty-fifth Cogress to aid his country in the Spanish-American War, and, upon being mustered out, resumed the practice of the law in Greensburg, Pa., and achieved high distinction at the bar of his native county, a bar which is admittedly one of the strongest and best in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

His clientage was large, and we find him taking part in many of the leading cases which occupied the attention of the courts of his county and in the appellate courts of the State.

In addition to the arduous duties devolving upon Mr. ROBBINS as a lawyer, and in which profession he was a pronounced success, he was also signally prosperous as a coal operator, banker, and financier, and enjoyed great popularity among the people of his native county, a popularity gained by close application to his duties, fair dealing, and a profound sense of honor.

His private and public life was above reproach, an inheritance which can not be measured in words, and which should and will be highly prized by his immediate family and those acquainted with his appreciation of a high sense of duty and rugged honesty.

His zeal and energy were unbounded, and as a mark of esteem and confidence in his integrity and lofty purposes, he was chosen to succeed himself in the Sixty-sixth Congress by a majority decidedly pleasing and gratifying to him and his many friends. To the work of the next Congress he had planned to devote all of his time and effort, and it is not too much to say that the splendid record already made and the work done by him during the sessions of the present Congress that he would have taken his place among the acknowledged leaders in this branch of the Congress. Unless unavoidably absent Mr. ROBBINS was always found in his seat at every session of the Congress, and gave the closest attention to every bill brought before the House for consideration, and showed a familiarity with the merits or demerits of any proposition which claimed the attention of those of you who have seen long service in this branch of the Congress.

Leaving Washington for the last time he made known his plans to me, and I gained the impression from his conversation that he was free from all physical ailments and that he would return on the following Monday and apply himself even more energetically to his work as a Member of Congress than had marked his career up to that time, a condition almost unthinkable to those who were closely associated with him during the sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

All of his well-conceived plans were frustrated, however, for while awaiting trial of a case in which he was personally interested in the courts of Somerset County, Pa., he was stricken with the then prevailing disease of influenza, and although attended by the most skillful physicians that could be procured, succumbed within one week to the ravages of the dreaded malady, and gave up his life in the midst of brilliant achievements and with every promise of added laurels to the splendid record already made, and gaining even greater honors than those already bestowed upon him.

Our friend passed from us as suddenly as a star falls, so usual and yet so startling,

A flash of the lightning, a break in the wave,
Man passes from life to his rest in the grave.

In his death we are reminded that—

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think,
From the deaths we are shrinking, our fathers would shrink;
To the life we are clinging our fathers would cling,
But it speeds for us all like a bird on the wing.

The Members of the present Congress are familiar with his activities on the floor of the House. He was deeply interested in all public questions. He was at all times alive and alert and intensely active in all legislation affecting the people, and especially the soldiers of any of the wars in which this country was at any time engaged.

He was a hard-working, painstaking legislator; his mind was keen and alert; his perceptive qualities were of a high order; his diction well-nigh perfect; and he was no mean antagonist to the army of ready, forceful debaters who have seen long service in the House. He had a fine command of the English language, and was making rapid strides to a commanding position in the work of the lower branch of Congress. He was a close student of governmental affairs and was a strong consistent opponent to any form of extravagance, and it is but fair to say that he enlisted his splendid qualities in any movement looking to the betterment of the conditions of the people of the country. He was fair, yet outspoken and fearless; courageous to a degree, yet never questioned the motive of his antagonist in any controversy in which he was engaged.

He strongly favored equal service from all citizens and had no patience with those enjoying our rights and our liberties, our schools and institutions in times of peace, with the privilege of protection and the right of gaining a fortune under our form of government, and yet unwilling to share the burdens thrust upon us during the stress of war. Against such conditions he was unalterably opposed, and allowed no opportunity to pass wherein he could denounce a system which would tolerate or countenance such anomaly, as he conceived it. Who will say that he was in error in taking a position so high and patriotic?

He was in great demand as a public speaker throughout the congressional district which he so ably represented, and but a few days before stricken with his last illness was well received in a public address made before the firemen of his home city, when a flag which was presented to them by Mr. ROBBINS was unfurled.

For his charitable acts he will be long remembered—he has left behind him a large circle of friends to mourn his loss.

As one of the committee selected to attend the funeral services of the late Representative ROBBINS in Greensburg, Pa., I desire to note that the large concourse of people present on that occasion was a sure evidence of profound sorrow and realization of a great loss, so that I feel justified in presenting his life as an example of true American manhood and worthy of emulation by all who love patriotism, righteousness, and truth. May he rest with his fathers in the peace he has earned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is not hyperbole of phrase but well deserved that of the many men whom I have known in the past 16 years representing the Keystone State in this House none gave greater promise of distinction than our late colleague, whose memory and work we assemble here to-day to honor.

No death has shocked the House so generally as that of our dear friend ROBBINS. Only a week before he left here for the last time I had yielded time to him in general debate. He left here in apparent good health. No intimation that he was not in the best of health had reached us. Then came the sad new that appalled us all.

ROBBINS in the brief span of one term had won a forward place in the work of the House. This position was of his own creating. His aptitude for and willingness to follow the details of legislation brought him this reward.

As a manifest of the regard in which he was held, I wish to cite a conversation had about 10 weeks before his death with one of the leaders of the House in which I suggested the need of having a strong Committee on Expenditures in the next Congress to investigate the contracts and expenditures of the Government during the war. My friend ROBBINS was suggested as having the ability, the courage, and the willingness to undertake this exacting work. I heartily concurred that he would make an exceptional chairman.

So many men come to Congress and are content in giving attention to the needs of their districts and to vote on measures that are presented from time to time. Not so with ROBBINS. He regarded service on the floor as of the first importance. He was in active attendance no matter how minor the legislation, contributing his best judgment through debate and by amendment to the subject before the House. And the greater surprise is that he worked so faithfully and earnestly though he had a competence that would have inclined the average Member to a life of ease.

His essential strength was in having good business judgment as well as a trained legal mind. Rarely are Members so favorably equipped. His wide experience made him valuable on the floor and in committee during the consideration of the great business problems continually arising.

Fluent in speech, ready in debate, full of valuable knowledge, in one brief term his training and willingness to work brought him distinction in House affairs. With the House under the control of the Republicans in the coming term, he was destined to gain further renown and distinction.

The House and the country can ill spare such a conscientious, earnest, and faithful public servant. I liked him much. He was an honest coworker. I am saddened when I think I shall not see his genial countenance again.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may have the privilege of extending and revising their remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public service of the late Member from Pennsylvania, Mr. ROBBINS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, the House (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, February 17, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 17, 1919.

(Legislative day of Thursday, February 13, 1919.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

JOHN K. SHIELDS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee appeared in his seat to-day.

CONDITIONS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I was not in the Senate Saturday, when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] made some remarks about an article by Mr. George Rothwell Brown in the Washington Post of that date upon evidence of anarchy and treason in this country. Had I been here I would certainly have indorsed what the Senator from Colorado said at that time, and I now indorse all of it. I was very much stirred by the article in question by Mr. Brown, and I wish Congress and the entire country might be stirred about it. It graphically depicts a serious and deplorable condition.

I am deeply impressed by an article on the same subject by Mr. Brown in this morning's Post, and also an article in the same paper by Col. Archibald Hopkins. There can be no doubt that there is a thoroughly organized, widespread, systematic propaganda, backed by ample funds, in this country to overthrow our Government and substitute for it Russian Bolshevism. I believe the people of this country should understand what Russian Bolshevism is. I think they ought to know the conditions in Russia. They should be given wide publicity, so the people of this country may know what it is that some scheming traitors would bring upon this country and substitute for orderly government.

I have two articles of moderate lengths by reliable writers about conditions in Russia. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read them, but I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND DUKE WARNS BOLSHEVISM MUST BE STAMPED OUT.

PARIS, January 20.

"I wish the Americans could realize what an immediate danger not only to Europe but to their own country lies in the present Bolshevism in Russia. There is not a moment to be lost. If it is not stamped out at once inside Russia, in Moscow itself, its headquarters, it will inevitably spread to the other countries and to your country."

The Grand Duke Alexander of Russia spoke with the earnestness of conviction in an exclusive interview given to the World correspondent in his room at the Hotel Ritz.

In the middle forties, 6 feet 2 inches, spare and wiry of build, he is an impressive figure. His handsome and distinguished face, with its high forehead; straight, slender nose; hazel eyes; and brown peaked beard, lacks the high, broad cheekbones frequently characteristic of the Russian. He spoke very simply and sincerely in fluent English.

"First of all, I want you to know that I am not speaking as a grand duke. It would be only natural for people to think that I am talking from a self-interested point of view. But I can only assure you that although I happen to be a grand duke I am not speaking as a grand duke, but merely as a Russian.

"If only the present anarchy which is destroying Russia can be stamped out I do not care what kind of government the Russian people wish to adopt. Let them have a republic by all means if they choose. Personally, I do not believe that Russia is far enough advanced yet to make a republic the most successful form of government for her people, with their 90 per cent peasants, of whom only a tiny fraction can read and write. But if they want a republic, by all means let them have it. But the one imperative thing is to crush this Bolshevism, which is not the political philosophy which it pretends to be, but merely organized pillage and assassination by anarchists and thousands of liberated criminals.

"You know they have now actually socialized the women in many districts—force them to be the common property of the men of the community and plan to have the State raise the fatherless children.

"It would not take an allied army of more than 80,000 men to give us all the support we need to liberate Moscow. These men would not be asked to fight. It is better anyway that none but Russians shall do the fighting necessary to liberate Russia. All the allied army would be used for would be to prove the allied support, and thus encourage the Russians to join our ranks and to advance in the rear of the Russian army of liberation, protect its lines of communication, and police the regained territory.

"Why should the Russian population be more disposed now to rise in aid of an anti-Bolshevik army than it was when Gen. Alexieff and others vainly counted on their help?" I asked.

"Because when Gen. Alexieff and the others made their attempts to free Russia the Bolsheviki had just completed the distribution of the land among the peasants, and these were satisfied with a régime which gave them the land. But since then things have changed. The peasants still hold the land which the Bolsheviki distributed among them, but the Bolsheviki have now socialized the product of this land.

"For instance, if a peasant raises a pig on his land and takes it to market to sell it, the Bolsheviki local authorities step in, take from him the price he gets for his pig, and divide it between him and the neighboring peasants who have no pigs to sell. So all the more industrious peasants have become dissatisfied and say to themselves, 'We own what we raise on it?'

"Yes; they are ripe to join any Russian movement which guarantees them the retention of the land and promises them the ownership of its fruits. And this we must do: The land must never be taken away from the peasants. It would simply precipitate a new revolt. But the Government should issue enough bonds to furnish an amount adequate to recompense the former owners of the land for its loss. The unexploited wealth of Russia is so prodigious that out of it such a loan could be repaid in a few years.

"Of course it is true that Russia, with the land thus distributed, will for some years lack the productiveness of the Russia of the old landlord system, for in the past it has been demonstrated that an acre of land belonging to the holdings of a big landlord produced a lot more than an adjoining acre of similar land cultivated by a small peasant proprietor. This is because the peasant does not use the improved machinery and methods of the big landowner.

"Nevertheless, in time this may change. In Siberia, for instance, where the more progressive and energetic peasants emigrated to get land and where the land is equally divided, the production is good and the population has killed or driven out the Bolsheviki and is running an orderly government of its own.

"This is proved by the mutinies and uprisings that they are now constantly engaged in against the Bolsheviki all over the agricultural districts of Russia, despite the terrible atrocities with which the Bolsheviki punish such revolts.

"And not only the agriculturists are disaffected. Do you know that they have socialized all the houses of a value of more than 1,000 rubles? That means that any man having such a house has all the rooms in it taken away from him except what he and his family can be crowded into, and the rest of his house is handed over to the tramps and criminals who have no houses of their own.

"Then, another reason that will make our success sure is the number of officers and bourgeois soldiers in the Bolsheviki Army who will come over to us if they have any chance.

"The Bolsheviki, by their four-class feeding system, have actually forced these loyal men into joining their ranks to save their families from complete starvation, since the soldiers and workmen who are in the first of these four classes are the only ones who are allowed a decent ration of food for their families. There are actually many of our generals now in command in the Red armies for this reason and thousands of lesser officers. We have a list of the generals, and these, unfortunately, will have to be executed when captured, so they will not join us, but all the lesser officers and members of the business class will."

"What do you think of the peace conference as concerns Russia?"

"As a Russian, I am sad that such a conference can meet without Russian representation. It seems to me a singular situation that such a conference can undertake to make a world peace and bar out any representative of some 40,000,000 people (which is about the population of the portions of Russia already liberated from the Bolsheviki and now under orderly government). And these 40,000,000 Russians belong to a nation which, despite its subsequent misfortunes, sacrificed millions of its manhood in fighting for the allied cause and indubitably saved the allies from complete defeat more than once.

"And this leads me to one infamous lie started by the German propagandists which I want to correct. That is that the Czar and Czarina were pro-German. I was head of the air service in the Russian Army, and as such was constantly at headquarters and thus in frequent contact with the Czar, who, for that matter, is my brother-in-law, as I married his sister.

"I knew better than anyone how profoundly loyal to Russia he was up to the very end. And as for the young Empress, she was almost fanatical in her hatred of the Germans. It sprang partly, perhaps, from a personal loathing she had for the Kaiser himself in spite of his relationship to her. But I know that she hated the Germans worse than I did.

"The real trouble was that the Czar spent his entire time at headquarters absorbed in the military problems which were continually arising on one part or another of our immense front all the year around. Thus, he gave no time at all to internal affairs. Now, he was profoundly suspicious of everyone except his wife, in whom he had the most devoted confidence. He therefore accepted her suggestions on internal appointments and affairs, and she was badly advised by some people who undoubtedly were pro-German. But as for either the Czar or the Czarina having been pro-German, I repeat that is an infamous lie, which I wish to denounce."

AN EQUALITY OF MUD AND MISERY.

[An article from the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant, by Mynheer Oudenyk, acting minister for Holland at Petrograd, and a resident of Russia for 25 years.]

Bismarck once uttered the wish that to the Socialists should be given a country where they could work and handle affairs and show what they would attain by the accomplishment of their ideals. It seems as if Providence has designed Russia for this trial.

The result is that there exist more tyranny, cruelty, bribery, and misery under the new "free" government than under any other government Russia has known.

A small group of people has purposely, with the utmost refinement and with staggering perseverence, wiped out Russia's wealth, her prosperity, and her future. Whatever was in Russia has been thrown down and crushed or "investigated" so thoroughly that nothing remains.

Petrograd is empty; the few people outdoors wander about like specters, with pale faces and hollows around their eyes and mouths from hunger. The horses drop in front of the carriages from mere exhaustion. The dogs in the streets are bony, shivering creatures.

I have had Russians come to me and swoon in my arms from hunger and misery. They had heard that the Netherlands ambassador would, perhaps, be able to help them. Every institute of public charity and common assistance has been wrecked and ruined. The International Seafarers' Home at Petrograd, even, has not escaped. The old captain and his wife, who managed the home for years, have been put out without means of subsistence. All their protests have been of no consequence. Commerce, industry, banking, and mining have stopped entirely. The banks have been plundered, and all the money values and shares have been taken into custody. The records of notes and drafts have been scattered to the four winds. With confiscated goods the Bolsheviki try to create a barter with foreign countries.

A total annihilation of the present system is the only possible saving of Russia. The country, with the greater part of its inhabitants, has been thrown into the deepest misery and despondency. There are no foodstuffs any more. The distribution of food tickets is useless, as in most cases one can not get anything on them. Railway traffic has almost stopped, and, accordingly, the import of food. Only on the big lines some traffic is maintained, but the trains creep along from one station to another, and after one hour's ride they stop for one hour and a half. No organized schedule is kept. The carriages have been entirely plundered, the brass work, the curtains, racks, and coverings of the seats have gone. Traveling has been made almost impossible by an unheard-of passport tyranny. To buy a railroad ticket one needs a special permit. On the road from Petrograd to Moscow your baggage is examined three times. Thus the inhabitants are imprisoned in the cities, left to despotism, hunger, and a want of the most needful articles.

It is impossible to escape from the country, as the frontiers are hermetically closed to those who have not sufficient means to bribe the frontier guards. The population seems to lack all energy to rise against its oppressors. All the energy of the people has been systematically crushed. There is no police, no safety service, no jurisprudence. In their place came terrorism and despotism. Never under the old régime were there so many imprisonments, so many executions in masses as we see now daily. Many a time have I seen a crowd of weeping women in front of the prisons looking for their husbands, brothers, and sons taken from them without trial and whose whereabouts they did not know. Heartrending tales I have heard from these women.

The "freedom" system of the Bolsheviki has destroyed and ruined everything; it has erected nothing. All that the Bolsheviki can do is to display fine words in the newspapers and at lectures, but the simple truth is that the people are given to hunger and misery as they have been never before in any country on the globe. Nothing is left even for the proletariat. Smuggled goods are all one can get for exorbitant prices. The clandestine trade with provisions is indescribable. One pound of butter costs $25 to $35; one pound of meat, $11 to $12.50; bread, $7.50 a pound, which is, for all that, a moist and uneatable straw paste. Of course, these are the prices of smuggling, but the fact that they are paid shows how far famine has gone.

The "distribution" had divided the people into four classes. The largest class (who get most) includes the "elite" of the laboring element—those who do heavy labor and the outcasts of the community, among whom are mixed released criminals and such elements. They get a nominal allowance of one-half pound of bread a day. The second class, including the laborers on lighter work, have only a right to one-quarter of a pound of bread a day. The lower officials, from the third class, get one-eighth of a pound of bread daily, and the lowest class, the bourgeois, do not get anything. In truth, the whole system means that most of the people get nothing. Coal has been out for a long time. Public industries, gas and electricity factories are kept going with naphtha for fuel, but this is running out, too. I tremble when thinking of the sufferings of the Russian people in the coming winter. It is easy to understand that health conditions are very poor. The hospitals, however, are in total disorder and medicines are hardly to be had.

On the anniversary of the revolution, November 7 and 8, many arches were erected in Petrograd, and the public buildings were covered with large strips of white cloth on which unintelligible futuristic pictures and Bolshevik inscriptions had been designed. Three hundred thousand yards of cotton goods were used for this purpose, and this while the population is lacking all material for underwear. The workingmen working on these arches received $125 wages a day. Such instances describe fully Russia's mismanagement.

The lightheartedness with which money is given out is unbelievable. They jingle with millions and billions as if these were of no importance. Just before I left a decree had been issued ordering a single levy of ten billions. The bourgeois have to pay this. It is inconceivable how they can find the money, as they have been gradually stripped of their belongings, and the one single levy will therefore mean the giving up of everything thus far left to them. Money, as a matter of fact, is easy to be got—one has only to print it. The presses are lenient. The only trouble to come is that the blue ink for coloring the notes will give out. Every day a new amount of unnumbered, unsigned notes is circulated, and nobody knows how many are issued, and the notes are not properly covered by gold specie. The total amount of the paper money (the only money in circulation) can safely be estimated to be $25,000,000,000. What is to become of the credit of the country under such circumstances?

Violently the people are robbed until their last penny has been taken. They are put out of their houses and offices and given out to misery. Half of the shops in Petrograd are closed, after having been ruined. The other half can not sell before the "distribution."

The shopkeepers have no voice in their own business. In their places the clerks are managing the affairs. They prescribe their own wages and working hours. Personally I have seen an example of despotism. A man had a small shop in a provincial town, but his standing was no better than any common laborer. Because he had a shop he was considered a bourgeois. This shop was taken away from him and he was thrown into prison, while his family were left to provide for themselves. They got his release at last for a high ransom, but what can he do at present? There is no work for a bourgeois. On the little money left to him he can not live without giving suspicion to the authorities. Without means of subsistence he and his family were without food and nearly insane. Suicide is very often the only way out for those unfortunates. Every one owning a few thousand rubles tries to keep them and is for that already marked as a capitalist. Thus the Government can only count on the very poorest classes, on those who have nothing and are nothing. Among the farmers, too, they can only count on the poorest ones, who have no land of their own and in many cases not even a hut to live in. All the land, it is said, belongs to the nation. In results this nationalization means that one person takes what is robbed from another.

In many cases the farmers even do not want this nationalized land, as they are afraid that in their turn they will be regarded as bourgeoisie. The result of all this is that the land remains uncultivated or is insufficiently fertilized. On the whole farming has stopped for the greater part. Everything that has been nationalized or socialized seems to have been touched by a withering hand; it fades and dies. The socialized tug service on the Volga, formerly of great importance for grain and petroleum transport, has stopped. The barges are rotting in the river. Foreign shipping is of no importance any more. So many formalities have to be observed that business has been made impossible. Large placards on the street corners call on the proletariat to take possession of the houses of the bourgeoisie. The people are put out of their homes with two hours' notice and must leave their furniture. Constantly one sees so-called confiscated furniture taken out of the houses while the inhabitants are left to find other quarters.

This is such a common sight that one hardly notices it. The tragedy of a family losing in a few hours all they and their ancestors have earned and worked for has become such a daily occurrence that one passes unmoved, hardened by the sight of too much misery.

Servants lead a miserable existence. Nobody can employ them, and at their wits' end they go and offer their services for nothing just to have a home and food. Many bourgeoisie have tried to earn their living by selling newspapers and sweets, and the tales of ex-generals selling newspapers and princesses serving in shops and at counters are no imaginary tales. But this, generally their only means of living, has also been forbidden to them. Those who possessed jewelry, antiques, or costly furniture have tried to sell them when they needed money. This also has stopped. The transportation of furniture without special permission (of course unattainable for a bourgeois) has been prohibited.

The army itself is disorganized. The troops in the service of the present Government are composed of the most extreme Reds, kept by extraordinarily high pay and extra food rations.

The public is utterly ignorant of what is happening in other countries as well as in their own. Only Government newspapers are issued, and they give only one-sided and misleading news.

The censor is a hundred times more exacting than under the old régime. In the beginning some German papers could be had at Petrograd, but their import has been stopped lately, so we were totally ignorant of what happened in the universe. Unemployment has risen enormously. Never before has the world witnessed such an intentional annihilation of products and means as we see now in Russia.

All factories are ruined. The engines are taken away or transported from one factory to another. The object of this is obvious. The few workingmen who are still willing to work must earn enormous wages, while they do very little work. Thus the employers are obliged to throw great sums of money to the workers while their output is paralyzed for a long time, perhaps for good. Only a large importation of foreign capital shall be able to restore the thus spoiled industries. Nowhere is there any sign of enthusiasm for the present Government.

The population has lost all energy and seems paralyzed. The Bolsheviki enjoy themselves in theaters and moving-picture shows, at concerts and dances. In the imperial palace they have installed a moving-picture theater. But the bourgeoisie dare hardly show themselves in the streets, because public safety is very lax.

In the cities I have not seen much drunkenness. A great deal of brandy is made in the country, but in the cities alcohol is so scarce that all the eau de cologne and even all the polish has been drunk.

Of course, the situation is relatively better in the country, where the farmers try to keep as much as possible of their grain and other products. The great quantities of grain and minerals in Siberia are unattainable by the Soviet Government.

The Dutch colony has almost entirely left Petrograd, for the foreign population is as little safeguarded against the terrorism of the Bolsheviki as the Russians themselves. Those who remained have closed their offices, and, like the bourgeoisie, they lead a pitiful existence trying to sell things in the streets. Instead of lifting the lower classes to a higher level, the new system has dragged everything above them down into their mud and misery.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Thomas
Fletcher	Kenyon	Ransdell	Townsend
Gay	Knox	Reed	Trammell
Gore	McLean	Robinson	Underwood
Gronna	McNary	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Hale	Moses	Shafroth	Walsh
Henderson	Myers	Sheppard	Warren
Hitchcock	Nelson	Sherman	Williams
Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Smoot
Kellogg	Pollock	Spencer

Mr. SAULSBURY. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained on official business.

I wish also to state that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is absent on official business.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to announce the absence of the following Senators on official business: Senators ASHURST, NUGENT, LA FOLLETTE, CURTIS, and FERNALD.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to anounce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KIRBY, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. LODGE, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. CALDER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. KING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I find in this morning's Washington Post on the first page a portion of a speech made by ex-President Taft, at Missoula, Mont. It bears the usual Taft earmarks of clarity and brevity of expression and legal and judicial ability. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT ASKS THANKS BE GIVEN FOR LEAGUE—DECLARES PRESIDENT IS TO BE WARMLY CONGRATULATED—CONTENDS SENATE SHOULD GIVE HIM UNANIMOUS SUPPORT SINCE FOURTEEN NATIONS ALREADY HAVE DONE SO.

(By William Howard Taft.)

MISSOULA, MONT., February 16, 1919.

All who have pressed for a league of nations to maintain peace and prevent war must thank God as they read the provisions of the constitution of the league upon which the nations in conference at Paris have agreed. President Wilson is to be warmly congratulated that the league of nations which he promised to the harassed allied peoples in his messages and addresses and has urged before the conference has taken such a form. It is a real league. It has clinching and cinching provisions. It imposes on all the great powers and all others who enter the league a solemn covenant not to begin war until the differences have been submitted either to arbitration and award or to the executive council of the league as a conciliating body.

MAY ACT TO SECURE COMPLIANCE.

The parties covenant to obey the award if the executive council unanimously recommend a compromise, and if the party against whom it is made complies with the recommendation the other party covenants not to go to war. If the power does not comply, then the council may take steps to secure compliance. If a party breaks its covenant in these regards and goes to war, a complete boycott of the recalcitrant is required of all members of the league. The break of covenant is an act of war against all the other members of the league. The executive council is then to recommend what military forces each member of the league should furnish to protect the covenants of the league. The members are to share the loss arising to any member of the league by reason of the boycott. The boycott is to prevent commerce not only between the outlaw nation and its citizens and the members of the league and their citizens, but is to be extended to prevent commerce of the outlaw and its citizens with nonmembers of the league. It is to be a complete isolation.

RECOMMENDS MILITARY QUOTA.

It will be thus seen that economic pressure will be forced that all members of the league are bound to use in every case of a breach of covenant in beginning war. The contribution to a military force to suppress war is not objectory, but the council is to recommend what contribution each league member should make. Moreover, each member is required to give passage over its territory to forces of the league engaged attacking the recalcitrant. It would be difficult to make stronger provisions that have a tendency to force league members into war with covenant breakers without creating a distinct and positive objection to make war.

The members of the league, whether they fight or not, are not neutrals in the modern sense. They must prevent intercourse of nonmembers of the league with the recalcitrant nation. They must yield a right of way to league military forces attacking that nation. The recalcitrant may therefore properly regard them as belligerents and enemies. Provision is made for future creation of an international court, but meantime arbitration before agreed arbitrators is provided.

On the whole, the short program of the League to Enforce Peace, adopted in June, 1915, differed but little from the nub of this, except that military contribution is not expressly obligatory and that in this either party to a difference may avoid a court and an award and seek a council of conciliation in the executive body of the league, where unanimity of recommendation is required.

ADOPTED BY GEN. SMUTS.

The proposal to use compulsion to secure submission rather than execution of judgment or recommendation came from the program of the League to Enforce Peace, and was adopted by Gen. Smuts in a remarkable brochure submitted by him December 16, 1918. It is understood that the President was much impressed with the paper of Gen. Smuts, and his plan as well. We may be certain the constitution as now adopted was largely taken from his recommendation. He argued for the joint obligation of league members to use force, which was only partly adopted, as I have pointed out. He, too, recommended required submission of the justiciable questions to a court, and of nonjusticiable questions to a conciliation council, as the League to Enforce Peace had done.

But the Smuts plan was much more comprehensive than that of the League to Enforce Peace. From that plan came the mandatory system of administrating backward countries and international cities as wards of the league through competent and existing governments as agents answerable to the league. From that plan came the union of all present international bureaus under the league, as well as the permanent secretariat. He advocated international labor reforms through the league, and this function is left to be developed under the league. He, too, brought nonmembers of the league under its influence and action.

AN INDISPENSABLE FEATURE.

The giving to the five great powers five votes in an executive council of nine is one of the most important features of the constitution, and is indispensable to any practical working of it. They are the responsible members who are to do the work to be done. The minor States of the league enjoy its protection, but will not be willing to expend money or effort in maintaining its authority. They should not be permitted to arrogate to themselves equal authority with the great powers, and thus seriously interfere with the league's efficient operations. This is a sufficient safeguard against too early admission of Germany.

One admirable feature of the constitution is its elastic character. The President has commented on it. It may be that, as the concrete problem of keeping peace between the new republics and the old countries, out of which they have been carved, presents itself in detail, special measures for the raising of military forces may have to be incorporated. Doubtless other readjustments will have to be made as experience shows their necessity.

PROVIDES FOR DEVELOPMENT.

In other words, this fact does not rigidly maintain the status quo, but makes provision for development and progress among the nations. In many instances, too, the old and paralyzing requirements of unanimity of action by the powers has been departed from.

Now that President Wilson brings back to us a real league, and has fully made good his announced purpose, it would greatly please the country if the Senators could give him unanimous support. The 14 nations have done so, why not the Senate? Such action would be heard around the world with acclaim.

Article 10 covers the Monroe doctrine and extends it to the world. The league is not a supersovereign, but a partnership intended to secure to us and all nations only the sovereignty we can properly have, i. e., sovereignty regulated by international law and morality and consistent with the same sovereignty of other countries. The United States is not under this constitution to be forced into actual war against its will. This league is to be regarded as in conflict with the advice of Washington only with a narrow and reactionary viewpoint. Let us hope that a forward-looking Senate will not seek to defeat this grand advance of mankind toward a just and lasting peace.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have here a petition sent me by the Minute Men of Seattle, Wash., urging the deportation of alien slackers. The petition is similar to those I presented the other day. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Washington that I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, I. M. Howell, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 9 with the original copy of said senate joint memorial No. 9 now on file in this office and find the same to be a full, true, and correct copy of said original and of the whole thereof, together with all official indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Washington. Done at the capitol, at Olympia, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.]

I. M. HOWELL,
Secretary of State.
By J. GRANT HINKLE,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial No. 9.

To the President of the United States and to the Director General of Railroads:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas on the 29th day of August, 1916, the Congress of the United States of America did authorize the President of the United States to take possession of and operate the transportation systems of the United States and thereafter authorized him to initiate rates thereon; and

Whereas prior to the taking possession of the Northern Pacific; Great Northern; Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Spokane & Inland Empire; Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway systems in the State of Washington by the President of the United States, there existed in said State a practice by said railway systems of granting the following rates upon gravel, crushed rock, and sand for the building of highways by the State and counties, paid for by public funds, as follows: One cent per ton per mile for a short haul of 50 miles or less, and three-fourths cent per ton per mile for greater distances, with a minimum of $5 per car; a ton to be 2,000 pounds, the cars to be loaded approximately to their weight capacity. It being further understood that in the use of the rates above named for distances between 50 and 100 miles, the basis of charge should be 1 cent per ton per mile for the first 50 miles and three-fourths cent per mile for each additional mile above 50 miles until the rate of 75 cents was reached; and

Whereas on the 25th day of May, 1918, acting for and on behalf of the President of the United States, the Director General did issue his General Order No. 28, under and by virtue of which all rates for the hauling of gravel, crushed rock, and sand were increased 1 cent per 100 pounds; and

Whereas on this 13th day of June, 1918, the practice of allowing special rates upon road material was withdrawn as to the systems above named; and

Whereas the State of Washington and the several counties thereof are now about to engage in a program for extensive road building in order to give employment to its inhabitants and the demobilized soldiers, thereby aiding in the reconstructive program so essential to the welfare of the people of the whole Nation; and

Whereas the excessive cost of labor, which it is essential shall be maintained until there is a fall in prices of the necessities of life, which excessive labor cost is a deterrent in carrying out an extensive road program; and

Whereas the difference in the cost of hauling gravel, crushed rock, and sand under the rate prescribed by said order No. 28 of the Director General is viewed as a war measure and one inimical to a reconstructive and reorganized program: Therefore

It is most earnestly and respectfully urged that said General Order No. 28 as to rates upon gravel, crushed rock, and sand to be moved in the State of Washington in public-road building be set aside and the rates stated in the practice above mentioned be restored on all railroads in said State under Federal control.

The secretary of state is hereby directed to cause a certified copy of this memorial to be sent to the President of the United States, to the Director General of Railroads, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington.

Passed the senate February 7, 1919.

LOUIS F. HART, President.

Passed the house February 7, 1919.

FRED A. ADAMS, Speaker.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition of sundry citizens of Everett, Wash., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Everett, Wash., praying for the withdrawal of American troops from Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 1181, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Bremerton, Wash., and a petition of sundry citizens of Seattle, Wash., praying for the deportation of those aliens who, in order to escape military service, revoked their first citizenship papers, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MYERS. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 5.

Memorial to Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to permit the honorably discharged soldier, marine, or sailor to retain in his possession such clothing as under the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, he is permitted to take to his home.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas "under the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, an enlisted man honorably discharged is permitted to wear one suit of uniform outer clothing from the place of termination of his active service to his home, which clothing will be returned within four months after termination of his active service by mail, under a franked label"; and

Whereas the soldiers, marines, and sailors who have been or are now in the service of the United States that the world might be made safe for democracy, willingly went forth to defend the principles of freedom and right, knowing that they might at any time be required to make the supreme sacrifice; and

Whereas these soldiers, marines, and sailors have taken much pride in their uniforms and wish the privilege of keeping them in their possession: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition and earnestly pray the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to change the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, and make it possible for an honorably discharged man to retain "one suit of uniform outer clothing."

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate and to the House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies hereof be transmitted by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

O. W. BELDEN,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 5, relating to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines retaining their uniforms after discharge, enacted by the sixteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State on the 11th day of February, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Montana at Helena, the capital, this 12th day of February, A. D. 1919

[SEAL.] C. T. STEWART.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of sundry farmers of Gibson, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation guaranteeing the $2.26 minimum price on the 1919 wheat crop, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MOSES. I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Concord, N. H., relative to a continuance of the Federal control and operation of telephone and telegraph lines, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution unanimously passed by the Concord Board of Trade, Concord, N. H., February 13, 1919.

Whereas the remarkably difficult problems resulting from the war and the coming period of business readjustment render it exceedingly difficult, if not wholly impossible, for the owners of the great telephone and telegraph systems now under Federal control to successfully resume the operation of the same without remedial legislation and the provision of some reasonable period in which to allow for the necessary preparation and readjustment; and

Whereas to properly consider these problems in all their intricacies will require much more time than is available in the present short session of Congress, and unless some action is taken at this time the properties will be returned to the companies owning them upon the proclamation by the President of the ratification of peace treaties without any advance notice being given and without any period for proper and necessary readjustment; and since such a period of readjustment is of exceedingly vital importance to the business interests of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this organization go on record as favoring the enactment by Congress of some law which will continue the control and operation of such utilities by the Government until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators of this State and to the Representative in Congress of this district.

CONCORD BOARD OF TRADE,
By HERBERT W. RAINIE,
Secretary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, relative to captured German cannon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 10.

Whereas the soldiers, sailors, and marines of the State of Oregon had an honorable and glorious part in the recent world's war; and

Whereas the Army of the United States of America captured many cannon from the enemy during said war; and

Whereas the people of the State of Oregon desire to have some of the trophies captured by the Army of the United States, in which Oregon men played so conspicuous a part: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be memorialized to use their influence to secure such action or legislation as will result in the gift from the War Department of the United States to the people of Oregon of two large German cannons, captured in engagements in which Oregon soldiers participated, to be permanently placed upon the capitol grounds at Salem, Oreg., and that a copy of this memorial be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the house January 31, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 28, 1919.

W. L. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon favoring the granting of six months' additional pay and allowances to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 6.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas since the signing of the armistice, on November 11, 1918, which practically brought to a conclusion the greatest war in history, our soldiers, sailors, and marines are being rapidly mustered out of the service of the Government and are being turned from their triumphant warfare in behalf of civilization to their former peaceful vocations in civil life; and

Whereas our Federal Government has failed to make suitable provisions for the support and maintenance of our returning heroes from the time of their honorable discharge until they have had an opportunity to return to their respective homes and again obtain employment of a character adapted to their qualifications, and many of them when discharged are without means to provide themselves with the actual necessaries of life; and

Whereas others of our allies in the great conflict have made provision for their discharged warriors by granting them from three to six months' additional pay from the date of their discharge and by equipping them with civilian clothing; and

Whereas no army or navy has ever fought more brilliantly or with greater valor, nor has any ever won such sweeping and overwhelming victory as have the Army, Navy, and Marines of the United States in the terrible conflict just ended, and none are more deserving than our splendid heroes, whom we all delight to honor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, do respectfully and earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to forthwith provide by appropriate legislation that each soldier, sailor, and marine who has been honorably discharged from the service of our country since November 11, 1918, be granted six months' extra pay from the date of his discharge, the same to be payable at the earliest possible time, and that each soldier, sailor, and marine who was in the service of his country during the present war and prior to November 11, 1918, who shall hereafter be honorably discharged shall on the date of his discharge be paid as extra compensation a sum equal to six months' pay at the rate of the pay he was receiving on the day of his discharge; and, further, that each person entitled to receive such extra pay under such legislative enactment be provided with or paid the value of one civilian suit of clothes: Be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of Oregon be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of this joint memorial, under his certificate and seal, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house January 31, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 22, 1919.

W. J. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring the independence of Armenia, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully and earnestly represent that:

Whereas the United States is upholding the traditions of her historic past, and the ideals which are the foundation of the Republic has become "The home of freedom, and the hope of the downtrodden and oppressed among the nations of the earth"; and

Whereas the great heart of our people has constantly bled in sympathy and our indignation has as often been stirred by the ever-recurring, inhuman barbarities of the cruel Turk toward the virtuous, peaceable, and Christian Armenian peoples; and

Whereas after centuries of oppression, unspeakable atrocities, massacres, and deportations, the Armenian people are still about 3,000,000 in number, and out of the fearful carnage that is just closing in Europe have emerged with a small Armenian Republic in their ancestral home; and

Whereas history has proven that the cruel Turk awaits an opportunity to continue his outrages against this innocent people, who have a recognized capacity for self-government, and, with adequate protection, can establish a strong Armenian Republic at this crossroads of contending nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the legislative assembly, ask the United States, by this resolution, to assist in every way possible to help the cause of an United Armenian Republic, embracing all Armenian peoples under the principle of self-determination, and that the United States tender to such Republic its sympathy and moral support in achieving such result; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the senate of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Represenatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the house January 31, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 22, 1919.

W. J. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring an adequate merchant marine, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 14.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas conditions of unemployment exist and threaten to become more aggravated during the period of reconstruction upon which our Nation has entered following the great war; and

Whereas in order to encourage the production of commodities and the consequent employment of labor and the stimulation of commerce and industry, a merchant marine is absolutely essential for the Pacific Coast States; and

Whereas no adequate merchant marine now exists on said coast: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to take immediate action by the passage of such legislation as will create, foster, and maintain an adequate merchant marine for the handling of products of the Pacific coast, and that such legislation include such readjustments or absorptions of tolls and other charges as will give ships of American registry at least an equal standing with ships of foreign registry; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State of Oregon transmit copies of this joint memorial to the governors of the States of Washington and California, requesting that the legislatures of said States take immediate action to call the attention of the Congress of the United States to the existing emergency; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State of Oregon transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the house February 7, 1919.

(Signed) SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 7, 1919.

(Signed) W. J. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, relative to the construction of ships for foreign account, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 10.

Whereas the American Emergency Fleet Corporation and Shipping Board have forbidden American shipbuilders to take foreign contracts in the building of ships; and

Whereas the American shipbuilding industries have been prevented from doing their part toward making good the world's shortage in ships caused by the war; and

Whereas many civilian workmen have been thrown out of employment at a time when the labor market is being filled with discharged soldiers; and

Whereas American industry is given a setback when going through a period of transition; and

Whereas many of these contracts would be received by American shipbuilders at this time, providing the opportunity would be given to the shipbuilding industry to accept and complete contracts for foreign ships; and

Whereas the objections on the part of the Shipping Board to permit American shipbuilding industries to take foreign contracts is driving this business and probable contracts to other countries and interfere with the employment of American labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring therein), That Congress, and particularly the Representatives of the State of Oregon in Congress be memorialized to use their influence to bring about such legislation, or action on the part of the United States Shipping Board, as will permit the American shipbuilding industries to take and complete contracts for the building of ships for foreign countries; and further be it

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of this joint memorial under his certificate and seal to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Member from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 30, 1919.

W. J. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 20, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that House joint memorial No. 10 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAYER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, relative to completion of the construction of steel and wooden ships now under contract, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 12.

Whereas on account of the cessation of wooden shipbuilding in Oregon large numbers of men have been thrown out of employment during the winter season; and

Whereas the United States Shipping Board has recently made an order, the result of which is to discontinue the building of a large number of steel and wooden ships already under way, by order of the Government; and

Whereas this will throw out of employment a large number of men and will entirely dislocate the labor situation in Oregon, causing hardships and distress; and

Whereas Oregon has not been derelict in any of her duties toward the Government during the recent world war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be earnestly requested to appropriate sufficient funds for finishing the steel and wooden ships now under contract, and that a copy of this memorial be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that a copy thereof be sent to the President of the United States, and a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the house January 30, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 30, 1919.

W. J. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I present petitions signed by a large number of farmers in the State of Minnesota, praying that the guaranty for 1919 wheat be made good. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. I present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Ohio, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 18) memorializing the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and the United States Railroad Administration relative to the matter of freight rates on materials for public works.

Whereas many public improvements for which there is an imperative need have been postponed on account of the existence of a state of war between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government, and in order that the energies of the people might be directed unreservedly toward the winning of the war; and

Whereas one of the greatest problems confronting the State and Nation at the present time is the furnishing of immediate employment to a large amount of idle labor released from other activities by the victorious termination of the war; and

Whereas the national administration has urgently requested the resumption of the construction of public works on a large scale, the Congress of the United States is proposing to appropriate large sums of money for such purpose, the governors of many States have recommended and are engaged in procuring other large appropriations for the same purpose, and minor political subdivisions are preparing to liberally finance public improvements of great magnitude; and

Whereas, in the judgment of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, the problem of furnishing immediate and profitable employment to idle labor can be best solved by immediately embarking upon the construction of the many much-needed public improvements which have been delayed by war conditions; and

Whereas, in the judgment of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, freight rates on materials designated for use in constructing public works should be immediately reduced, and any increase in the same will defeat its own purposes by forcing a curtailment of shipments and at the same time, by discouraging the movement for a program of public improvements, render futile all efforts to give employment to idle labor; and

Whereas one of the greatest and most serious obstacles to the immediate resumption of activity in the construction of public work is the present high freight rates on materials, and more especially certain proposed revisions and readjustments of such freight rates, which proposed revisions and readjustments create a situation of uncertainty, making it impossible for engineers to intelligently estimate the cost of public works and making it impossible for contractors to bid thereon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and the United States Railroad Administration be, and they hereby are, memorialized and respectfully but most urgently requested to take such action as will immediately and effectively prevent any upward revision in the freight rates upon materials entering into the construction of public works; and

That, if in the judgment of the proper authorities of the National Government charged with the administration of such matters, the employment of idle labor in the construction of public improvements is a matter of importance, and if, in the judgment of such officials, it be not incompatible with the general welfare, there be forthwith made a reduction in the freight rates upon all materials transported over the railroads of the United States for use in connection with the construction of any public improvements carried forward by the Federal Government or any department thereof, or any State, county, township, city, village, school district, or other political subdivision; and

That upon the passage of this resolution certified copies thereof be forthwith forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Ohio to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officers, and Members from Ohio of both branches of the Congress of the United States, and the Director General of Railroads.

CARL R. KIMBALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
President of the Senate.

Adopted February 3, 1919.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OHIO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, William D. Fulton, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 18 as adopted by the General Assembly of Ohio on the 3d day of February, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 12th day of February, 1919, and is now on file in this office and in my official custody.

Witness my hand and official seal at Columbus, Ohio, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM D. FULTON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PAGE presented the petition of Fred A. Snyder and 48 other citizens of Rutland, Vt., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Houlton, of the Travelers' Club of Belfast, and of the Current Events Club of Gardiner, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry farmers in the State of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation guaranteeing the $2.20 minimum price for the 1919 wheat crop, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Detroit and of the Loyal Lodge Black Knights of the Camp of Israel, No. 48, of Flint, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the withdrawal of American troops from Russia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hillsdale, Mich., praying for the early return of American troops from abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 187, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Marquette, Mich., and a petition of the Trades and Labor Council of Port Huron, Mich., praying for the proposed extension of Federal control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry post-office employees at Manistee, Mich., praying that the reclassification of salaries of postal employees be made permanent, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of Fred C. Hensler, of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying that appropriations be made for the continuation of public improvements in order to give returning soldiers and sailors employment, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bay City, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the maintenance of kindergarten schools, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 5618) authorizing and directing The Adjutant General of the United States Army and the Secretary of the Navy to furnish certain data to the adjutants general of the several States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 5620) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Coleman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5621) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Gray, Me., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5622) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Hawkins (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5623) granting a pension to Nancy Cook (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 5624) granting an increase of pension to William C. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 5625) granting a pension to Emeline Hartley; to the Committee on Pensions.

PUNISHMENT FOR SEDITION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I introduce a bill and ask that it may be read at length and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 5619) defining sedition and providing a punishment therefor was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly utters, writes, prints, distributes, circulates, or who knowingly aids in distributing or circulating any words or arguments urging, advocating, or inciting or calculated to incite resistance to law by force or violence, or who urges, advocates, or incites a change in the form of government or the Constitution of the United States except through or by the orderly and duly constituted manner shall be guilty of sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $5,000 and imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five years, and if an alien upon the expiration of his sentence shall be deported from the United States and forever barred from reentering the United States or any territory under its jurisdiction.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution. The Senate has already acted upon the joint resolution providing for woman suffrage. It has disposed of that subject so far as bills that are pending are concerned for this session. In order that there may be a resolution before the committee with reference to this matter I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for woman suffrage and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOSES and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate took a recess on Saturday, and there is a measure before the Senate, the river and harbor bill. I do not like to object to the transaction of routine business, but it would save time, and I think we can attend to those matters just as quickly to dispose of the business before the Senate first. That is the regular order, and I think we ought to have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida calls for the regular order, which is the river and harbor bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

M. KENYON. I think the next amendment is the one relating to the Oklawaha River.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 15, after the word "improvement," the committee proposes to insert the following words:

For improvement of Oklawaha River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 514, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $100,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I propose to introduce an amendment to this amendment raising the question of the contribution by the State to this proposition. I think if there is any proposition in the bill, outside of the Ouachita River, that would be a test of whether Congress under any circumstances with any condition of fact should vote any appropriation out of any river and harbor bill, it is this item. Here is a proposition that is entirely within a State. Why, if the proposition is to be adopted, should not the State or local interests pay some part of it?

Mr. SMOOT. They ought to pay all of it.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Utah suggests that the State ought to pay all of it.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] who, of course, favors this proposition very strongly, and has done so for a number of years, explained to the Senate on Saturday what the proposition was. I think one must gather from his remarks that the urgency of the proposition is brought about by the situation as to railroad rates. The destruction or the rotting of a crop of potatoes—and that condition was not confined alone to this particular part of Florida, but was found in many other parts of the country—the Senator explained was occasioned by the fact that the potatoes could not get to market or could not get to Camp Johnston, at Jacksonville, and consequently potatoes were brought a thousand milles from Maine, although these potatoes were close at hand and might have been used. That would seem to be more of an indictment of the management of the Quartermaster's Department of the War Department of the Government. So, under the Senator's statement, I think we are brought to face the proposition: Is Congress willing to engage in building canals and deepening streams in order to control railroad rates? I do not know whether Congress is willing to engage in that kind of enterprise or not, but I think not. Here is a river entirely within a State, practically paralleled on one side by a railroad 5 or 6 miles away from the river, and on the other side by another railroad farther away. Under the argument of the Senator from Florida—and that argument can be practically applied to hundreds of streams in this country—because the railroad rates are so very high that it is difficult, if not impossible, to get the produce to market the Government should parallel the railroad with an improved kind of canal or river, a ridiculous proposition.

The Senator says, in response to a suggestion that must have been in his mind that this is purely a State proposition, that the Oklawaha River is connected with the St. Johns River, and the St. Johns River is connected with the ocean, and so with all the seaport towns along the Atlantic. If that argument is good, Lizard Creek, which flows through my farm in Iowa, ought to be improved at Government expense. It is connected with the Des Moines River; the Des Moines River flows into the Mississippi; the Mississippi flows into the Gulf of Mexico; the Gulf of Mexco is connected with the ocean; and the Mersey River is connected with the ocean; and Liverpool is on the Mersey; so that Lizard Creek is entitled to improvement on this proposition of improving anything that affects international commerce.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I trust that the fact that Lizard Creek is not included in this bill is not the motive which impels the Senator from Iowa to oppose this appropriation?

Mr. KENYON. No; it is not. I have managed to get along so far improving a portion of Lizard Creek at my own expense.

But you can not get away from the proposition when you vote on this appropriation that here is a river entirely within a State, not connected directly with the ocean, as is the distinguished Raccoon Creek, which Senators may have heard about in the debate on Friday and Saturday last, which it is proposed to improve for the purpose of regulating railroad rates or possibly for the purpose of booming real estate. The commerce on this mighty stream has gone down to almost nothing. It did not have far to go. The commerce in 1916, outside of rafting logs, as I remember the figures, was about 11,000 tons. I will refer to the report and put the figures in correctly.

Why do I say this about railroad rates? I do not know that this question is disputed. In the House on January 24, 1917, a distinguished Representative from that part of the country was asked about this question. He was asked:

> Mr. HULBERT. The Oklawaha River runs parallel to the railroad, doesn't it?
> Mr. CLARK. Yes; but some distance from it.
> Mr. BOOHER. Is there a railroad on both sides of the river?
> Mr. CLARK. Yes. Here is the Atlantic Coast Line right here.
> Mr. BOOHER. How close does that get to the river?
> Mr. CLARK. Oh, I do not know how close.
> Mr. BOOHER. What is the average distance from the river of the railroad on the west?
> The CHAIRMAN. The Atlantic Coast Line is nearest.
> Mr. CLARK. The Atlantic Coast Line is the nearest. I can not say what the average distance is; it is so crooked.
> The CHAIRMAN. It varies, probably, from 5 to 10 miles.

Other evidence was introduced, as referred to on the other side, relative to that matter.

On page 5 of House Document No. 514, with relation to this river, so-called, is found this from the report of Col. Beach, Corps of Engineers. I am reading portions of it, because I want them to go into the RECORD. Of course, I realize that no one present is paying any attention to these things.

> There seems to be a very general demand for this improvement and a firm belief that it would result in a very marked development throughout the adjacent country and create a commerce of considerable magnitude. There is a large section of very rich and fertile country tributary to this waterway and to the lakes at its head, which is being converted into orange groves and truck farms. It is stated that under present conditions business is hameperd by high transportation charges and by congestion in rail freights during the busy season, and that relief can be obtained only by a competitive waterway.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whose testimony is that?

Mr. KENYON. That is the testimony of Col. Beach, of the Corps of Engineers. This report of the Board of Engineers is signed by him.

On page 27 of this report, following the enthusiastic indorsement of this project by the Chamber of Commerce of Leesburg, are set forth the freight rates, which are very high. This proposition not only seems to be to adjust freight rates, but it has a good deal of the element of boosting real estate in it. The distinguished chairman of this committee wrote a letter, which appears on page 25 of the report hereinbefore referred to, in which he sets forth what Messrs. Kyle and Young have done on the developments there. Reading from that letter:

> Messrs. Kyle and Young, I know—and there are others ready to undertake such developments—are, at enormous expense to themselves, opening up for cultivation areas of rich lands bordering on the Oklawaha. About the only means of transportation available to them is this waterway. There are thousands of acres of fertile prairie lands in the valley of the Oklawaha, and also timbered land adjacent to the river in the northern portion.

In Mr. Young's letter he shows the tremendous work they have done in redeeming some 4,000 acres of land along the Oklawaha. In this same House proceeding to which I have referred, of January 24, 1917, which will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 2184, it was stated that as a result of work done on the Oklawaha River, land which they called hammock land had increased in value from fifty to about two hundred dollars an acre.

Now, I submit that if a Government improvement, which is necessary for one purpose, can redeem land, well and good, but land that is increased in value from $50 to $200 an acre by that improvement ought to bear some portion of the expense of the improvement. The testimony through all these documents goes to show that while that may not be the real purpose of this improvement, yet the improvement is going to unite in a way with the Young project in redeeming vast or large quantities of land. Those local interests ought to contribute to this proposition.

I wish to put in the RECORD a little more from Mr. Young's letter, which is made a part of this document. I do not know that I ought to take the time of the Senate to read it, for I have no desire to delay this bill in any way; but I will read a part of Mr. Young's letter, as follows:

> Another feature, which I have been cautioned by some interested friends not to advance as an argument to this honorable board, but believing as I do that it is an injustice to this board to suppose that it would fail to give each improvement to the country due consideration in each connection with this work, I therefore beg to call attention to the improvements that naturally come to these lakes in the way of building of fine homes and developing a section of the country that would be the pride of all Florida, and in this way develop a magnificent passenger traffic along this canal and throughout all these lakes, whose borders embrace some 200 to 300 miles of territory.

In the proviso that is found on page 2 of this report the board expresses this opinion:

> Provided, That any land necessary for the construction of the waterway shall be given to the United States without charge; that interested property owners shall agree to protect the United States against claims for damages on account of any land that may be flooded—

And so forth.

There are interested property owners all along this project, and my contention is that those interested property owners, if we are going into the business of taking a purely local river within a State and improving it, in fairness, in justice, and, it seems to me, as a matter of common financial sense, ought to pay some part of it, and undoubtedly they would be willing to do so, for there was at one time a proposition to change the plan of this improvement and so coordinate it with this land scheme that a part of the cost would be paid by the land interests.

Anyone who desires to follow the romance of this wonderful river will find interesting reading as to the land development on page 6 and on page 9 of this report. It arouses the enthusiasm of those who have invested money along this river or in the vicinity of it; it arouses the enthusiasm naturally of the people of Florida that this improvement shall be made at public expense.

Now, what is the commerce of this river? There ought to be some prospect of commerce; there ought to be some little commerce in the past to justify what has been done, for enormous sums of money have been spent on this river. In 1915—this will be found in the report of the engineers—the commerce amounted to 29,393 tons, and of that logs made up 27,624 tons. So there was a net commerce of those commodities which can be considered commerce, outside of logs rafted, of 1,769 tons. Now we are asked to commit Congress to the proposition of expending three-quarters of a million dollars—$733,000, I think the figures are—on this project.

What was the commerce last year? I am sure that that will be interesting to this large assembly of Senators. Last year on this stream, after the Government had appropriated $97,621.95, there was a commerce of 11,265 tons, of which 7,306 tons were made up of cypress and pine logs.

It may be interesting, just as a matter of history, to place in the RECORD a few things about the Oklawaha. In the Engineer's Report, Part I, 1918, we find these interesting observations:

> The stream was obstructed by logs, snags, overhanging trees, and accumulations of drift and aquatic vegetation, and navigation was impeded by narrow places and sharp bends. The controlling depth was 3.5 to 4 feet from the mouth to Silver Springs Run, and about 2 feet to Lake Griffin. The channel width varied from 22 to 175 feet.

On page 749 of the report it is further stated:

> All of the lower river traffic utilized the improved channel and was benefited thereby. This amounted to 64.8 per cent of the total commerce and was composed of rafts of logs, but the rafts were towed by motor boats drawing from 3 to 3.5 feet.

I do not know just what the available balance on hand is that could be applied to this river. The recommendations of the engineers, I observe, call for $175,000 for the first payment. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why this bill carries $100,000, instead of $175,000, for the first payment? Has there been any change in the recommendation of the engineers?

Mr. FLETCHER. There has been no change in their recommendation. Perhaps it would have been better to have made the item $175,000, but it was supposed that $100,000 would be sufficient to start the work, and we wanted to make it as small as we reasonably could. I am perfectly willing, however, to amend it so as to make that item $175,000.

Mr. KENYON. I do not doubt that, Mr. President, but I wondered why it was not made $175,000, for there is no recommendation that I have been able to find for an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. KENYON. Maj. Slattery recommended different payments of $160,000 a year, but the last recommendation was for $175,000 for the initial appropriation, and, of course, if the project is to go through, it might as well go through in the form in which it has been recommended.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think perhaps it would have been better to have had the item conform precisely to the report, but it is, of course, entirely a matter for Congress to determine what the initial appropriation shall be. The recommendation is for $175,000. We made it less than that, hoping that it would not meet objection, but I am perfectly willing to make the appropriation larger.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. The smaller amount makes it more difficult of passage—the higher the appropriations the easier they are passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Maj. Slattery recommended that the first payment, as the Senator has said, be $160,000, but on April 7, 1913, a colonel of the Corps of Engineers, Dan C. Kingman, in his report to the Chief of Engineers, makes this statement:

> I think that an improvement of this character would pay, and I recommend that it be undertaken as soon as the pressure of more important work permits the money to be applied to it. As other important works are completed in Florida, it would be proper to take up this work, and it could be begun with a moderate expenditure, say of about $100,000 a year, or even $75,000, if the larger amount could not be spared, and by beginning at the lower end the work would be beneficial, the locks would extend pool navigation, and the improvement could be utilized as fast as it was finished.

That is the later report. Is the Senator from Florida willing to amend this item by putting in $75,000, instead of $100,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think it ought to be $100,000. Col. Kingman was then a division engineer. He suggested, as the Senator has read, that the initial appropriation should be something like $100,000, or even $75,000; but the Board of Engineers recommended $175,000. I put in the amendment the sum of $100,000, which I thought would be sufficient to begin the work.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to offer an amendment to the amendment, Mr. President, but in connection with the Oklawaha River, which presents itself to us so frequently, I find a prophecy made by former Senator Burton in the RECORD of February 13, 1915, when the Kissimmee, the little sister of the Oklawaha, was left out of the bill, and the Oklawaha, too, at that time for some reason. He said:

> Good bye, Kissimmee;
> Farewell, Tampa Bay;
> It's a long way to Oklawaha,
> But we'll try to get there some other day

And we have now arrived, after these four years of struggle, at the Oklawaha project. I suppose by four years more we will arrive at the Kissimmee project, which at least sounds better than the Oklawaha. With nearly $18,000,000,000 of liberty loans, with $12,000,000,000 of taxation, is the Congress of the United States willing to go out to the people with this next liberty loan and tell them that they are expected to buy bonds to carry on such a project as the Oklawaha River and the Ouachita River?

I do not know but that the people are willing to do it, and simply to accept the doctrine, "Oh, it is not much. It does not amount to much. It is only $100,000 this year, and the whole project will not run much over a million dollars." If we are never going to start anywhere, even in small amounts, to begin to save money, we never will be able to hold down any taxation in this country.

I have such respect for the Senator from Florida that I hesitate to talk about this project as I feel, and I do not want to violate any rules in talking about a State; but while, as he says, this project has been approved by engineers, it has always encountered more or less opposition in Congress; and while these engineers are high-minded men, of course, they are influenced by the arguments that are presented to them by Senators and by Congressmen. I do not know that many men are influenced by the arguments of Senators and Congress, but where things involve appropriations that are desired in the carrying out of great scientific programs that appeal to men's vanity, and when Senators argue, as they do, that the board itself is on trial, it does influence these engineers.

I have here parts of a speech on one of the rivers of this country, where the engineers had reported unfavorably, a speech delivered by a distinguished Senator, who went at them in a very persuasive way, and who also argued to them that they themselves were on trial. He was so persuasive that they changed their plans to some extent. Of course, if Congress is simply to be bound by what the Army engineers do, and if we have no right to criticize them, or any right to differentiate our views from theirs, without being accused of calling them dishonest, what is the use of considering any of these bills? Congress has abdicated enough power without abdicating power to the Army engineers.

So I shall ask for a record vote on this amendment. I will not support the project, even if this amendment should be adopted; but I am going to try to get a yea-and-nay vote, so that the constituents of Members of Congress will have a record to enable them to find out whether or not Congress cares a tinker's—you know—about money. The cheerful hilarity with which we vote away these funds is alarming.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I propose to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and insert the following:

> $50,000: Provided, That one-half of the entire expense of said project shall be paid by the State of Florida or by local interests under such arrangements as may be made by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question about his amendment? Do I understand that it reduces the total or aggregate cost of the improvement to $50,000, $25,000 of which is to come from the community?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no. The committee amendment carries $100,000. My amendment would require $50,000 of that $100,000 to be paid by the State or local interests.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator sure that it reads that way?

Mr. KENYON. It is a little hard to phrase. I have had some difficulty in phrasing it; but the plan is to pay so much per year until this project is completed, at a cost of $733,000. Of the amount paid each year, under this amendment, half is to be paid by the Government and half is to be paid by the State or local interests. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Iowa that it is well to take a record vote on matters of this character; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I should be glad to have a record vote on every important piece of legislation. The blessed sunlight of publicity is always healthful, and there can be no objection to the representatives of the people making a record for their constituents to contemplate.

I know that the rivers and harbors bill is not perfect. It is not altogether free from objectionable appropriations; but I have observed that the money appropriated for rivers and harbors is more universally scattered over the entire country than the appropriations carried in almost any other bill. I am not, however, going to speak to the merits of this proposition; but I find very few appropriations in this particular bill that are not necessary. The things to be done are for the good of the people who pay the taxes and support this Government. I wish we had begun to practice economy, as suggested by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], before we wasted the $100,000,000 which was given to Mr. Hoover to spend on the people of Europe.

But I did not rise for that purpose, Mr. President. I rose for the purpose of calling attention to a matter that has received a good deal of consideration at the hands of the Senate.

If ever in the history of America it were well for men in authority to speak with candor the words of wisdom, truth, and reconciliation, now is the time. The manifestations, the symptoms of unrest and dissatisfaction are observed on every hand. No man was ever convinced by abuse. Arguments are necessary if we would direct the channels of thought of the erring brother in politics. Intolerance always breeds trouble. It is so rarely that we see a sustained, philosophical discussion of current political questions in the editorial columns of the partisan newspapers of to-day that when I observe an editor trying to lead the people aright I wish to commend his intelligent and patriotic efforts in that regard.

I find in the Washington Herald of Sunday, February 16, an editorial entitled "What breeds Bolshevism?" and I wish to place it in the RECORD as the better expression of my own views upon that important question. I wish every thoughtful statesman in public life might read this editorial, appropriate it, digest it, and make it a part of his mental body. It is a moral and intellectual tonic. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read it, but I ask to have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT BREEDS BOLSHEVISM?

"What breeds bolshevism?

"Hunger; injustice; persecution.

"And, resulting from these—anger.

"Get people mad, give them a grouch, at something or about something, and you have the germs of bolshevism.

"That's the way it was in Russia under the Czar.

"Everybody—literally everybody—was angry; had a grouch, generally a just grouch with good cause.

"To mention those who had grouches, one would have to run the whole roster of creeds, parties, professions, classes, races, cities, towns, districts.

"There was more Bolsheviki sentiment in Russia under the Czar than there is to-day under Lenine and Trotzky.

"As soon as the Czar went the more intelligent Russians lost their anger and set to work like sane men and good citizens to make a new Russia. They forgot old grudges; they cut themselves off the Bolsheviki list.

"There were others so unjustly treated, so downtrodden, so hopeless, so boiling with rage and hate they could not quench their feelings. Their grudges lived. They responded to the wild call of Lenine and Trotzky. They are the Bolsheviki of to-day.

"Had the Czar ruled wisely, justly, these grudges would not have arisen; he would be on his throne to-day.

"Wherever injustice was greatest in Russia, wherever people had the greatest cause for anger and the best reason for holding a grudge, there the Bolsheviki call found the largest following. Witness the sailors and the Jews.

"The poorest Bolsheviki in Russia is the peasant.

"In fact, he isn't a Bolsheviki at all.

"He hadn't been made so angry as had his city brothers, the factory workers and miners.

"The peasant, as soon as he got his own little slice of land, lost what anger he had against the former great landowners and settled down to enjoy his new-won possessions.

"It wasn't so easy for the factory worker and miner to get their rewards of revolution. They are still hungry, still uncomfortable—still Bolsheviki.

"Bolshevism, as it works out in Russia, is about nine-tenths revenge for past evils and one-tenth hope for a better world.

"Food, and warm, comfortable homes are the greatest enemies to Bolshevism. They are the only ones that can rout it.

"People can not be angry with a government, or an employer, under which they have plenty, under which they have good food and warm homes.

"Men don't leave good jobs, warm homes, happy families, and filled cupboards to carry a black flag, shoot machine guns, and face death in the cause of Bolshevism just for fun.

"The leaders of Bolshevism never create it.

"Bolshevism is not bred by speeches and arguments, but by hunger and injustice.

"Where Bolshevism is not bred, it will not thrive."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Now we will vote on the Senator's amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I just wish to say a word about this Oklawaha project. It has been before Congress several times, and I understand it has passed both Houses once and went out when we adopted a lump-sum appropriation.

This project has been very carefully examined by the engineers. The reports show that it was approved by the local engineer, Capt. J. R. Slattery—I know him well; he is one of the finest men I have ever known—by Col. Dan C. Kingman, afterwards Chief of Engineers and a general in the Army; by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors; and by the Chief of Engineers. I have looked into it as well as I can, and it meets my hearty approval. I believe it is a good project. It is true there is not a great deal of commerce upon it, but how it is possible to have commerce upon an unimproved river which is very shallow I do not understand. There is a great deal of commerce in the vicinity. I know it is impossible to have commerce on a railroad before the railroad is built or to have commerce upon an ordinary highway before the highway is built. A large portion of this stream is so shallow that it is practically impossible for boats to run upon it.

I wish to make just a brief statement about how conservative the engineers are, and I am glad the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has come into the Chamber. I want to call his attention to a little colloquy that occurred between us two days ago in regard to the number of projects and the percentages that were reported favorably and unfavorably by the engineers. I promised to get him the statement, and if he will turn to volume 2 of the three-volume report, beginning at page 2001, he will see that it is a very brief report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors dated July 20, 1918. On page 2003 he will note that the total investigations ordered by Congress from the date of the organization of the Mississippi River Commission in 1902 up to and inclusive of 1918, until the date of the report, was 2,220. That many reports had been ordered. One thousand nine hundred and thirty-one of these projects have been examined and reported upon. Of these 671 were favorable, 1,260 unfavorable, and the per cent of favorable reports was 34.7. You will note that in the right-hand column about the center of the page. I stated several days ago that about 60 per cent of the projects examined by the Board of Engineers and the engineers were unfavorably reported. This official and itemized report shows that 65.3 per cent of all projects examined by the engineers were reported upon unfavorably. It speaks for itself. I will ask that that table go in as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. RANSDELL. Now, I wish to call attention to another thing in connection with these reports. Most of them are not new projects at all; they are mere changes or modifications of old projects. A river is being improved or a harbor is being improved. Owing to the increase of commerce or of the greater draft of the steamboats or the ships, it becomes necessary to enlarge the harbor or to deepen the stream. The engineers are authorized and required to make a further examination with a view to a modification or enlargement and a very large percentage of these 2,220 surveys were modifications of old projects.

In the pending bill there are about 80 new projects so called. I have gone over the bill very carefully, and I find that of these new projects only 34 per cent are really new projects. The others are modifications of old projects. I have the table before me.

Real new projects in pending river and harbor bill.

Locality.	Amount carried in pending bill.	Total estimated cost.
Tenants Harbor, Me	$18,750	$18,750
Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, Del. and Md	3,000,000	8,000,000
Tangier Channel, Va	16,434	16,434
Newbegun Creek, N. C	5,000	5,000
Channel connecting Thoroughfare Bay and Cedar Bay, N.C.	9,000	9,000
Barataria Bay, La	32,000	61,700
Bayou des Cannes, La	.....	500
Brazos Island Harbor, Tex	66,000	66,000
Baudette Harbor, Minn	5,000	5,000
San Rafael Creek, Cal	27,300	27,300
Skamokawa Creek, Wash	1,800	1,800
Anacortes Harbor, Wash	89,000	89,000
Port Gamble Harbor, Wash	12,000	12,000
Nawiliwili Harbor, Hawaii	250,000	1,086,000
Suisun Bay Channel, Cal	64,500	64,500
Total	3,596,784	.....

That is a total of $3,596,784 of new projects in this bill, which carries a total for so-called new projects of $10,460,364. So when the engineers are called upon to examine these new projects they turn down a great percentage of them; they turn down practically two-thirds of them, and about two-thirds are mere modifications of old projects. I do not see that men could be very much more conservative than these men have been. I think these two tables will prove very enlightening.

Mr. President, just a word more as to the Oklawaha. This conservative Board of Engineers, which has the record I have just stated here, has through every one of its bodies approved most heartily this Oklawaha project. I think, Mr. President and Senators, we can safely follow them in making the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. If we have reached a vote on the amendment to the amendment, we should have a quorum here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Colt	Kenyon	Poindexter	Sutherland
Culberson	King	Pollock	Thomas
Cummins	Kirby	Ransdell	Trammell
Dillingham	Knox	Robinson	Underwood
Fletcher	La Follette	Shafroth	Vardaman
France	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gerry	Lewis	Sherman	Weeks
Gore	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
Harding	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Hardwick	Moses	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is absent on official business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce that Senators WALSH, KENDRICK, NUGENT, CURTIS, FERNALD, MCNARY, and ASHURST are detained upon the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RANSDELL. My colleague [Mr. GAY] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to Senators present that the pending item is the most indefensible and the most unjust provision in the whole river and harbor bill; and that is saying something.

Mr. President, this river, so called, is all within the boundaries of the State. If there is any reason why the Government of the United States should spend money upon that river for interstate commerce or any other commerce, I do not know of it.

Let me call the attention of Senators to the fact that rivers in the Western States have never been improved in any way by the Government; I mean rivers that are within the boundaries of States. Not only that, but rivers in the Western States on which a water power can be developed the Government of the United States will not allow such development without paying a royalty. If the power bill now in conference becomes a law, no power can be developed upon western rivers totally within the States unless a royalty is to be paid to the Government. But here we find a project totally within the State and the Government is asked to spend $100,000 this year upon it. Before it is completed there will have to be spent at least $1,000,000 upon it. Why this discrimination?

Mr. President, if this item remains in the bill, there is no earthly chance of eliminating any other item, no matter how indefensible.

Perhaps I may say that there will be added another project to the monuments of waste that have been called to the attention of the Senate so many times in the past, such rivers and inlets as the following: The inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort, N. C.; Coosa River, Ala.; St. Lucie Inlet, Fla.; Brazos River in Texas; Red River, Ark.; Arkansas River in Arkansas; the Tennessee River in Tennessee; the Fox River in Wisconsin. I could go on and enumerate many others, but those I have already called the attention of the Senate to are sufficient.

There was a law passed by Congress a few years ago reading as follows:

> The Chief of Engineers is directed to make a report upon any other projects, river or harbor, the further improvement of which, under present conditions, is undesirable, or in which modifications of the plans on projects should be made.

That law was passed upon a river and harbor bill for the very purpose of calling attention to the rivers and inlets I have just named.

Has there been any report received? None whatever. Are the appropriations being made for these very projects in this bill? Certainly, and they will continue to be made as long as Congress will vote the money, as it has done in the past.

It has been stated to-day, or at least intimated, that the river and harbor bill is justifiable, because it scatters the appropriations more widely than any other appropriation made by Congress. This I can not agree to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And the Senator might add that it tends for the creation of benefits of commerce that contribute to the well-being of the mass of the people.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection let me call attention to the fact that this bill calls for $100,000 for this river, with an ultimate estimated expenditure of over $1,000,000. The Government has already spent $98,000 upon it, and the larger part of that money was for the cutting of hyacinths in order to secure 1,760 tons of freight for the year 1916. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read the report, and yet you will find in it a recommendation that the money shall be expended, but there is not a word of evidence that will justify the expenditure of money basing it upon the amount of commerce that can possibly be developed. It is not interstate commerce, but local in its character.

I was very glad the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] called attention to the fact that connected with this improvement there seems to run through it all a real estate proposition. No one can read Mr. Young's letter without seeing that the principal object of starting the project was to make valuable a tract of land that had been improved by Mr. Young and Mr. Kyle.

Now, are we going into the question of improving rivers and inlets to enhance the value of a certain tract of land owned by a corporation or company, no doubt, that will make money out of it? The evidence shows that they want this improvement for another reason, that a certain piece of land should be drained, and if it is drained the value of it will be at least $250 an acre, but the suggestion is made that the benefited parties pay $10 an acre toward the draining of the land.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to correct the Senator. He is under a total misapprehension about this project. He does not understand it at all, as shown by the fact that he makes a statement here that the project was instigated in order to help out the development of a land enterprise along its borders. The fact is that Mr. Young never went to the Oklawaha River; there was no land development whatever there until after this project was approved by the engineers. It was in contemplation of its development and the completion of the project that people undertook these large enterprises close to the borders of the river, and they have waited all these years in order to be given that facility for moving their products that the Government promised to give them, in effect, because the engineers had approved of the project before they ever went there. What is the use of saying that the whole movement was initiated in order to help out landowners and land development? All this land development has taken place since the surveys were made, since the investigation and the studies were made, and since the report was submitted by the engineers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let me read what Mr. Young said. That is the best way to answer the Senator. On April 15, 1913, Mr. J. D. Young addressed a letter to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and this is what he said:

> In reference to the suggested improvement, for the joint purposes of navigation and reclamation on the Oklawaha River, Fla., I beg to say if a successful plan of drainage was coupled with the features of navigation—> whereby the large tracts of muck prairies north of Lake Griffin were made available for agricultural purposes, I think a just pro rata part of cost for the landowners in this section to pay would be $10 per acre for all lands thus successfully drained—that is to say, where the flood or overflows from the river is kept off of those lands, the landowner, of course, to take care of all surface drainage by lateral ditches, according to his own notions.

Note the word "navigation," with a commerce of 1,730 tons—

> As to the question of plans for the successful drainage of these lands, I would prefer not to offer my layman opinion. I am positive, however, from my knowledge of the situation, that a most successful reclamation can be embodied with the feature of navigation, and as owner of considerable of these lands I would be willing to pay the amount named above.

But you do not find any provision in the bill that there shall be $10 or any other amount paid by Mr. Young. There is $100,000 initial appropriation for the project to carry out just what Mr. Young asked for at that time.

The Senator from Iowa called attention to another part of this report showing conclusively that the opinion of Mr. Young was that the values of his tract of land would be increased if the project was undertaken and finished.

Mr. President, if we are going to undertake to improve or to spend money upon all the creeks in this country that are within a State, why should not the Western States claim similar appropriations? So long as I am in the Senate I shall never ask a dollar for such improvements in my State. I do not believe that it is right; I do not believe it can be justly defended. If we begin now, there is no telling where it will end. This is the proper time to stop it; and if the Senate will vote this item out, I think that hereafter there will be no such projects presented to Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Utah say how long this project has been pending before Congress in one form or another?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is eight years since it was first brought to the attention of Congress, but I can presently give the Senator the exact time.

Mr. FLETCHER. The report of the engineers in reference to the improvement is dated January, 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. Was that the first report?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the local engineer, Capt. Slattery, made his first report in December, 1911.

Mr. SMOOT. That is eight years ago, as I stated.

Mr. FLETCHER. There have been surveys ordered for the improvement. The river has been navigated for 50 years, if that is a matter of any interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is one other reason advanced now why this appropriation should be made, and that is that we ought to expend money upon the river so as to control railroad rates. The history of expending money upon rivers to control railroad rates is that the railroads can drive commerce off the river any time, unless transportation is controlled as to rates. That happens not only in this country; but take the great River Rhine, with railroads running on both sides of the river, with a commerce more than that of all of the commerce in all of the rivers of the Southern States many times over, and, if rates were not controlled by the government itself the railroads would take all of the commerce off the river, with the exception of floating logs and barges of sand and rock. That is about all the commerce that is carried on many of our rivers to-day.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Two members of the committee have told me that they were not present when this Oklawaha item was brought up in the committee. I should, therefore, like to ask the Senator from Utah if he believes that any amount of evidence or any amount of argument could ever defeat any item in a river and harbor bill after the item has been reported out of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the vote on this item will be a test of that question.

Mr. KENYON. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I think if this provision shall be voted in by the Senate of the United States it will be just as well for the Senator from Iowa or myself or any other Senator to save his breath in trying to eliminate any project in a river and harbor bill that may be reported by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator that that is true, if it can not be done in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. If this project shall be approved by the Senate of the United States, any project can be approved by it if it is reported from the committee.

The Senator from Iowa made a statement that two members of the committee were not present when this item was inserted in the bill. Those same members have told me that they were not present, and I expect at least those two members of the committee to vote against it.

Mr. President, I do not wish simply to stand here and take the time of the Senate; but if this item is agreed to by the Senate of the United States, I am going to give up all hope of ever eliminating any item that may be in the bill after it shall have been reported from the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I only want to add just a few words to what I have already stated about this project.

I am utterly surprised to learn of the attitude of the Senators who have spoken with regard to this item in the bill. It is perfectly astonishing to me. They evidently are influenced by preconceived views and impressions about the Oklawaha River, because in the effort to defeat river and harbor legislation that stream has been made the butt of jest and criticism for years past, originating in another body. There is absolutely no justification whatever for the condemnation by those Senators of this project. The statement is made that the river is entirely within a State, and that therefore the Federal Government ought not to spend a dollar on its improvement. That argument would apply to four-fifths of the items in this bill and in every previous river and harbor bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, then I want to say to the Senator from Florida, if that is true, that is the strongest argument that I have ever heard made by any Senator in the Senate of the United States against such bills.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is perfectly absurd to urge such an argument; it is utterly unreasonable. Why, I have not the patience to deal with such an argument. If I characterized it as it should be characterized, I should probably go outside of parliamentary rules.

The Hudson River is in a State; the Allegheny River is in a State. There are rivers provided for in this bill in California, in Oregon, in Washington, in every other State all through the West, which are confined within State lines where improvements must be made.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. But the rivers which the Senator from Florida has mentioned are navigable rivers.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a navigable river, and has been for 50 years navigated; it is not only navigable, but it is navigated.

Mr. THOMAS. A large river which has an immense commerce is very different from the many little streams. If the river of which the Senator from Florida is speaking is of the same class as those he has mentioned, then, of course, his argument is applicable.

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Senator will not deny that there are many rivers within States that are not navigable, but which are included in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not think so. There is not one. I can not imagine that there is such an inclusion in this bill anywhere. I deny that. I challenge the Senator to point out such an instance.

The Oklawaha River is a tributary of the St. Johns River; the St. Johns River is not an insignificant stream. It is 1½ miles wide for over 100 miles of its length and 27 feet deep now from the ocean to the docks at Jacksonville. The project, when completed, means 30 feet depth of that river from the ocean to Jacksonville. That river is over 250 miles long, all within the State. It is something of a river, and it is something of a commerce which moves on that river. It is 30 feet over the bar, and a ship can limp over that bar on the darkest night without any pilot, and can carry 30 feet up to the docks at Jacksonville, when a few bumps in the river are removed, as is now being done. This river, as I have said, is a tributary of the St. Johns River, and just as important a stream for the whole country as are the tributaries of the Delaware, the tributaries of the Hudson, or the tributaries of any other improved waterway leading to the highway of the ocean.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Or the tributaries of the main railroads?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator say how deep that river is to-day?

Mr. FLETCHER. As the report shows, the river has been in recent years obstructed somewhat by logs, which have been allowed to drift into it, to be unloaded on its banks and thrown into it in some way, and is shallow to a point where it is not fit for the use of boats that ought to be used on it and that are required for the commerce of the region. At certain seasons of the year it is too shallow to navigate with boats or barges that will move the commerce of the stream; but it is a navigable river. Boats have run on it for all these years, and, by putting in the lock at Lake Griffin, a lake that is 8 miles across, connecting with Lake Harris, which is over 20 miles across, and Lake Eustis, another beautiful lake, all composing a part of these tremendously important waterways, commerce can move down the St. Johns River and from there out to the world. A lock is needed at Lake Griffin, so that the water can be maintained at all seasons of the year to a depth of 7 feet. That is all that is required.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator deny the fact that the commerce on that river for 1916 was only 1,760 tons?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not surprised that the commerce is small, because the river needs improvement. Here is what the engineers say——

Mr. SMOOT. Was there ever a year in the history of that stream when the commerce was any more than that I have named?

Mr. FLETCHER. Here is what the report says:

> The commerce of the towns in the lake region during the past year was as follows—
>
> And the improvement of this waterway means the giving of water transportation to these towns:

Towns:	Tonnage.
Leesburg	32,364.5
Eustis	24,000
Mount Dora	4,043
Tavares	43,803
Tangerine	3,300
Lisbon	1,578
Total tonnage per annum	109,088.5

Mr. SMOOT. That is carried by railroad.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is carried now from those cities and not moved by water, but it would all be in a position to be moved on this waterway if the improvement were made. All of this commerce was hauled by rail. The water-borne commerce of the lower river for the calendar year 1910 amounted to 99,188 tons. That is the report of the engineers. The development of commerce can not be expected until the proper facilities are provided.

But the argument was made about the Oklawaha River—and there is where the false impression, in my judgment, originated—that it flows through a marshy, submerged prairie, an utterly worthless country, and that there could not be any cultivation of lands along its borders or any development of any sort because the whole prairie was overflowed. That was the argument when these reports first came in. It develops now that there was no foundation for that argument, because, as a matter of fact, it has been demonstrated that in that prairie there are over 20,000 acres of as fertile land as can be found in this country, all susceptible of cultivation. How do I know that? Because 1,000 acres of it in one compact body is under cultivation to-day and produces 100 bushels of corn per acre and 200 bushels of potatoes per acre in the same year without the use of fertilizer at all, and then follow with hay and other substantial crops. That has actually taken place on the banks of the river. Therefore the argument that this river ran through a swampy country that was submerged and could not be cultivated at all failed; and gentlemen now in reply—since it has been demonstrated that there was no truth whatever in that statement, since it has been demonstrated that there are lands amounting to over 20,000 acres along the borders of the stream fertile and actually capable of producing these staple crops, such as corn, potatoes, and hay, three crops a year in all—say it is the business of the landowners to improve this river.

Now we come back to the proposition. It can no longer be said that the river flows through an impossible country or a swampy area that has no value, because actual experience has demonstrated to the contrary since these reports first came in. The first report made by Maj. Slattery in 1911 was in favor of this project. It finally got up to the Board of Engineers. The Board of Engineers sent a special committee down there, as shown by the report. Do not take my word for it. Read the report on page 2, from which I quote, as follows:

> These reports have been referred, as required by law, to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and attention is invited to its accompanying report, dated December 3, 1913. In connection with its consideration of the subject the board visited the locality on April 13, 1913—
> The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, in Washington, visited the locality—
> held a public hearing near Leesburg, and made a personal inspection of the stream. The board is in general accord with the views of the district officer and the division engineer regarding the advisability of the proposed improvement, but it believes that the lock-chamber dimensions proposed should be increased from 30 feet wide by 125 feet long to 36 feet wide by 160 feet, usable length. The estimated cost of the project, as thus modified, is $733,000, and $12,000 per annum for maintenance. The board expresses the opinion that the present and prospective commerce is sufficient to justify the United States in undertaking this improvement.

Then follow some conditions as to local cooperation, which we adopt. The local interests are to put on boats that are to connect with Lake Harris, and that sort of thing; and we approve of those conditions when we adopt the project upon the conditions set forth in the report. There is local cooperation, and there will be local assistance there to complete this highway of commerce.

The board went there, visited the ground, and then made this report; yet Senators here undertake to criticize this project after that personal inspection by the members of the Board for Rivers and Harbors. They come back here and approve of the project. Then the report goes to the Chief of Engineers, and he approves it; it comes to Congress, and the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors adopts it; it goes to the House, and the House adopts it and sends it to the Senate; the Senate committee adopts it, and it comes here. That was the year when we had a lump-sum appropriation of $20,000,000 to take the place of the usual river and harbor bill; and that is why this project with others went, for the time being, by the board. That is the history of it.

Now, again, the Commerce Committee reports this amendment. There is no more meritorious project in the whole bill. Senators say they want to put the Senate on record regarding this item. I want to do that, too, for there is no vote that I shall cast in connection with this bill of which I will be as proud as I will be of my vote for this project. Senators do not know what they are taking about when they undertake to criticize and denounce this item as they have done here. There is no ground whatever for the criticism. It is a waterway which is 94, plus 32, plus 4 miles in length, a total of 130 miles. It connects with the great lakes I have mentioned; it affords an outlet for the commerce of that entire lake region. The magnificent orange groves on the borders of these lakes furnish tons and tons of freight that would move down the Oklawaha River.

Along the banks of the river are thousands of acres of citrus groves. Along the banks of these lakes that will reach this river, and along the banks of the river itself, are these thousands of acres of the most fertile land that can be found in this country, and actually to-day producing staple crops such as I have mentioned.

To say, then, that this is a stream of no consequence, flowing through a region of swamps, and without any merit, is perfectly unreasonable. There is not the slightest foundation for it. It ought to have been improved long ago. To say that there is a land speculation about it is equally ridiculous. These people went in there after Maj. Slattery had reported in favor of this improvement and bought these alleged-to-be-worthless swamp and overflowed lands along the banks of this river. They have gone on at their own expense to dig canals and to develop those lands. It is perhaps true that this enterprise was all undertaken upon the faith that this improvement would be made, and that they would be able to get their products to market by this river, but they have gone on anyhow, and now they are forced to haul these products from 5 to 10 miles over these sandy roads, at enormous cost and expense, in order to reach a railroad which fixes rates on the products much higher than it would fix if there were competitive water transportation.

I am not saying that we ought to improve a lot of waterways in order to control railroad rates. I am not claiming that, but I do submit that it is a material thing for the Congress to consider whether the improvement of a waterway will be of benefit to a community, and that benefit may rest upon whether or not there will be a reduction of freight rates or freight burdens upon those communities.

For instance, Sanford is on the St. Johns River, 210 miles south of Jacksonville. The Oklawaha River flows into the St. Johns River about 95 miles south of Jacksonville. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad runs from Jacksonville to Sanford. Both this railroad and the Seaboard Air Line connect Jacksonville with Leesburg. Sanford, being on the river, has water competition. In this report Gen. Sackett gives the freight rates from Sanford to Jacksonville, as compared to the freight rates from Leesburg to Jacksonville, practically the same distance, handled by the same railroad, Sanford having water competition because it is on the river, Leesburg not having water competition because the Oklawaha River, which goes to Leesburg, is not improved.

These are the existing freight rates for 100 pounds between these two places and Jacksonville, Sanford, and Leesburg:

First class: Leesburg, 68 cents; Sanford, 37 cents.
Second class: Leesburg, 62 cents; Sanford, 32 cents.
Third class: Leesburg, 57 cents; Sanford, 29 cents.
Fourth class: Leesburg, 45 cents; Sanford, 24 cents.
Fifth class: Leesburg, 38 cents; Sanford, 19 cents.
Sixth class: Leesburg, 33 cents; Sanford, 16 cents.

Thus it will be seen that the freight rates on all classes of freight from Leesburg average nearly twice the rates from Sanford, practically the same distance from Jacksonville, the one having water competition because it is on the St. Johns River, and the other not having water competition because the Oklawaha River is not sufficiently improved to give any substantial competition. Now, that is the difference.

But in addition to Leesburg this waterway, as I say, will connect with all these other important towns and villages and cities, beautiful cities, and prosperous communities all about them, groves, truck farms, nurseries, kaolin mines. There are on the borders of these lakes the finest beds of clay for making hard-surfaced roads that can be found anywhere in this country, and that clay might reach other communities through this waterway if it is improved. I have traveled in automobiles over roads made from that clay as fine as any roads about Washington. It is a rare and valuable product, but it can not be hauled out by railroad to other communities. It could move on this waterway.

With all those things contributing to the commerce of the river when the river is improved, it seems to me it is almost wicked to sit here and allow this important highway of commerce, or what might be made an important highway of commerce, to go unimproved. The engineers would have been absolutely neglectful of their duty if they had not indorsed and recommended this improvement. There was no escape from it once they went there and looked over the situation. They did make the indorsement; and, as I say, it has been passed on in the other body and passed on by this committee. Of course it is possible that there were two members of the committee not present when this item was considered. It is impossible to keep the full membership of any big committee, especially a committee as large as this, of some 20 members present all the time. We were considering this bill for some 10 days, day after day, item by item, every single item in it, and there were times when two or more members were not present; but the item is reported here.

I submit that it would be absolutely discriminatory and unjust, and a violation of every rule that has been enforced by Congress heretofore, to require that the State of Florida or local interests must contribute one-half of this amount. I never heard of such a thing as a State being required to do that in any measure. In some instances the bill provides that the local interests shall contribute a certain proportion. In certain instances they have contributed as much as one-half. In the case of Houston, Tex., they propose to contribute one-half, and that is sometimes done; but there is no reason for putting that burden upon the local interests along the Oklawaha River, as proposed by this amendment.

I therefore hope that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee will be defeated.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator know why this project was not included in the bill by the House?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no idea. I do not think it was brought to the attention of the committee or urged there. I do not know about that.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator, I think, left the inference by his remarks that it had been approved by the House, but he referred to past years?

Mr. FLETCHER. Past years—1914.

Mr. KENYON. Not this year.

Mr. FLETCHER. In 1914 it was approved by the House and passed by the House, and then it came over here and went into our bill as we reported it to the Senate; but the Senator will recall that subsequently we agreed upon a lump-sum appropriation of $20,000,000, which took the place of that bill. That is the history of it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Utah stated that the western rivers were not asking for any appropriations. I will ask the Senator from Florida if we have not made some very nice appropriations in this bill for the Sacramento, Feather, San Joaquin, and Mokelumne Rivers, in the State of California, which are entirely in that State, and which carry $222,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is so.

Mr. RANSDELL. Also, if we have not made a pretty good appropriation for the Coquille, Coos, Siuslaw, and Yaquina Rivers, in the State of Oregon; also, a very good appropriation for the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon, which carries a very considerable appropriation; also for a number of rivers in the State of Washington. They are all in the West.

While I am on my feet I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, that there are a number of rivers wholly within the limits of certain States which carry an enormous commerce, beneficial to the whole Nation. The Hudson River is entirely within the State of New York, and it benefits the entire United States. It is one link in the great connecting chain which the State of New York has built between Lake Erie and that river. All the western country gets the benefit of it. The lower end of the Mississippi is entirely in my State for about 250 miles. It serves a very great commerce. The Standard Oil Co. has an enormous refinery at the city of Baton Rouge, two hundred and odd miles above the mouth, and deep-sea vessels go to that refinery. The Allegheny River, for which we appropriate a million dollars in this bill, is wholly within the State of Pennsylvania. We have not made a wiser appropriation. There is a big commerce on that river. There are a number of rivers in this country which are entirely within one State, and yet their commerce is interstate; it is national; it is beneficial to the whole country. We could not possibly follow such a rule as that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am a member of the Commerce Committee, and I regret to feel compelled to oppose an amendment that has been reported by the committee. I want to support the recommendations of the committee whenever I possibly can.

As the chairman has said, it is impossible for members to attend all of the meetings of the committee. While the Commerce Committee was considering this measure, a subcommittee of which I was a member had imposed upon it the duty of considering an appropriation bill, and so it was impossible for me to be present at all the meetings of the Commerce Committee. I was not there when this amendment and two or three other amendments putting new projects on the bill were adopted. I am sorry that I can not agree with the chairman of the committee as to the importance or the necessity or the justification of putting this project on the bill, but I can not.

I do not, however, attach any importance to the suggestion that because a stream is wholly within a State appropriations should not be made for it. The Constitution gives Congress authority over navigable streams, regardless of whether they are wholly within a State or partly in one State and partly in another; and so I can see no force in the objection to making an appropriation for the improvement of this river simply because it is entirely within the boundaries of the State of Florida. That does not appeal to me at all. As the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] have well said, there are many streams wholly within certain States that have tremendous commerce and for which we are fully justified in making appropriations.

I have one fundamental objection to incorporating this project in the bill as it is reported by the committee. I have always taken the position that in the case of a project of any considerable magnitude, at any rate, and, I think, as to every project that we decide ought to be taken up, provision should be made for its completion, unless there is a very strong showing that it can be completed in units, giving to the Government and to the commerce affected decided benefits by partial expenditures.

This project is going to cost over $733,000. That is the project that we are adopting with this item. This $100,000 is simply the beginning. It is a piecemeal appropriation, and it is following a piecemeal method of carrying on this work; and all experience shows that is the most extravagant and expensive way to carry on work of this kind. If this project were deemed desirable, provision should be made for its completion, either by the appropriation of all the money that is required for its completion or by a partial appropriation, with an authorization to make contracts and finish the work. That is the most economical and expeditious way to carry on these projects.

I have always been opposed to this piecemeal way of doing things. That is one of my main objections to the item incorporated in the bill. Even if I believed it to be a justifiable and meritorious project, I would not be in favor of putting it in this bill in this way, and would not be in favor of putting it in the bill until we could provide for its completion.

The action of the House in a former Congress has been referred to, and I think it has been pointed out that this item was included in the bill at one time. That may be true; but it has not been put in this bill by the other body of Congress. The chairman of the committee suggests that it was not considered by the House. I think the Senator is mistaken in that.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, I did not mean to say that that was the case. I said I did not know about that. I do not know whether it was considered, or whether it was presented there, or not; but the Senator will remember that during the last two years we have not carried any new projects except war-emergency projects, and that is one reason why I think it has not been considered before since 1914, because after that we adopted the policy of appropriating for maintenance and for necessary improvements of existing projects, and only those projects were added as new projects which were considered essential in the prosecution of the war, until we reached this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have the report made on the bill in the House, and it is reasonable to assume that this item was considered by the House committee and that the House committee did not believe it came within the scope of the policy that it felt it should follow in putting new projects on the bill. They did not say that it was not meritorious; I do not want to leave the impression that I think they made an adverse report upon it; but they decided, as I understand it, that it would be their policy to put certain new projects on the bill; and that in determining the ones that should be put on they would compare the merits of the various projects; and they put on the bill only the projects that they deemed to be most meritorious, and those that in their judgment should be taken up under the present conditions and at the present time. They recognize the state of the finances of the Government; they indicate that they took into consideration the burdens placed upon our people, and they wanted to make these burdens as light as possible, consistent with what they believed to be the best interests of the country. They say here in their report:

> The committee were confronted with the proposition of adopting some new projects in this bill. Very few new projects have been adopted since the river and harbor acts of 1916. The last two river and harbor acts were enacted during the progress of the war, and only such new projects were contained therein as were intimately associated with the prosecution of the war and so recommended by the Secretary of War. After mature deliberation the committee concluded that the public interest demanded the adoption of new projects which were meritorious and urgent.

They not only decided that any project in order to be adopted should be meritorious, which, of course, would be taken without question, but that there should be urgent need as to why it should be taken up now. They state:

> The war has acutely emphasized the necessity of additional instrumentalities of transportation, and our waterways afford the most practicable and available method of adding to those facilities.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to have the impression left that the House considered the item and rejected it. The Senator does not go that far, but the implication might lead to that extent. I am quite sure, I can say to the Senator, and my information comes from a source that I can not question at all, that the item was not presented to the House at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to read now from the report of that committee, which indicates, to my mind at any rate, that the information which the Senator has is incorrect. Here is what the report of the committee says:

> There are about 200 new projects upon which favorable reports have been submitted by the Secretary of War.

This is a new project, upon which a favorable report had been submitted by the Secretary of War. It must have been included in the 200, and this is what the committee says:

> All these reports were carefully studied and analyzed, and about 70 new projects were selected therefrom.

Mr. President, I can not escape the conclusion from that statement, made by the chairman of the committee in submitting his bill to the House, that this project was one of the 200 that was carefully studied and anaylzed before they determined upon the projects they were going to include in the bill. So the House committee did not consider this as one of the projects of sufficient urgency to warrant them in putting it in the bill.

As I said, I do not want to give the impression that the House rejected the project as not meritorious, but they evidently did not consider it of sufficient urgency to insert it in the bill.

Of course, their action in not considering it sufficiently urgent to put it on this bill would not preclude us from putting in a project that we considered urgent and sufficiently urgent to warrant us in putting it in, but when we come to the merits of the project itself, I do not see that it presents any case of urgency at all. I am not impressed very much with its merits either, or that it would be worthy of being incorporated in this bill in ordinary times under ordinary conditions, but there certainly is not anything which shows that it is especially urgent from the standpoint of the Government's welfare or the local development and need that would be met by it.

The reports with reference to it are peculiar, to say the least. In the first place, we are acting upon a report made by the Secretary of Commerce upon a survey made away back in 1911, seven or eight years ago. In the statement made by the Chief of Engineers he said:

> The commerce of the stream now amounts to about 100,000 tons per annum.

This was January 7, 1914. I do not know what he means by that, in view of some facts that I am going to call attention to in a moment. An indorsement by the Board of Engineers on April 2, 1912, says this:

> Except perhaps for a small amount of local commerce there is none by water in the upper section of the river, but on the lower river it is reported as amounting to nearly 100,000 tons, about 80,000 tons of which consists of logs.

You do not need any great development of canal or of waterway to float logs down, especially of the size that they are in the southern section of the country.

Here is a statement contained in volume 1 of the report of the engineers for 1918, showing the commerce on the stream. It does not conform to the statement made in this report, or if it does it shows a tremendous falling off in commerce immediately after 1912, when it was stated there were about 100,000 tons, of which 80,000 were logs. This states that in 1913 the tons of freight on this river were 14,622. Then, for 1914 there was quite an improvement; the tonnage was 34,420 tons. In 1915 it was 29,393 tons. Then there comes a tremendous falling off. I do not imagine from the statement made with reference to the character of business and the character of commerce on this stream and the general character of the country and the resources and the industries that the war had very great effect upon the business there. Yet in 1916 the tonnage had gone down from 29,000 tons to 15,864 tons, and for 1917 there is a still further decrease in the tonnage to 11,265 tons.

Yet, Mr. President, we are asked to begin the construction of a project that upon the estimates of the engineers will involve at least $733,000. The experience generally is that projects cost far more than the estimates. So I think we can safely say that in the adoption of this item we are inaugurating a million-dollar project for a 6-foot channel to carry farm produce and garden produce and float logs along a stream where the tonnage now is only a little over 11,000 tons.

Of course, there might be a good deal of this tonnage carried by water if there was a sufficient channel, but is that a sufficient warrant to us to appropriate millions of dollars for the improvement of various streams? The engineers say there is so much tonnage of business at this town and so much tonnage of business at that town and so much tonnage of business at another town, but that it is all carried by rail.

Mr. President, if that argument is to appeal to us to appropriate money here for the improvement of streams, we will be appropriating for practically every stream throughout the country, whether it is navigable or not. I have never thought about asking for appropriations for improving for navigation purposes the Yakima River in the State of Washington. It empties into the Columbia, that is made navigable to the mouth of the Yakima River, which connects with the ocean. Yet that stream runs through a valley that produced this last year agricultural products valued at almost $40,000,000. There is not any way of getting those products out except by rail, and yet it is all tributary to the Yakima River. There is far more water running in the Yakima River than there is running in the Oklawaha.

Mr. President, according to this report and according to the engineers, there is not enough water to furnish facilities for navigation without the construction of dams and locks. We have an abundance of water in the Yakima River; it would need no locks and dams to hold it and raise it so that we could have a sufficient depth, but that is what they seem to want here. But, Mr. President, that would not be any justification for endeavoring to make the Yakima a navigable stream for the carrying of these products to market, as large as they are.

The Board of Engineers has recommended this project, and yet it is a peculiar report, to say the least of it. They do not seem to be very enthusiastic over it. You can not get very much in this report to indicate that they were really very enthusiastic over it. In the first place they say:

> The board was not convinced by the data presented that the United States would be justified in undertaking this improvement at the cost involved and interested parties were so informed and given an opportunity of presenting their views.

Then the board went down and made a personal examination, but there is not a thing in this report which indicates what they found from the personal examination that convinced them of the importance of the project and the merits of it. They do say this as to one suggestion that was made to them when they went there:

> It was stated by one of the interested parties that a modified plan of improvement might be devised which would afford navigation and at the same time drain and make available for cultivation large areas of land similar to that now under improvement by Kyle and Young.

They directed the local engineer to look into that proposition to see whether or not it would be wise to incorporate that in the project, and I make no criticism of that. I think that was all right. If in the development of these projects other interests can be benefited without any more expense to the Government, I see no objection to the Government conforming its projects and its plans so as to meet such a situation as that. But the local engineer reported that to do what was suggested here would entail a modification of the project so as to make the expense to the Government many thousands of dollars more than it otherwise would be. So they did not approve that. Then they go on to say:

> The lock chamber dimensions proposed by the district officer, as stated above, were 30 feet by 125 feet. Believing that these dimensions were too small to provide for the commence that might be expected to develop on this waterway in the future, and that the estimates in some respects were inadequate, the board secured additional data from the district officer, and a revised estimate * * *. The modified estimate is $733,000 as against $616,000 submitted in the original report.

There is nothing thus far that indicates what special information was given to the board in order to convince it that its opinion that this was not a desirable project was erroneous. Then they say, and this seems to be about the only reason that one can gather from this report as to why they changed their minds—

> There seems to be a very general demand for this improvement and a firm belief that it would result in a very marked development throughout the adjacent country and create a commerce of considerable magnitude.

Mr. President, you can not find a community that has a possible development of a project that would involve the expenditure of large sums of money by the Government where there is not a general demand for it in that locality.

Then they go on to refer to a large section of rich and fertile country tributary. That must have been brought out in the first hearing. That must have been brought out in the report of the local engineer. Then it is stated that "under present conditions there is a congestion of freight" and that "transportation of freight is hampered." Those things must have been brought out by the local engineer. Those things must have been before this board before it reported that it was not convinced as to the merit of this project. Then they say:

> It is believed that the present and prospective commerce is sufficient to warrant the United States in undertaking this improvement along the lines proposed by the district officer at a total estimated cost of $733,000 and $12,000 annually for maintenance.

Provided that certain conditions are fulfilled.

Mr. President, I can see nothing in these reports that indicates any special benefit that is coming to commerce or to the United States from the further improvement of this stream. It is not to be overlooked, and it has already been referred to, that we have spent nearly $100,000 already on this river, with the result that the commerce has greatly diminished rather than increased, whether it may be attributable to that expenditure or not. It is a fact that, according to the report of the engineer, a commerce of 100,000 tons in 1912 had dwindled to 11,000 tons in 1917. Yet we have expended nearly $100,000 in the improvement of the stream.

Mr. President, the engineers do not recommend this way of carrying on this project. They recognize the merit of the principle I first suggested with reference to matters of this kind, that it should not be done by piecemeal appropriations, but that provisions should be made under which and by which the project can be completed within a reasonable time, and they say:

> The first appropriation should be $175,000, and subsequent appropriations so made as to complete the work within a period of four years.

Mr. President, there is not any provision here that will insure the completion of this project within four years. There is not any provision in the bill which insures the rapid and economic carrying on of this project. In my judgment, if this project should be taken on at all, we should appropriate $175,000 and authorize contracts for the balance. But, Mr. President, I do not believe that there is any showing here as to any urgency for the taking on of this proposition. I can not see very much merit in the project under any conditions, but I am willing to withhold a definite and fixed judgment upon that until the future. I am satisfied that there is no justification whatever in putting this project on the bill; that the project is not so urgent and not so meritorious as to warrant it. Furthermore, whenever we do take this project on we ought to provide for its economical and prompt completion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have read this amendment as carefully as I can, and such material as I can gather that is pertinent to it. The letter referred to in the document read by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would cover about 15,000 acres of improvement. It is estimated by the writer, Mr. Young, that there is a benefit of $10 per acre as a result of this improvement. That would be about $150,000 which would inure to private benefit. Ordinarily private benefits are distributed over the property improved. I believe it ought to be done in a case like this. If the Government appropriates anything, it ought to be only a part.

I know there are many meritorious undertakings where the private owner ought not to be compelled to bear the entire cost. At least, however, there ought to be an apportionment of the costs. There is no attempt at apportionment here. It is simply to get the benefit at the Government expense, like so many of these undertakings.

This bill contains many old friends. When I read it alongside of the bills of several years ago, many of those old friends, it is true, are absent. My regrets, however, are tempered with the knowledge that they are not dead. They merely sleepeth. They will emerge when normal times return and we are free from the menace of war, in all their primeval glory, increased in number and vigor. They will be restored from their hibernation to increased activity, and they will come again with literally hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars of appropriations for those antique friends now absent from the bill. There are enough of them here to stamp it as unworthy in its entirety, as being condemned by the bad sufficiently to kill all the good.

If it be an improvement to commerce, then I quite agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that it all ought to be provided for in a connected way, that the appropriations should be made in an entirety, so that the engineers may plan the work and know where it begins and where it ends. As it now is it is a mere experiment, built by chance, and appropriated by piecemeal. All such appropriations have no end. They are like the poet's brook:

Men may come and men may go,
But these appropriations go on forever.

Out of the many millions that are expended—and we are soon approaching the billion dollar mark—on the river and harbor appropriations, not one great public improvement ever completed has risen to the level of its prediction.

Let me refer to one such in my own State, known as the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Nearly $8,000,000 has been expended in that undertaking. To-day it is not a highway of commerce. During the war it was not a highway of commerce, either in winter or summer, when ice locked or when smiling under the summer sun; there was no tonnage on that channel worthy of the expenditure.

The figures in 1915, for instance, the last that I have available on the desk, show that the commercial traffic on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, sometimes known as the Hennepin improvement, was a total of 11,279 tons; that is, carried both ways. The Government tonnage was 20,997 tons, making a total of 32,276 tons for that year. If I take 5 per cent as the rate on the original expenditure of $7,600,000, there would be earned on that 5 per cent investment a total interest of $380,000 annually. If I take the commercial tonnage carried on this canal of 11,279 tons, I find that it cost $33.60 a ton for every commercial ton that was carried over the canal in 1915.

In 1916 it was no better, and in 1918, last summer and fall, it was a mere rendezvous for basket picnickers. Wherever there was shade along the bank, wherever its current promised good fishing, there the people congregated not for commercial purposes but for amusement and recreation.

I might paraphrase the distinguished woman in history, who, shortly before she was beheaded, lamented: "Oh, liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

Oh, commerce, in all these numerous appropriations appealed for here, Mr. President, what crimes are committed in its name! Their number is legion; their appropriations increase and they have risen to a bad eminence.

Men telegraph to me to help on levee improvements, just as this improvement will be, for private benefit. I can not do so, even though they be my own constituents. They are along the Mississippi River. Some of them have the right idea. If they can not get help from public authority, they form drainage districts, levee districts, and by taxation distributing the benefits on the property improved, they issue bonds, levy taxes, and make other improvements out of private means. The land gets the benefit. It is fertile land. The deposits left by the overflows make it the most inexhaustible character of soil known. I know of some of this land that has been cultivated in my own State for nearly 180 years, and still it is fertile and produces crops. The American Bottom, on the Illinois side, opposite Missouri, has been cultivated from the time the French first came and settled in that province. But such improvements ought to be made by private means. Such lands, when reclaimed from floods and overflows, are productive. They will raise the best crops in the world. The Government does not get the benefit; the owners of the land do.

If I take the entire tonnage of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, Government and commercial, a total of 32,276 tons, it costs for the entire number of tons $11.70 per ton on a 5 per cent interest basis upon the initial cost of $7,600,000. That is the highest freight rate which is paid in the world and it is utterly unjustified by anything either now or hereafter.

Not long ago—released January 31, 1919—our Director General of Railways published an annual report. There are many things in this report which I should greatly like to comment upon, but I am anxious to save time. Among other things not contained in the report is the fact that he has diverted about $12,000,000 of the legitimate earnings of the steam railways to promote waterways, to make improvements, to buy terminals, to erect proper apparatus and accommodations at the terminals, to buy barges, tugs, boats, and so forth, for the purpose of improving waterway transportation.

The Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf is the best waterway in the world, taking it in its present condition, miles below the chain of rocks south of St. Louis. There at low water the chain of rocks thrown up by the earthquake of 1811, reaching from the State of Missouri over into southern Illinois, impedes river traffic at low water. Unless those rocks are blown up, at low water steamboats drawing a great deal of water can not get across. Ordinarily there is not much trouble there. But from Cairo to the Gulf there is the best waterway known. It is practically paralleled on both sides by steam railways, especially on the one side by the Illinois Central. The steamboats, with this great line of waterway traffic open for the year, have, however, steadfastly lost this traffic. What used to be 3 miles of steamboats tied up at the levee at St. Louis are confined to a few, which one can count on the fingers of one hand, and the whole traffic has decayed.

It is said that it is very unfair that the railways should have entered into destructive competition. Why should the Government undertake to interfere with the laws of transportation? Why should it undertake to impose upon anybody a more expensive transportation? Oh, it is said, water competition will reduce the price of freight on steam roads. Well, if the Government can not reduce it now, when it has power, what possible reason is there to suppose it would reduce it at any other time? Mr. McAdoo continues here, saying:

Hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended by the Nation, the States, and citizens for the purpose of developing our inland waterways and for the construction of canals. Thousands of miles of rivers, canals, lakes, and bays are ready to assist in moving our products. These waterways, with the exception of the Great Lakes, are not being extensively used.

The Mississippi River has been ready ever since the white man came to this hemisphere; ever since the great Mississippi Valley was settled. Since the railways have been built; since the steam roads have been carrying freight in every direction, the Mississippi River has been ready; it has been opened; and nobody has profitably put a tow of barges there, even in this day of multiplied internal-combustion engines, where a barge can be self-propelled, and is not required to be taken in tow; but it has developed no traffic. Many associations of public-spirited gentlemen—Mr. Kavanaugh, of St. Louis, and many others—have had river meetings, have proclaimed its merits, and have endeavored to secure the necessary capital to improve river traffic, but in all that time no improvement has been made worthy of note here. The channel has been there, but private enterprise, that is more vigilant and observing than any other form of undertaking, has steadfastly neglected to avail itself of what is claimed here as a very necessary public improvement, to be aided by the Government and by such appropriations. Mr. McAdoo continues:

It has seemed to me evident that by developing transportation on the waterways and coordinating and articulating them with a unified railway system, we shall bring about a correct solution of the rail-water controversy, which has been in progress for 50 years. This is possible with the railways under Federal control. I doubt if any of our rivers or canals will become active factors of transportation if the railroads are turned back to private control. The old methods of railway competition with the waterways doubtless will be revived and the waterway experiment may not be able to survive that competition.

Anything in the transportation world that can not survive competition does not deserve to survive. Why should the nurturing hand of the Government be reached out to support something that can not support itself? Will it be a benefit? It is bound to burden the Public Treasury. Does it help the general mass of people for the Government to tax its property owners, its active portion of the population, to support a dwindling form of transportation that never was able to support itself and never did become a material factor in the transportation world since locomotives were invented and put upon rails.

That is not the only vision which the Director of Railways has. He couples it up with the Government ownership for five years or permanently, possibly, of the railways in order that every community which is now engaged in promoting river and harbor bills may join in keeping the railways for five years or forever. There are enough improper influences joined with this bill now, Mr. President, without appealing to others; but it is the same old story. I do not wish to take much time on this particular amendment, but I am reminded that there is a tremendous combination always on these bills. Otherwise they could not live a moment; they would wither under criticism or they would fade away under the superb nonsense that attends their framing and passage. If it were not for all of these things together they would not live in this Chamber 24 hours.

In union there's strength. All for one and one for all is the slogan that inspires and invigorates this annual foray on the defenseless Treasury. See the clans gather from afar and march with the appropriation quickstep, a glad light beaming from each hungry patriot's eye. Everyone can see by the dawn's early light the millions that gleam in the logroller's sight, while the creeks and the bayous and frog ponds galore make the taxpayers swear and feel painfully sore, the sandbars and sawyers, the snags and the scows, the Congressmen's schemes and the engineers' rows, the dredges and shovels, the dikes and the dams spend enough cash to break two Uncle Sams. The troop blithely gathers from hill and from plain, from mountain peaks, snowcapped again and again, down from alkali dust, from sagebrush and pine, they gather their cohorts, line upon line; they move down together, one seems but a dab, but when all march along to the loot step of grab, a fearful procession gaining strength as they come, it's the I. W. W.'s, the Bolshevist bum of all legislation that unravels our roll, depletes our exchequer, and gravels our soul, hangs on the majestical rivers that flow from the far north and their mantles of snow, that run by the wheat field and the corn in its rows and ripples along where the cotton boll blows; they sap and they burden, they dog and deface the Great Father of Waters in grafting disgrace; their impudent face in desert and swamp is everywhere seen as they brazenly romp from valley to sea, from prairie to lake as the rivers and harbors the lawmakers rake.

With apologies to Walt Mason, I now again fall into commonplace prose.

The ancient and more or less honorable pursuit of logrolling never produced so robust and expensive a progeny as this compound plexus of some good and much evil. They reverse the laws of population, for the younger exceed the elder in size and strength and they are brought forth in war, famine, and pestilence with unvarying regularity. At times they inspire in the observer a sentiment of awe like a convulsion of nature in the periodical reappearance of the bill propelled by an unseen but irresistible force across the stage of this Senate. No one's name is ever attached to the hydraheaded financial miscarriage. Nothing arrests its progress. It moves with the calm serenity of fate. It looks neither to the right nor the left, but heads for its goal heedless of environments and protests. Born in committees and subcommittees in the cavernous depths of nowhere in particular, at the appointed time it emerges upon the committee table an impudent foundling and a predestined orphan from the beginning.

It is impervious to criticism and the more it is banged about and cuffed and cursed the bigger it grows. At last it bursts the narrow limits of the committee room defying the world, the flesh and all the fallen angels it confidently stalks forth into this chamber. The United States Senate is as helpless as Frankenstein before his weird monster evolved in the uncanny chemistry of the novelist's brain. Editors have exhausted their vocabularies and their wits to check it. It bears legions of scars inflicted by hardy Congressmen. Over them all it moves unabashed with the stolid unconcern of a steam roller and the nervous temperament of a British tank. It leaves the knights of the paste pot and shears flabby and speechless. The statesmen gaze at the satanic apparition with disgust and silent amazement. It out-Herod's their worst and reduces them to servile inaction. The public condemns it and it has no friends visible in the seats of the mighty. It is an enigma and a mystery, the conundrum of the generation and the despair of the frugal and industrious. It marches with unconcern, void of scruple or conscience, to the public coffers, seizes its millions and sinks back into the oozelike depths as an antediluvian monster of a prehistoric age. No one mourns its departure, for everybody knows it will come again from nowhere and seize the National Treasury ad infinitum. It is the joint product of that fearful chamber of horrors known as the Board of Engineers and the American candidate for office. What one can not contribute, the other does, and between them the offspring becomes the potential villainy of later days.

So regular are the visits of this nameless pillager if it should fail to appear it would be deemed that the body politic was in a bad way, indeed, and that it boded some strange eruption to the State. Some doctors of the applied science of statecraft have even intimated the river and harbor bill is like a carbuncle. It is much better to have the humors come to a head and get rid of them than to have them frisking about one's circulatory system. Another theory was submitted to me by a doctor of divinity, a most learned man, a predestinarian and firm believer in original sin. This bill he regarded as an inevitable evil sent by an all-wise Providence to fit us by our struggles with it for a more perfect life hereafter. I am disposed to accept the theological solution of this cryptic scourge of mankind.

If, in the fullness of time the sun of our beloved Republic shall, like that of Ninevah and Tyre, sink to rise no more, the last voices heard in the twilight of history, when the dust of ages is beginning to settle on this domed and pillared Capitol, will be a plaintive wail for a few more millions for Trinity River, Tex., and a hoarse cry for enough to pull the snags out of the mouth of the roaring Gasconade.

So it will go on. The bill ought to carry a "banner with a strange device," not that known of the poet, not "Excelsior," but "E pluribus unum," for it is, indeed, Mr. President, one of many. If any single proposition in this bill had to stand upon its individual merits, it would perish the first legislative day it was before this body. It is only by the union of many interests far and near, good and bad, different and indifferent, the union of all, without regard to the merits of any, that it becomes the everlasting financial scourge it is.

Nowhere in this country is there any support for it in public sentiment. People may talk of the Mississippi River, but little money is expended for that great waterway. Three million dollars is expended for the Ohio, $1,250,000 for the Passes or mouth of the Mississippi, a small sum above $250,000 from the mouth of the Mississippi River north. In this bill are a total of nearly $33,000,000, the greater part of which amount is for improvements benefiting private interests, making land overflowed of value, but which are of no value whatever to commerce, either public or private.

I would rather lose every dollar that is appropriated in this or any future river and harbor bill for the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes than to vote for the measure in the form it has appeared in this Chamber since I have been a Member of it. We can make our own improvements if the Government takes Federal money away from us or Congress punishes us for not joining in this highest product of the logroller's art. We have been anxious to do so at times, but have been denied that privilege, because we can not obtain from the Federal authorities the necessary license to spend our own money. So there is even now punishment, I repeat, Mr. President, in the section of the country from which the great production and commerce come now inflicted upon both people of the Great Lakes or the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] wishes to speak very briefly on this matter. I think he is the last Senator who desires to speak on it, but I will have to ask for a quorum to secure his presence. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Harding	Martin, Ky.	Smoot
Bankhead	Henderson	Moses	Spencer
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sterling
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlan	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Colt	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Culberson	King	Pittman	Vardaman
Cummins	Knox	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Curtis	La Follette	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Shafroth	Williams
France	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gay	McKellar	Simmons
Gronna	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, inasmuch as I am a member of the committee that reported this bill and was not able to be present at the meeting of the committee when this item was considered, I feel that I ought to say a word with reference to my position regarding it.

I do not subscribe to all that has been said with reference to a waterway lying wholly within a State not being a proper subject of Federal improvement. Many important waterways in the country, as has been pointed out, do lie wholly within a State, but upon them is carried a vast commerce. As to any navigable waterway—and the waterway in question is navigable—it is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and no improvement can be made upon such a stream, although it does wholly lie within a State, if it be navigable without the consent of the Federal Government. But merely because it is within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, that does not mean that the Federal Government ought to expend money upon it; and it seems to me very clear, upon all the facts concerning this river, that it is not a waterway upon which the Government should be called upon to expend any such amount of money as is proposed under the project now under consideration.

Under the estimate, it will call for a Government expenditure of $733,000; but Senators will bear in mind that this estimate was made in 1914, and the engineers now estimate that upon the basis of present cost they must add 50 per cent to every such estimate, which means that under the present basis of cost this improvement would cost more than $1,000,000. And what will be secured by the improvement? The most that is claimed for it is that it will take care of a purely local commerce, originating upon the land tributary to the river itself. But it is not even claimed that if this improvement is made commerce will be carried upon this river when it is improved. Indeed, just the contrary appears in every report that has been made. While it is true that this project has been favorably recommended by every engineer and every board, it is also true that they have recommended it upon the theory that if this expenditure is made, railroad rates will be reduced; and if it were not for that theory it is very plain that not one of the Government engineers would have favorably recommended the project.

That brings us back to a question that I discussed very briefly the other day as to the policy of Congress with reference to expending large amounts of money upon our rivers and our waterways, not for the purpose of transporting commerce upon them, but to secure a reduction in railroad rates. I am surprised that anyone will any longer defend for a single moment that theory; and that is all that this appropriation rests upon, because I think the chairman himself will admit that if it were not for the supposition that this improvement would reduce railroad rates it would not have been recommended by any engineer in the War Department. That is plain. Take every one of the reports that are made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Since the Senator challenges my admission or denial, I must say, in justice to myself, that I think the improvement would have been recommended irrespective of that, because of the need of means of transportation all along this valley, including even the lakes to which the river extends, where it is perfectly apparent that staple products and citrus fruits and all those things that reach foreign markets must be hauled at least 8 or 10 miles or more to a railroad station.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, now, let us see. Assuming that this improvement would cost a million dollars, the reports state that the annual maintenance charge after the improvement is completed, as I recollect, will be about $12,000 per year. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct.

Mr. LENROOT. Four per cent on a million dollars is $40,000. Add to that the $12,000, and it will cost the Government every year $52,000; and what will be secured by it? Granting the transportation of citrus fruits and the commerce that the chairman speaks of, is the Government justified in contributing $52,000 every year for the purpose of saving a small amount in railroad rates?

I agree that there is one class of waterway upon which the Government is justified in expending money, even though only a small amount of commerce shall be carried upon that waterway, and that is a waterway where the country roundabout has no railroad facilities whatever, because the improvement of that kind of a waterway is the only means of securing the development of the country. But where a territory has railroad communication, as this territory has—there is a railroad paralleling this river all of the way, within 4 or 5 miles of it—shall it be said that because farmers will have to haul their products 2 or 3 miles farther to a railroad than they would have to haul them to a wharf upon this waterway, therefore a million dollars of Government expenditure is justified? Why, Mr. President, if that be true, if the Government shall ever own and operate the railroads of this country, if we shall adopt that theory, we will put railroads gridironing this country about 10 miles apart. Farmers elsewhere have to haul their products 4, 5, 10 miles—yes, and in the West they have to haul them as much as 20 miles and more.

But this is not the kind of a case where that is the only way of building up the country, because they now have railroad communication; and with reference to the way in which this country is prospering now I want to read from one of the letters found in the report from the Board of Trade of Tavares, one of the towns that are asking for this improvement. They say, after stating what enterprises and industries are now located in this vicinity:

> The low rates this waterway will give us will many times multiply the organizations now at work. Our wild lands, all of them, three years ago sold from $3 to $5 per acre. The same are now selling for $25 to $100 per acre in this lake region.

Does that look as if they had to have this waterway in order to utilize their lands and develop them, when under present facilities lands have increased during the past five years from three and five dollars per acre to $25 and $100 per acre?

But, Mr. President, in every one of these various letters from the various commercial organizations in the towns asking for this improvement, in every one of the reports that have been made by the Board of Engineers, the division engineer, and the district engineer the favorable report has been based upon the assumption not that great commerce will be carried upon the river but that the improvement will compel a reduction in freight rates. Every report states that very fully, and in one of them, I think it was the report of the division engineer, he goes into a computation of the entire commerce of this region, both by rail and by water, and by water, as has already been said, it only amounts now to 11,000 tons per year; and I want to read from the report:

> From the foregoing statement it will be seen that there are approximately 500,000 to 600,000 tons of freight, the transportation charges on which will be affected more or less by the improvement of the Oklawaha River. The present freight rates to Leesburg, Ocala, and Sanford are given below. Sanford is on the St. Johns River at a greater distance from Jacksonville than Leesburg or Ocala, and has rail and water transportation to Jacksonville and from Jacksonville to northern ports. Leesburg and Ocala have only rail transportation to Jacksonville, the Oklawaha River in its present condition being of no use.

Then they give the table of the comparison of rates. On sixth-class freight, for instance, from Leesburg the rate to Jacksonville is 33 cents per hundred pounds, while from Sanford, upon the St. Johns River, it is only 16 cents per hundred. The report goes on:

> If, as a result of the improvement of the river, there should be a general reduction of 15 cents per hundredweight in rail rates, approximately the existing difference between the Sanford and the Leesburg and Ocala rates on sixth-class goods, the total saving in freight would amount to $1,800,000. I do not believe that any such saving as this is probable, but I believe it will be conservative to estimate that a saving of 15 cents per hundredweight would result on 200,000 tons, making a total annual saving of $600,000 if a 6-foot channel were provided.

It will be observed that there is no estimate made of the commerce that will be carried over this river when it is improved. The estimate is made upon what will be saved in freight rates, and comparing that by the rates that are charged from Sanford, upon the St. Johns River. That comparison having been made, I was interested in ascertaining what the condition was at Sanford and how much of the commerce of Sanford was being carried by water upon the St. Johns River. Turning to the report upon that portion of the St. Johns River, upon which Sanford is situated, I find this, under the heading of "Effect of improvement":

> The improvement has made navigation in this stretch much more easy, certain, and expeditious, and has enabled larger boats, with greater carrying capacity, to be used between Jacksonville and Sanford. The existence of the water route to Sanford has been a factor in the development of the country and has kept freight rates 50 per cent lower than they are in territory without water competition.

Then I looked to see what the commerce was upon the entire stretch of the St. Johns River—115 miles, as I recollect, in this particular stretch—and I find that in 1917 the entire commerce upon this portion of the river was only 108,000 tons. Upon the basis of the same estimate, instead of 200,000 tons being carried upon the Oklawaha by water, it would be only a mere fraction of that; and if there be any benefit resulting from the improvement it must be considered to come almost wholly in the reduction of railroad rates.

As to the rates at Sanford being 50 per cent lower than the rates at Leesburg, one of two things must be true—either the rate from Sanford by rail to Jacksonville is too low and ought to be raised or else the rate from Leesburg to Jacksonville is too high and ought to be lowered; and it ought not to cost a million dollars of Government money to lower that rate, when we have an Interstate Commerce Commission whose business it is to see that just rates are accorded. Why, if we are to make appropriations in river and harbor bills upon the theory that the appropriation is justified if the potential water competition shall result in lowering rates, there is no end to river and harbor appropriations, and in all time to come we could not find money enough in any form of taxation to pay the bills.

With reference to this appropriation, Mr. President, I expect that it will be adopted; but I want to make this statement now: If this appropriation is adopted in this bill, and then we treat in the same way every other application having the same merit as this one, an annual river and harbor bill of $1,000,000,000 will not be sufficient to cover the expenditures. If we once start out upon this kind of a proposition, which goes further than any project that has been adopted since I have been a Member of Congress, it seems to me that the committee hereafter will have a right to assume that the Senate has adopted the policy, and thereby instructed its committee that if an appropriation or an expenditure of money will reduce railroad rates, irrespective of the justice of those railroad rates, the appropriation should be made. In that event we will have in the future river and harbor bills which will so arouse the indignation of the country that instead of securing legitimate and proper improvements upon all rivers we will have a separation of harbors from rivers, and then rivers will have to stand upon their own merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his named was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily detained from the Senate. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], who is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. COLT. Has the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. COLT. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). I find that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the negative). I voted by inadvertence, thinking that my pair, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was present. I find that he is not. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with that Senator which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained by illness.

Mr. HARDWICK. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is absent on account of a cold.

Mr. KIRBY. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on official business.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained by illness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Baird	Johnson, Cal.	McCumber	Shafroth
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	McLean	Smoot
Colt	Kellogg	McNary	Spencer
Cummins	Kenyon	Moses	Thomas
France	King	New	Townsend
Gore	La Follette	Norris	Wadsworth
Gronna	Lenroot	Page	Warren
Hale	Lodge	Poindexter

NAYS—32.

Bankhead	Henderson	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kendrick	Pollock	Sutherland
Culberson	Kirby	Pomerene	Swanson
Fletcher	Lewis	Ransdell	Trammell
Gay	McKellar	Reed	Vardaman
Gerry	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Williams
Hardwick	Myers	Simmons	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—33.

Ashurst	Harding	Penrose	Sterling
Borah	Hitchcock	Phelan	Thompson
Chamberlain	Hollis	Robinson	Underwood
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Dillingham	Knox	Sherman	Watson
Fall	Martin, Va.	Shields	Weeks
Fernald	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	Nugent	Smith, Md.
Goff	Owen	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. KENYON's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senate voted against the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] requiring the State and beneficial interests to pay one-half the amount. There may be some Senators who are opposed to the principle of improving our rivers and harbors in that way, but now, if the Senate is to vote upon the amendment itself, I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE MICHIGAN CONTROVERSY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, much has been said in recent years of the superman. From Nietsche, the German, to SHERMAN, the capable and satirical Senator from Illinois, his praises have been sung and his deficiencies exposed. We may never encounter this superior creature, but we can not fail to recognize him should he appear.

But what of the sublunary man, by which I mean the man who will not play the game by rule, yet who seems to play it well, who makes no claim to extraordinary talent, but rather decries the acclaim to unusual merit, which success always inspires? May we not describe the superman by contrasting him with his sublunary satellite, who either escapes notice or encounters hostile criticism where he is fortunate enough to escape calumny. Let me therefore investigate briefly and specifically some of the attributes of what for want of a better name I shall call the sublunary man. And since illustration is attractive as description, I shall draw a brief outline of some incidents in the career of Mr. Henry Ford, now in the limelight, chiefly as an object of political satire and denunciation, and who seems to me entitled to some distinction, creditable or otherwise, as a sublunary man who does things in his own way and generally does them well. I am not familiar with the story of his life and never met him but once. I know something of his methods only in common with the mass of my countrymen.

Mr. Ford enjoys one point in common with the superman in that he was born at an early period of his life. The divergence began almost immediately, for supermen are raised on bottles. As a boy he seemed anxious to better prevailing conditions. So he turned his young mind to mechanics and utilized his leisure hours in experimenting with methods of auto propulsion. Ultimately he evolved a horseless machine, driven by an internal combustion motor, and proceeded to make it available for practical use. This sublunary man then organized a small concern with very modest capital, officered by himself and some supermen.

He very soon became beset by the sublunary notion that the motor car should not be considered and manufactured solely as a toy for the well to do, but as a necessary implement of industry at a price within the reach of all. Supermen demonstrated to the satisfaction of all but him that this idea was Utopian; the device could be utilized by commerce and industry, but not cheaply. So he left them and set up shop for himself. Selling out for a very modest sum, he organized the Ford Motor Co., with a capital of $2,000,000, of which he reserved 51 per cent for himself, and began the production of a very cheap but very serviceable car. While supermen criticized and condemned, he began producing cars and persisted in doing so, first by hundreds, then by thousands, then by tens of thousands, then by hundreds of thousands every year. Within half a decade he had literally spread them over the face of the earth. They became, indeed, as one of his critics has caustically declared, a common denominator of modern civilization. They became more than that, because they long ago crossed the frontiers of civilization and are familiar pioneers in all the uninhabited and unsubdued regions of every hinterland. Supermen, lagging far behind, long ago began to imitate what they had demonstrated to be an impossibility and made cheap cars, too.

Mr. Ford's company soon began to make money faster than its shareholders could spend it. By 1914 its annual profits exceeded fifty millions of dollars, or twenty-five times the amount of its capital. Fifty millions is 10 per cent of five hundred millions, and, of course, the value of the shares was multiplied more than two thousand fold.

The superman of modern times would have developed this wonderful business along modern lines of financial procedure.

He would have increased his capitalization to not less than $500,000,000, preferred and common, with a guarantee of 7 per cent on preferred, balance to common, and given the latter the benefit of the stock market, which would have sent it to $300 per share. He would also have plastered the enterprise with a huge bond issue, never to be paid, save as to the interest. This practice conceals large profit, reduces the percentage of dividends, and escapes a large income tax.

But this sublunary individual wholly disregarded the policy introduced and sponsored by all the supercaptains and financiers of the last half century. He did not even shrink from acquainting the public with every item entering into his prodigious prosperity. He simply amended his company charter by authorizing an increase of the capital to $20,000,000 and kept grinding out his jitneys, which a perverse but appreciative public gobbled up as fast as he could make them. And he has paid whatever taxes Uncle Sam has seen fit to exact from him.

Since I have been in the Senate Congress has passed four revenue bills and is about to pass another. We provided for an income tax in 1913 and have increased it several times. We have taxed and are taxing war and excess profits. We have had delegations representing every possible interest subject to these levies, pleading, debating, and protesting against revenue legislation directed against their respective pursuits. All save this sublunary man. He came not to us, nor did he bombard us by letter or telegram. He said, "Do what the public needs require and I will pay the score."

Mr. Ford also conceived the notion that a minimum living wage, a share of the profits to the wage earner, and a helping hand to the convict begging for a chance to redeem himself was practicable, so he established a minimum wage of $5 per day, with participation in the profits, and gave work to the unfortunate class whose records have banned them from the avenues of industry.

The supermen denounced the scheme. They did more than predict; they announced its failure. But sublunary obstinacy and defiance of precedent persisted and won, while the Ford profits increased in generous abundance. His workmen are content. Strikes are unknown to his establishment and prosperity generously diffused.

Mr. Ford has an only son. He differs from the sons of many supermen. He is not given to wasting his father's substance in riotous living. He has no public record for overindulgence in wine, women, and song. His father apprenticed him to his business and taught it to him from its rudiments to its terminals. He then placed him in charge of it. When America declared war, 50 per cent of the Ford factory was transformed and devoted to war work. The draft came, and young Ford claimed exemption because this work demanded his personal supervision. Many supermen, some with sons in bureau positions, making them immune from bombs, gas, airplanes, and influenza, some with brave boys at the front, and some with boys exempt, protested; but the boy was excused upon the ground assigned. This I neither approve nor condemn. Injustice may have been thereby wrought upon others, but, alas, his was not a solitary case. But he was the son of a sublunary man, so he has been made to suffer for his own and the sins of others.

Ford says he has always been a pacifist. This may be a sublunary falsehood, but he has always asseverated it. In 1916 he chartered a ship, filled it with the choicest collection of cranks that ever defied the storms of Neptune, and started for the seat of war. Its mission was peace without victory. Before the first seasick spasms were over the symbolic dove was slaughtered by the cabin passengers and an exterminating war of gases inaugurated. The sublunary proprietor of the asphyxiating argosy soon realized that his associates were impossible and his mission ridiculous. He left his aggregation of neurotics at the first opportunity and has borne the resultant ridicule with no word of protest. He paid the bills and took his medicine. This, in a superman, is called moral courage; in a sublunary man it is pacifism with a yellow streak.

With the declaration of war, Ford declared that the best way to secure peace was to win the war quickly by its vigorous prosecution. At the request of other manufacturers he improved and vastly cheapened cylinder construction for the Liberty motor and conducted the manufacture, under contract, of caissons, motors, ships, and other necessities of war. He announced at the outset that he would return to the Treasury every dollar of profit coming to him on Government work, and he has done so. He could not make the same pledge for other shareholders, as a superman might have done. Such conduct, unique and unusual, could not escape censure. The precedent was destructive and demoralizing. It was therefore uncandid and sinister. Conservatism shrank from it, fearing contamination. Ridicule became strident and skepticism vociferous. The Ford output, especially in ships, has been attacked as spurious and deficient. I do not believe it, because such is not the reputation of the Ford product. As far as I know, this conduct of the sublunary man has no imitator.

At the instance of the President, Ford last summer became a candidate for the Senate. He announced the submission of his name to all parties upon all tickets. If any party nominated him, he would run. If all of them did, so much the better. But he would subscribe to no platform and contribute to no campaign fund. No superman ever imagined, much less proposed, such a program. No politician ever evolved such a thing as a moneyless campaign by a multimillionaire candidate since the days when money was invented and coined. To elect such a man on such an announcement would establish a precedent that might wreck the financial schemes of every professional patriot in the Union. Why nominate the rich man who declines in advance to be shaken down? That was a prospect more terrible than a proposed reduction of duty on Pennsylvania steel. It meant a shattering of idols and might become chronic. This sublunary man's announced abstention from the use of money in a campaign involving his own candidacy would be unwise if it were not asinine. True, the law limits expenditures to a maximum supposedly within the reach of all, but that has proved only a seeming obstacle. Why should not this singular man, although nothing but a candidate by request, conform to established and respectable usages, let his friends and relatives spend lavishly in his behalf? Then he would only need make and file his affidavit that they acted without his knowledge and consent. He could thus pluck the fruit while they harvested the thorns. This stubborn violator of the rules could not be made to perceive that only heart burnings and censure could flow from his conduct. Indeed he at once encountered object lessons confirming that fact, for many stalwart men of Michigan at once voiced themselves in passionate protest. Like the old lady in Oregon, they became so angry they felt like sallying forth at once and breaking all the ten commandments.

One party nominated Mr. Ford. The other chose a safe and sane man, in behalf of whom his friends and relatives expended nearly $200,000, all without his knowledge and absolutely without his consent. On the face of the final election returns, and probably due to the continued altruistic generosity of said friends and relatives, with the continued ignorance of the candidate, and wholly without his consent, Mr. Ford was defeated. Subsequent inquiry revealed the possibility that a recount publicly made would show a different result. Ford has therefore asked for an investigation from the only forum which can grant it. Supporters of his opponent, a gentleman without knowledge, and presumably below the age of consent, oppose this chiefly because Ford is a pacifist and idealist. Moreover, he is destitute of partisan conviction and acknowledges no partisan affiliation. He has therefore been and will continue to be the subject of ridicule, misrepresentation, and contumely here and elsewhere. That master of the science of satire and sarcasm, the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois, has made Ford the object of the most picturesque and cynical denunciation. The sublunary man has not so far replied in kind or at all. I hope he will not, for the scripture somewhere saith: "Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced." No man may forecast what the results of efforts at contest will be. We know they are doubtful, since to seat a man in the Senate having money, yet who will not swell campaign funds with it, would be a perilous innovation. The political business would suffer serious injury and add many politicians to the swelling ranks of the unemployed.

When the city of Detroit needed a great hospital, Ford proposed to build it at his own cost provided he could retain the power of its exclusive management. Here he encountered only sullen resistance. Choice bits of patronage otherwise available to political doctors and retainers seeking positions and scorning jobs never materialized in this hospital built by a crank and operated by a theorist. But it seems to have become a popular public benefaction.

Finally, this sublunary man has bought a newspaper, and, of course, in a singular fashion for a grotesque purpose. It is located in a small city near a mighty city. Its new proprietor will convert it into an agency for the dissemination of his own views. It will be weekly or daily as the demand for it shall require. It will neither seek advertisements nor solicit circulation. Profit is a secondary consideration. No superman would ever operate a modern journal in such fashion. Here, too, his critics, with a seemingly strange lack of discrimination, continue their uniform chorus of detraction.

As one of Mr. Ford's gentler adversaries I regret exceedingly that he has embarked upon the shoals and reefs of journalism. Many men, better perhaps than one of sublunary distinction, have done the same thing, only to encounter shipwreck and disaster. Many others have achieved success by the sacrifice of peace and comfort. Ford may succeed through the very audacity of his innovation. I hope so; but I shall not be surprised if the venture should deliver him into the hands of his enemies.

Ages ago a very wise old man exclaimed: "Oh, that mine enemy would write a book!" If that be a perilous experiment, but attractive to one's enemies, how much more so is the printing of a newspaper. Journals amounting to anything breed opposition and engender animosities. Those not amounting to anything, like the good, die young. Editors are seldom popular. One of my predecessors in this body once said he derived much comfort from the fact that no man was ever hung for killing an editor.

Our sublunary man is now embarking upon a foggy sea, bound for an unknown port. He will reach it if anybody can, although Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart will trail and torpedo him should his vigilance relax. Whatever his fate, posterity will award him a meed of praise vouchsafed to very few supermen of his generation.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee, to insert, on page 12, beginning in line 15, what will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

For improvement of Oklawaha River, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 514, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon agreeing to the amendment; and if there be no further debate upon it, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Having a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I understand he is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. POLLOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: I was informed that the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] had not voted. I understand that he has voted. Therefore I am obliged to withdraw my vote and stand paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). By inadvertence, thinking the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was present, I cast my vote. I have a standing pair with him. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and let my vote stand.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. KIRBY. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Baird	Hardwick	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Henderson	Pittman	Swanson
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Trammell

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I reserve a separate vote in the Senate on this amendment and on the amendment which I proposed to this amendment. I shall offer my amendment to the amendment in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa can reserve a vote on this amendment, and he can offer his amendment to the amendment in the Senate. He can not reserve his amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I understand that, but I put it in the way I did out of abundance of caution.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 12, line 19, after the words "in all," to strike out "$117,000" and to insert "$347,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to read: "for improvement of channel from Tampa Bay to Boca Ceiga Bay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 1, after "$10,700," to insert: "for improvement of Sarasota Bay in accordance with the report submitted in House Document Numbered 844, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $92,000."

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a new project.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is an improvement of an old project.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is for the improvement of an old project.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides for a new improvement. Portions of Sarasota Bay have been improved heretofore.

Mr. KING. This project was not in the House bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no. Of course, if we intended to accept the House bill there was no need of referring it to any committee. We might as well agree to it at once. There are a good many matters involved in this bill, and we did not feel absolutely bound by what the House has done or has failed to do.

Mr. KING. I understand that, Mr. President, but usually the House adopts a large number of projects, and those that are adopted, as I understood the Senator to say a few days ago, are adopted upon reports made by the engineers.

Mr. FLETCHER. This project has a favorable report of the engineers, I will say to the Senator. That report is found in Document No. 844.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know why this project did not appeal to the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it was presented to them or considered by them at all. It is a very worthy project, and it will cost very little.

Mr. KING. I have not yet had an opportunity to examine this project, but if the vote on it is in the affirmative, I shall reserve a separate vote in the Senate on it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I had intended to offer some suggestions on this amendment and also on the one in reference to the Ouachita River, but if the Oklawaha River improvement can be put into an appropriation bill by the committee and be supported by the Senate, there is absolutely no use in wasting any time discussing any kind of an appropriation that may be reported to the bill. For my part, I am not going to waste any more time on it. What little remains in the Treasury can go into these creeks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say, now that the Senate has agreed to put into this bill the improvement of the Oklawaha River, indefensible as it is, and as the Senate is perfectly willing to squander money in this way, so far as a river and harbor bill is concerned, the Senate may load the bill to the guards and take all of the money out of the Treasury they desire; I am not going to try further to prevent it.

Mr. RANSDELL. We are willing to take the responsibility.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator is, and has always been, and will always be, so long as the amount of money goes into his State that does go there.

Mr. RANSDELL. Only a small part of it goes my way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] how many projects contained in this bill are receiving appropriations that are within the State of Louisiana, within the State of Florida, and within the State of Texas?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course I dislike to take time to go into that matter, but I have analyzed this bill with some reference to that suggestion, and I find, dividing the country into North Atlantic, South Atlantic, Gulf, lower Mississippi, upper Mississippi, Ohio and Allegheny, Great Lakes, and Pacific, that the amounts carried in the bill will be as follows:

North Atlantic section of the country, north of the Potomac River and east of the Mississippi, for maintenance, $422,000; for improvement and maintenance, $11,185,794.

The South Atlantic section, south of the Potomac River, $679,300 in maintenance items and $3,454,400 for improvement and maintenance.

The Gulf, for maintenance, $369,500; for maintenance and improvement, $3,765,500.

The lower Mississippi River, maintenance, $169,000; maintenance and improvement, $640,000.

The upper Mississippi River, maintenance, $715,000; maintenance and improvement, $671,000.

Ohio and Allegheny Rivers, $8,000 for maintenance and for improvement and maintenance, $4,300,000.

I will say that the chief amendments made by the Committee on Commerce to this bill have been to add $3,000,000 to the Ohio River and $1,000,000 to the Allegheny River. Those are the chief items of all the amendments made by the Commerce Committee to this bill.

We did not hear very much of this abuse of river and harbor bills and all this slurring about this being a "pork barrel" bill until the Ohio River projects were all adopted by Congress. Now, what do they amount to? The Ohio River project alone calls for an expenditure of $73,088,114. The total expenditures up to June 30, 1918, were $46,235,306 on the Ohio River. The amount estimated to complete it is $23,265,488. The outstanding liabilities and contract obligations amount to $3,587,320. I repeat, the item for the Ohio River of $3,000,000 which we added to this bill and the item of $1,000,000 for the Allegheny River constitute the chief items that the Committee on Commerce proposed as amendments to the bill.

Referring to the subdivisions I have mentioned, the Great Lakes section carries for maintenance $456,800 and for maintenance and improvement $2,166,270.

The Pacific section carries $1,043,700 for maintenance and for maintenance and improvement $1,906,100. The general appropriation for maintenance and improvement is $750,000, making the total for maintenance $3,863,300 and for maintenance and improvement $28,839,064.

The Mississippi River and tributaries south of the Ohio River, I referred to as the lower Mississippi, and the Mississippi River and tributaries north of the Ohio River I referred to as the upper Mississippi.

That will give the Senators the apportionment, I might say, of the amounts carried in this bill. It will be found that in the North Atlantic section $11,500,000 in the bill is appropriated as against about $3,500,000 in the South Atlantic section. That does not include the Ohio and Allegheny improvements, which would add $4,300,000 more.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks there was any justification for making the large improvements upon the Ohio River which have been made, whether commerce warranted any such expenditures as have been made, and such as are contemplated being made by the Government?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is more familiar with the Ohio River projects than am I, but, speaking briefly, I will state that I do not claim the Government has made any mistake in entering upon that great work. I do say that it was satisfactorily shown to our committee—and I approve of it—that since we are committed to a project, since we have adopted the project, we ought to go on and complete these locks. Therefore, we felt that we ought to make the necessary appropriations in order to do that.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I have made some little computation, and I find that the cost to the Government for each ton carried upon the Ohio River is more than $3 per annum, and the amount of tonnage is less now than for the year 1917 than it has been for preceding years, or at least for a number of preceding years. My information is that there is no increase in the amount of tonnage carried upon the river. There does not seem to be the necessity for this enormous expenditure, nor any necessity for the appropriation of the amount which this bill carries for this particular item.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Utah will realize that the commerce is there; but, of course, it can not move by the river until these projected improvements are made. When they are completed, I have not any doubt that the calculations of the engineers will be fully realized; but, until they are completed, it is very expensive to handle what traffic does move in that way. It can only move at certain seasons.

Mr. KING. In 1913 I find from this report of the engineers on page 1305—I do not want to make any mistake—which relates to that project, as I understand these pages, and the Senator from Louisiana will correct me if I am in error——

Mr. RANSDELL. I will do so, provided the Senator is in error as to what the commerce for 1913 seems to have been.

Mr. KING. The commerce for 1913 was 8,000,000 plus short tons and for 1917 it was 4,000,000 plus short tons.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is right.

Mr. KING. So there is a reduction in the commerce in that period from 8,000,000 plus short tons to 4,000,000 plus short tons. I might say, in passing, that, after examining a large number of these projects, I find a constant diminution in the amount of traffic upon the rivers. That is notably true upon the Missouri, the Mississippi, the Red, the Brazos, the Tombigbee, the Kentucky, the Cumberland, and many other rivers too numerous for me to now take the time to mention.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the commerce on the Ohio has not been increasing for several years because in 1910 we finally adopted the project for the improvement of that river with a depth of 9 feet at the lowest stages between Pittsburgh and Cairo, at an estimated cost of $63,000,000. We have been carrying it on at the rate of about $5,000,000, a year. There is a very large commerce tributary to the river. Before we had so many railroads on both banks of the river, serving the country which was naturally tributary to the river, a very large commerce did move on the Ohio River.

The city of Pittsburgh is at the head of the Ohio River and has the largest commerce in tonnage of any place on earth. Its tonnage is supposed to be about five times in volume that of the city of New York itself. I do not mean to say that it is five times as valuable, for a great deal of the tonnage on the Ohio consists of coal, iron ore, iron and steel, and the products of iron and steel. The city of Pittsburgh and the region on the river for about 50 miles below that city are perfect beehives of industry. There are a great many manufacturing enterprises of every kind and sort on and adjacent to the river. I took a trip down the river several years ago from Pittsburgh to Cairo—1,000 miles—and I was struck by the great number of people living on the banks of the river, the number of prosperous and successful towns along its course, and the various kinds of industries collected there. The center of population in this country is on the banks of the Ohio River, or very near its banks, in the State of Indiana. It is literally the center of industry, enterprise, and population in the United States. The river runs east and west for a thousand miles through a most populous and busy section.

It is true, as stated by the Senator, that the commerce of the river does not show an increase between 1913 and 1917; but the Senator will admit that we have had the greatest war in all history going on during most of those years, and that, while many kinds of business have moved forward very rapidly and the commerce adjacent to the North Atlantic Ocean has been colossal, the commerce everywhere in the western section of the country has been a great deal less than it was formerly.

Another fact I wish to call to the Senator's attention is, that we are going ahead as rapidly as we can to improve the Ohio River. It is being done by means of locks and dams. Those locks and dams are made of concrete and steel and masonry of various kinds, and during the process of construction they interfere a great deal with navigation. It is almost impossible for boats to move freely up and down that river when the lock work is going on.

Let me also remind the Senator from Utah that one of the tributaries of the Ohio at the city of Pittsburgh is the Monongahela, which last year carried 16,000,000 tons of commerce, valued, I think, at $64,000,000. At Pittsburgh it joins the Allegheny, and the two form the Ohio. The Allegheny River had a very large commerce, which is growing larger all the time; and there is no doubt, sir, that if we can improve that river according to the plan adopted by Congress in 1910, it will develop a marvelous commerce, a truly colossal commerce, that will benefit all the people of the Nation. It is as worthy a project as ever was adopted.

Let me say further to the Senator that, even if a mistake has been made, it was first made in 1876, for Congress undertook the improvement of that river in 1876, under a project to give it 6 feet of water between Pittsburgh and Cairo. Unfortunately, we have gone on ever since that time, more than 40 years, under a piecemeal system of appropriations. If we had carried it through in a rapid, businesslike manner, as a good business man would have done, if it had been his own project, the river would now be carrying a great commerce. It can not carry it normally because every year the water gets low, being only from 2 to 3 feet at many points in the shallow places in that river.

We are trying by this project to give a minimum of 9 feet at all stages by a lock-and-dam system in which, I think, there are 53 locks and dams. The whole stream will be canalized. The dams will raise the water below and back it up to level of the water above, and by a system of pools boats can go all the way down the stream.

There is a very respectable commerce on the river at the present time, a commerce that actually amounts to a great deal in dollars and cents, and it will be very much greater, I am sure, when the work is finished. A railroad could not be expected to do much if it had broken links in its chain, and there are a number of broken links in this canal chain of 1,000 miles.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a few words, I will not say in reply to, but in relation to the matter to which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana has just referred.

I wish to say, in passing, that it really is quite distressing for me to oppose a measure that the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Florida so earnestly and, I believe, so sincerely advocate. The high character of each of these distinguished Senators causes me to hesitate when they announce so positively certain facts relative to these improvements and compels more or less of investigation before I can be prompted or induced to vote against the positions which they take.

I have made a considerable examination, Mr. President, of the rivers and harbors of the United States which have been the subject of legislation upon the part of the Government. I have spent a great many hours—indeed, a number of days; weeks, in fact—in examining the thousands of pages of reports which have been submitted during the past 15 or 20 years by the departments and agencies of the Government that have had control of river and harbor improvements; and, with all due respect to my distinguished friends—and I do not say this in any spirit of criticism or of hostility toward them—my judgment is—and I sought to reach a fair and dispassionate judgment—that the overwhelming majority of the projects which have received appropriations from Congress lacked real, genuine merit; and my opinion is, based upon examination of the thousands of pages of reports—and I examined the question with a real desire to reach the truth—that at least 50 per cent, if not more, of the appropriations made by Congress have been wasted.

The Senator from Louisiana refers to the fact that the appropriations have been made in a piecemeal fashion, and that the work of improvement has been conducted in a piecemeal way. The Senator is absolutely correct. The system which has been employed is one to be condemned. No business man would ever undertake the construction of works or enter into any business of magnitude, pursuing the same course which the Government of the United States has adopted with respect to the improvement of rivers and harbors. The system which has been adopted is one to be condemned, and the sooner we reach a rational, scientific basis for dealing with rivers and harbors the better it will be for the people and the better it will be for the Government. It, of course, is an absurd way to appropriate a few thousand or a few hundred thousand dollars to-day, or for one year, for a given project and depend upon subsequent appropriations to complete the project, and have the work carried on year after year, with interruptions, in a sort of intermittent fashion. It leads to waste and extravagance, and ultimately, of course, it brings the whole project into contempt, ridicule, and disfavor. Many of the projects which have been undertaken and completed by the Government, if there had been a sufficient appropriation made in the beginning, and if the Government had concentrated its efforts toward the completion of the project and completed it quickly, would have cost the Government perhaps 50 per cent only of the ultimate cost, and the result, of course, would have been very much better for those who are to use the streams.

I have wondered why it was that, with the experience through which we have passed, the universal condemnation of the scheme that has been adopted by the Government, there has not been developed a rational and scientific plan of dealing with the rivers and harbors. We have engineers, great engineers, in the United States, men who have addressed themselves to these great questions, men who have studied the Suez Canal, who have aided in the construction of the Panama Canal, and are acquainted with great engineering problems. I have wondered why it was that the Government had not secured the services of men of that character and authorized them to devise and formulate and complete a rational and scientific plan for dealing with rivers and harbors.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wish to inform the Senator from Utah that, in respect to the Ohio River improvement, the Government did have one of its greatest engineers and one of the greatest engineers in the world, in Gen. Sibert, who built the Gatun locks at the Panama Canal.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to learn that; and I recall, since the Senator mentions it, in reading the reports that the project to which the Senator refers was developed along the lines indicated in the report of Gen. Sibert.

Mr. KNOX. Let me add that Gen. Sibert had personal charge of the work for a great many years.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me in connection with what the Senator from Pennsylvania has so well said, to make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Gen. Sibert was in charge on the Ohio River and did some remarkably fine work there. I think he was one of the board of engineers who made the report to Congress on the Ohio River, which was finally adopted in 1910. That report showed that it would cost about $63,000,000 to finish the work, and, as I recall, it was thought by the engineers that, if they could proceed at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, there would be a very satisfactory rate of progress. The Senator will recall that in the case of the Panama Canal it took us about 10 years to finish the work. With the expenditure of $5,000,000 a year on the Ohio, permitting a certain degree of commerce in the meantime, it would take about 12 years to finish the project. It was fully discussed, as I recall, when the bill providing for this project was being framed, and it was thought at that time that that would be a satisfactory progress. Personally I will say that I should like to see it progress at a very much more rapid rate. I think it would be far better if we would give from ten to fifteen million dollars per annum for this great project until it is finished.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt at this point?

Mr. KING. I will be very glad to yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am glad the Senator from Utah is calling attention to the mistake the Government has made in pursuing this piecemeal policy. Congress passed a bill a year and a half ago authorizing the expenditure of $45,000,000 on the Mississippi River, the citizens along the line of the river to contribute in the ratio of 1 to 3. That act contemplates the completion of the Mississippi River levees in five years, with an annual appropriation of $10,000,000.

I understand that the Board of Engineers have assumed the right to say that probably $6,700,000 will be the amount they need this year for Mississippi River improvements. In utter disregard of an enactment by the Congress fixing the amount to be appropriated annually at $10,000,000 and requiring the completion of the Mississippi River levees in five years, the Board of Engineers have advised the Congress, I am told, that $6,700,000 is all they want or will use in this work. It strikes me, Mr. President, that this is an unwarranted assumption of authority on the part of the Board of Engineers. Just how the Board of Engineers will assume to ignore a solemn enactment of Congress in a matter of this grave importance I do not exactly understand; but I hope that the remarks made by the able Senator from Utah may be taken by the Board of Engineers as a warning that Congress will not permit to go unnoticed the board's disregard of its legislative enactment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I recall, from the investigations which I have made, some facts which corroborate the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. It merely illustrates the truth of the observation made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] that the piecemeal system of dealing with this great problem is one that results in waste and is injurious in every conceivable way to the commerce of the country and to the Nation itself.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is no doubt about it. I remember, Mr. President, that I quoted from the Board of Engineers in support of the bill, passed a year and a half ago, providing for the expenditure of $45,000,000 for the maintenance and completion of the Mississippi levee system, figures which were prepared and furnished for me especially, showing that if Congress would appropriate or agree to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to complete the levees, and complete them in a short time, it would result in a saving of from 35 to 40 per cent on the total cost of the finished enterprise. I am glad the Senator has called attention to that matter, because I want the work which was contemplated would be done under the flood-control bill to be completed in accordance with the terms of that measure; and so far as I am concerned I am not going to consent that the Board of Engineers shall in any way modify or change the intent and purpose of that law. There is no excuse at this time for not carrying out the purposes of the flood-control bill. There is an ample supply of labor, the people living along the Mississippi River have contributed their pro rata share of this fund, and for the Government to fail to carry out the terms of the flood-control bill, I submit, will not be acting in good faith with the people of that section particularly and the people of the United States generally. It is not the function of the Board of Engineers to make law; but, as trained officers of the Army, they understand better than I do or you do, Mr. President, that their duty is to obey the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it was not my intention to occupy the time of the Senate to-day in discussing the measure now under consideration, but the unrestrained indorsement of this bill by members of the committee and Senators who have spoken in its support, and the general defense of the present system of dealing with rivers and harbors, impel me to submit some observations. I am also led to do so because I can challenge attention to an amendment which I deem of great importance and which at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to adopt.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] stated, in substance, during the discussion to-day that the method of selecting projects for development by the Government was satisfactory and that none was selected until it was clearly established that it was meritorious and was essential to the commercial needs of the country. I am compelled to dissent from the position taken by the advocates of this bill and the defenders of the river and harbor measures which at each session of Congress are brought forward for consideration.

During the past two years I have given considerable attention to the subject of rivers and harbors and the general question of developing the inland waterways of our country. I have examined hundreds of reports relating to projects which have been selected for development under the river and harbor bills by the Federal Government and have read thousands of pages prepared by engineers and commissions dealing with appropriations made by the United States for the improvement of harbors and hundreds, if not thousands, of streams and inland waterways in our land. I have attempted to ascertain the facts in regard to the appropriations made by the Federal Government for inland-waterway development and for the improvement of our national harbors, for the purpose of determining whether the plan under which we are operating was wise and expedient or whether it was unwise and inexpedient and extravagant. I have examined the three volumes recently submitted by the engineers who have charge of the rivers and harbors of our country. Those volumes, consisting of several thousand pages of closely printed matter, contain an enormous amount of data concerning the streams and harbors which have received appropriations from the Government. After spending days and weeks in examining these reports and available data bearing upon these questions, I have reached the conclusion that the plan which has been followed for so many years by the Government in selecting projects for development and improvement has been not only defective and unwise, but it has resulted in waste and extravagance to such a degree that, in my opinion, at least one-half of the nearly $1,000,000,000 expended by the United States upon creeks, streams, rivulets, and harbors has been absolutely wasted. I have found but few who have attempted to defend the plan adopted and followed by the Government in dealing with the development of inland waterways and harbors. There have been some organizations that were directly benefited in the expenditures made by the Government that have signified their approval of the plan.

The Dredge Owners' Protective Organization has carried on for many years a propaganda in favor of large appropriations for rivers and harbors. The members of this organization have had and now hold contracts with the Government amounting to millions of dollars for dredging creeks and streams and harbors. Doubtless these contracts were profitable to the members of this organization, and they have earnestly endeavored to secure larger appropriations in order that they might secure additional contracts which would result in greater profits.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress is an organization which, to use its own language, "is working earnestly to secure the adoption by the Federal Government of a permanent waterway policy that will provide for improving all the worthy waterways of the Union." It frankly proclaims that "funds are needed to carry on the work which the National Rivers and Harbors Congress has persistently urged, and to the end that a strong demand may come from every section of the Republic that we earnestly invite your financial cooperation."

This organization has boldly announced its determination to secure annual appropriations of at least $50,000,000 from the Federal Government, to be expended for rivers and harbors. It carries on a constant propaganda in favor of large appropriations by Congress and seeks to arouse the people to demand appropriations increasingly large from year to year.

I regret to say that the present plan of dealing with our waterways finds ardent supporters in the Congress of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that there has been vigorous condemnation of the method adopted in preparing river and harbor bills, and of the policy which has been followed by the Government in dealing with the question of water transportation. Engineers and students of governmental and industrial questions have been unsparing in their criticism of this plan, and of the waste of public moneys resulting therefrom. Many Congressmen and Senators familiar with the system have denounced it as wasteful and vicious. When Theodore Roosevelt was President, in a special message to the Senate and House of Representatives on the 8th of December, 1908, speaking of this question, he used the following language:

> Action should be begun forthwith, during the present session of the Congress, for the improvement of our inland waterways—action which will result in giving us not only navigable but navigated rivers. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars upon these waterways, yet the traffic on nearly all of them is steadily declining. This condition is the direct result of the absence of any comprehensive and far-seeing plan of waterway improvement. Obviously, we can not continue thus to expend the revenues of the Government without return. It is poor business to spend money for inland navigation unless we get it.

Inquiry into the condition of the Mississippi and its principal tributaries reveals very many instances of the utter waste caused by the methods which have hitherto obtained for the so-called "improvement" of navigation. A striking instance is supplied by the "improvement" of the Ohio, which, began in 1824, was continued under a single plan for half a century. In 1875 a new plan was adopted and followed for a quarter of a century. In 1902 still a different plan was adopted, and has since been pursued at a rate which only promises a navigable river in from 20 to 100 years longer.

Such shortsighted, vacillating, and futile methods are accompanied by decreasing water-borne commerce and increasing traffic congestion on land, by increasing floods, and by the waste of public money. The remedy lies in abandoning the methods which have so signally failed and adopting new ones in keeping with the needs and demands of our people.

In a report on a measure introduced at the first session of the present Congress the Secretary of War said: "The chief defect in the methods hitherto pursued lies in the absence of executive authority for originating comprehensive plans covering the country or natural divisions thereof." In this opinion I heartily concur. The present methods not only fail to give us inland navigation, but they are injurious to the Army as well. What is virtually a permanent detail of the Corps of Engineers to civilian duty necessarily impairs the efficiency of our Military Establishment. The military engineers have undoubtedly done efficient work in actual construction, but they are necessarily unsuited by their training and traditions to take the broad view and to gather and transmit to the Congress the commercial and industrial information and forecasts upon which waterway improvement must always so largely rest. Furthermore, they have failed to grasp the great underlying fact that every stream is a unit from its source to its mouth and that all its uses are interdependent. Prominent officers of the Engineer Corps have recently even gone so far as to assert in print that waterways are not dependent upon the conservation of the forests about their headwaters. This position is opposed to all the recent work of the scientific bureaus of the Government and to the general experience of mankind. A physician who disbelieved in vaccination would not be the right man to handle an epidemic of smallpox, nor should we leave a doctor skeptical about the transmission of yellow fever by the Stegomyia mosquito in charge of sanitation at Habana or Panama. So with the improvement of our rivers. It is no longer wise or safe to leave this great work in the hands of men who fail to grasp the essential relations between navigation and general development and to assimilate and use the central facts about our streams.

Until the work of river improvement is undertaken in a modern way it can not have results that will meet the needs of this modern Nation. These needs should be met without further dillydallying or delay. The plan which promises the best and quickest results is that of a permanent commission authorized to coordinate the work of all the Government departments relating to waterways, and to frame and supervise the execution of a comprehensive plan. Under such a commission the actual work of construction might be intrusted to the Reclamation Service, or to the military engineers acting with a sufficient number of civilians to continue the work in time of war; or it might be divided between the Reclamation Service and the Corps of Engineers. Funds should be provided from current revenues, if it deemed wise; otherwise from the sale of bonds. The essential thing is that the work should go forward under the best possible plan and with the least possible delay. We should have a new type of work and a new organization for planning and directing it. The time for playing with our waterways is past. The country demands results.

Later in my remarks I shall direct attention to the suggestion contained in Mr. Roosevelt's message in relation to a permanent commission to frame and supervise the execution of a comprehensive plan. The words of President Roosevelt constitute a strong arraignment of the system which seems to be fastened upon the Nation and from which we apparently are unable to free ourselves. President Roosevelt properly denominates the course pursued "as playing with our waterways." He urges a comprehensive plan of dealing with the subject; a plan scientifically conceived and scientifically executed. He uses strong words in denouncing the course of the Government as shortsighted, vacillating, and futile, and in directing attention to the fact which is known to all who have made any investigation that with the increasing expenditures made by the Government for the improvement of rivers and harbors the commerce carried upon the same has diminished.

I desire, Mr. President, to call attention to some remarks made in this Chamber on the 20th day of February, 1913, by a Senator whose long and splendid public career has endeared him to all true Americans. There is no more careful legislator in this or any other legislative body and none more patriotic and devoted to the public welfare than the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. Hon. Francis G. Newlands, long a distinguished Senator from the State of Nevada, and whose untimely death we so much deplore, was addressing the Senate upon the question of the development of the waterways of our country. He called attention to the debate which had taken place, and stated, in substance, that the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, had admitted "that the system hitherto pursued regarding the river and harbor appropriations has broken down," and then declared that the situation indicated the necessity of some legislation "that will enable the treatment of a river in such a way as to make it beneficial for every public use; the necessity of legislation which will bring about cooperation between the sovereigns having jurisdiction over detached uses of our waters, so as to bring about their highest development, with a view to meeting all the demands of civilization." Senator Newlands further stated, "The Senator from Ohio has been for the last three or four years presenting his indictment not only against the bills providing for rivers and harbors, but against the system which has grown up with reference to the development of rivers and harbors." Then follows the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota to which I just referred:

> Mr. President, in answer to the kindly question of the Senator from Nevada, I beg leave to say that in a general way the Senator has expressed my sentiments. I have come to the conclusion that we could do much better work and should squander less money if we appropriated a gross sum and placed it in charge of a board of five or seven competent Army engineers with power to determine what improvements should be made, and where, in our rivers and harbors.

I pause long enough here to say that I differ with respect to the personnel of the commission. The recommendations which have been made by Army officers show that many of them were not competent, and that they failed to measure up to the high responsibilities which rested upon them. There may be something in the training of the Army officer that has not equipped him in the highest degree for this kind of service, but certainly, from my knowledge of the recommendations of the Army officers and the many projects that they have approved that ought to have been condemned, it would be a mistake in my opinion to have Army officers constitute the entire commission. I am not criticizing Army officers; they have their proper place and their proper function, but I should prefer for this work men from civil life—men whose experience is of a different character than that of Army officers. In the language of President Roosevelt, they "are necessarily unsuited by their training and traditions to take the broad view."

Proceeding with my reading from the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota:

> While a great many of the improvements we are making are fully justified in the interests of navigation, yet my observation has led me to believe that in a great many instances we really squander money. It is wasted on improvements that never ought to have been made, but what can we do? Representatives and Senators are clamorous; they introduce their bills, and it is utterly impossible to resist them. I think it would require almost supreme power to infuse a new spirit into Representatives and Senators, as well as into the American people, to bring about a reform.
> I think the work should first be started through our great newspapers and the magazines, from the pulpit, and along educational lines to infuse people with a new spirit, with less of the spirit of Mammon, so that we would all come to look upon this question just as we would if it were our own business.

The statement of the Senator from Minnesota constitutes a strong indictment of the present system. He states that in a great many instances we are squandering money. It is wasted on improvements that never ought to have been undertaken.

Let me pause here for the purpose of challenging attention to a situation that in part accounts for the defects and weakness of the method which has been followed. The Senator from Minnesota says:

> What can we do? Representatives and Senators are clamorous; they introduce their bills and it is utterly impossible to resist them. I think it would require almost supreme power to infuse a new spirit into Representatives and Senators, as well as into the American people, to bring about a reform.

It is embarrassing and perhaps may be regarded by some as improper to direct attention to the course pursued in securing appropriations for creeks and streams. But I submit that it is a fact with which we are familiar, that frequently the inhabitants of a district within the borders of which are rivulets or streams or harbors conceive the idea of obtaining a Federal appropriation for the improvement of the same. It may be that the streams are too small for use in carrying commerce, and that even if sufficiently large to bear boats or barges no use for commercial purposes would be made of the same. Nevertheless, there is a chance under the present system of obtaining money from the Federal Treasury to be expended in the district. Thereupon a movement is started. Some person who desires a contract to dredge the creek secures signatures to a petition, or he interests the local business or civic organizations, and soon petitions, resolutions, and memorials inundate Congress, and the Representative of the district or the Senators from the State are importuned to obtain an appropriation for the improvement of the so-called waterway. A bill is introduced in perhaps both the House and the Senate under which an examination of the project is called for and the necessary appropriation is made. In this way it becomes a part of the river and harbor bill. It is this that the Senator from Minnesota had in mind when he employed the language just read from his statement.

The Senator from Nevada, Mr. Newlands, continuing the discussion, stated:

> I call attention to the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, who has long served upon the Commerce Committee of the Senate, who has had a large experience in the development of our rivers, who has served on committees that have made investigations of the Mississippi, the Missouri, and other rivers, and whose experience has probably been as large as that of any Member of this body. He testifies to the ineffectiveness of the present system, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burton] has also testified to it. * * * He said there has been lack of care in the selection of projects and lack of care in methods. He speaks of the ineffectiveness of expenditures already made, but he also speaks of the experimental side of this question as if we had to go through a further period of experiment before we could agree upon an effective system.

I called attention a day or two ago to the views of former Senator Burton and to his unqualified disapproval of our present river and harbor system. In 1913 Senator Burton denounced the present system as unsound and vicious and used these words:

For years we have been struggling under a vicious system of river and harbor improvements. For instance, the river and harbor bill of 1910 contained items favoring 296 out of the 391 congressional districts. This bill was a masterpiece of geographical distribution and a striking tribute to the cohesive power of legislative logrolling.

He further stated:

There are two ways of framing a river and harbor bill. The popular method of drawing a bill is to make such concessions to all the different States and localities that you will have an overwhelming support for the measure. The other method, and the right one, is to select those projects which would benefit the whole country and then finish them with promptness. The first method is irresistible. It will win every time—consult the wishes of the varied localities and projects of the country and they will all join together and pass a bill.

He also states that communities and individuals backed by the press constantly insist that large and frequently unjustifiable appropriations be made for local districts. He further calls attention to the evil effects of the existing system and gives numerous illustrations of waste resulting therefrom. He refers, as an example, to Red River in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, upon which the Government had expended at that time more than $3,000,000. Notwithstanding this enormous appropriation prior to 1912, over the entire stretch of 476 miles below Fulton Harbor, the entire traffic consisted of but 10 tons of grain, 16 tons of provisions, 26 tons of fish, and 10 tons of ice. There were, however, some logs floated down the river, but more timber was floated before the improvements were made than at any time thereafter. In addition to more than $3,000,000 expended for improvements the river and harbor bill for 1912 carried an appropriation of $50,000 for the stretch of the river referred to. And, of course, annual appropriations therefor will be made notwithstanding the fact that the river serves no useful purpose. Every ton of merchandise and grain, which constituted the commerce for the year referred to, cost the Government $806. Two years before the extent of the commerce was 835 tons, 62 tons more than in 1912.

Mr. Woehlke, in an article appearing in the Technical World magazine for June, 1913, points out the defects of the present system and the waste of public treasure for the alleged development of inland waterways. He refers to the numerous and insignificant streams which have been the recipients of large appropriations at the hands of Congress, and points out that the appropriations were wasted; were mere "sops" to local communities and districts, and did not contribute to the development of commerce in any way. He calls attention to one stream in Texas which has cost a large sum and which calls for $25,000 annually to keep the mouth of the stream open. In 1911 there were only 3,063 tons carried upon this river. In Delaware a little rivulet received $88,000 for improvements on a 12-mile section, and this calls for an annual maintenance charge of $5,000. The average commerce was 10,000 tons, and this has decreased. Mr. Woehlke shows that upon this stream there "is a national subsidy of 7 cents per ton-mile." The average cost of moving a ton 1 mile by rail is just one-thousandth of this subsidy.

I have examined many hundreds of the projects which have received the approval of engineers and Congress upon which in the aggregate millions and tens of millions of dollars have been expended, and I do not hesitate to say that many of them were wholly devoid of merit, and that the appropriations made were improper and were a total loss to the Government. These projects found places upon river and harbor bills by the methods which have been so strongly condemned by ex-President Roosevelt, Senator Burton, and others, who have familiarized themselves with the plan pursued by the Government in dealing with rivers and harbors. I have stated, and the records are replete with facts supporting this statement, that a propaganda is carried on for the purpose of securing large appropriations from Congress in behalf of waterway projects both good and bad. Local communities join in this propaganda and clamor for large appropriations from the Federal Treasury. Members of the Engineer Corps seem to lend themselves to the propaganda and give encouragement to organizations formed for the purpose of obtaining Federal appropriations. Abandoned canals, which have proven to be worthless, are frequently unloaded upon the Government.

With the development of railroads, local canals that had at one time served local communities in a small way ceased to be used for any purpose whatever, but the Federal Government became the object of attack, and these abandoned and worthless projects became children of the Government, receiving constant appropriations, notwithstanding they served no beneficial purpose. Enterprising communities in various States saw opportunities of uniting little creeks by a series of canals and connecting waterways and carried on vigorous campaigns until the Government became the victim, and the doors of the Federal Treasury were opened and poured forth their treasures to consummate the schemes. Hundreds of insignificant streams, unknown even to the masses of the people of the States in which they were located, took on the importance of navigable streams, and after energetic campaigns had been conducted for a sufficient length of time, they found places in the archives of the Government and were denominated "inland waterways for interstate commerce purposes." Hundreds of creeks flowing but a few cubic feet of water per second, and in many instances flowing intermittently only, have become a part of the inland waterway system of the United States and have received in the aggregate millions of dollars from the Federal Treasury.

A perusal of the reports which have been submitted by the engineers show that in hundreds of instances there never has been and never will be any commerce upon hundreds of these streams, and that upon many others there was a greater tonnage carried before the Government improvements were made than thereafter. Indeed, it would seem from an examination of the thousands of pages of reports submitted that the commerce upon many, if not a majority, of the streams diminished as the appropriations increased. Many of the little creeks and streams, and indeed some of the large rivers, were used for the purpose of floating timber before any appropriations were made. As the quantity of timber along their banks diminished the use of the streams for any purpose grew less. The expenditure of large sums in dredging the creeks was of no advantage to commerce, because after the timber had been removed from the lands adjacent to the streams there was no "commerce" to be carried by the streams.

I called attention to the fact that there was an organization known as the National Rivers and Harbors Congress with headquarters at Washington, which has been an earnest propagandist in favor of enormous appropriations by Congress for rivers and harbors. This organization publishes its proceedings and boldly challenges attention to its purpose and its work. I have in my hand a volume containing the proceedings of the ninth annual convention of this organization, held in this city in 1912. On the first page, under the heading "Foreword," I read that one of the speakers, referring to the organization, stated that—during its brief existence [it] has done so much for all river and harbor improvements throughout the country. Under its alliterative slogan of "A policy and not a project" it has assisted in creating a sentiment in favor of that class of work which is Nation-wide in its range and all but irresistible in its force. Legislators recognize its influence and political parties feel and yield to its power.

In examining many of the reports of the annual proceedings of this organization I find constant reference to the important work of this organization and its success in molding public sentiment and obtaining appropriations for the inland waterways of our Nation. One of the speakers in the ninth convention stated:

We must keep friends with the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, because it is to them that we must look to carry out our suggestions.

It is not uncommon for Army officers who are connected with the Engineer Department to address these conventions. I have before me an address delivered before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, December 7, 1911, by Brig. Gen. William H. Bixby, Chief of Engineers. It was presented to Congress later and printed as Senate Document No. 549. In the course of his address he referred to the fact that he had addressed the Congress the preceding year. He then states:

The work of your association last year undoubtedly aided very decidedly the passage of the river and harbor bill last winter, and has made it much easier for the Federal Congress at its present session to continue its now practically adopted policy of annual appropriations for river and harbor work. I advise, however, that you continue your energetic efforts in the further education of the general public to the advantages of river and harbor improvements to the desirability of securing appropriations of funds in such amounts and at such times as will insure a businesslike prosecution of such improvement work until it is accepted as just as much a necessity to the whole country as the Postal Service.

USEFULNESS OF COMMERCIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

I feel in duty bound to urge upon you again this year, as last year, the desirability and even necessity of your giving active, energetic encouragement to the establishment or further development at each large water-front town or city of a live, active, progressive, commercial club or chamber of commerce, or its equivalent, devoted to business objects such as those which concern your association. In such matters your work can best be done by each individual in his own home city. Such commercial organizations should accumulate a solid array of facts, as well as arguments, which can be used by Engineer officers having to report upon the advisability of proposed improvements, and be given also by you to your local Congressman for use before the committees of the Federal Congress, when the latter are considering and deciding upon the appropriations to be actually made.

I call especial attention to the plan which Gen. Bixby advises. He suggests that the organization continue "energetic efforts" in the further education of the general public to the advantages of river and harbor improvements, to the desirability of securing appropriations of funds in such amounts, and so forth. The general appreciates the importance of organizations, and, as will be observed, he urges, as he had done the preceding year, the necessity of giving active, energetic encouragement to the establishment or the further development of active progressive commercial clubs and chambers of commerce or their equivalent. He further urges that local organizations should accumulate a solid array of facts as well as arguments which can be used by engineer officers having to report upon the advisability of proposed improvements and be given also by you to your local Congressman for use before the committees of the Federal Congress when the latter are considering and deciding upon the appropriations to be actually made. Mr. President, this address of Gen. Bixby may be considered by some as within the line of his duty. I refrain from making such comment as in my opinion its character calls for. It, however, does illustrate one thing; that is, that the engineers exhibit a remarkable interest in promoting projects. The subtle suggestion will not be overlooked that efforts must be made to prepare for the Engineer officers who have to report upon the advisability of entering upon the projects called to their attention. It is manifest that this advice of Gen. Bixby has not fallen upon deaf ears. It is not surprising when the Chief Engineer urges organizations, local as well as others, in order that they may be ready to present to subordinates of the general reasons why creeks and rivulets and streams should be developed at the expense of the Federal Government, that individuals, towns, cities, counties, civic and business organizations, should clamor for enormous appropriations from the Government to be spent within their districts. It is not to be wondered at that engineers going into a district to examine some little stream should be impressed with its importance and with the wonderful possibilities of commerce. It is a matter of common knowledge that exaggerations, grotesque and fantastic, abound to produce governmental appropriations upon unimportant and unknown streams and creeks.

I recall reading something of the campaign conducted for the development of what is known as the Hennepin Canal. There have been expended upon this canal more than $8,000,000. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] honors me with his attention, and I venture to state in his presence that this money expended in his State has been a complete waste. However, the Army officers, engineers, and others interested in securing large appropriations from the Government engaged in the wildest campaign for the purpose of having the Government adopt this as a national project. The claim was made that it would connect the Great Lakes and the rivers of Illinois with the Mississippi, and that millions of tons annually would be carried, to the great benefit of the country. In examining the report I find that the representations made were untrue; that the advertising campaign was shameful and misleading; and that the canal has served no useful purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state to the Senator, in connection with his reference to the glowing prospects promised for the Illinois-Michigan Canal, commonly known as the Hennepin Canal, that if such a prospectus had been issued by any private enterprise and I had sold "blue-sky" stock on such a prospectus, I would be doing penal servitude in the penitentiary.

Mr. KING. That is an illustration, Mr. President, of this beneficent (?) system. According to the Senator from Illinois, those engaged in promoting this scheme to secure millions from the United States Treasury made such representations that had similar ones been made with respect to some private enterprise they would have violated some criminal statute, and the punishment might have been a few years in the penitentiary. How many more appropriations have been secured under like conditions and like circumstances?

I find that Gen. Bixby also delivered an address to the National Rivers and Harbors Congress on December 8, 1910. He again urges the congress and local communities to activity for the purpose of securing appropriations. He says:

In other words, you have before you, as a natural duty, the development of a strong public opinion in favor of waterway improvement up to its economical limits, and the transmission of such opinion to your Congressman in such tangible form that he can use it efficiently on the floor of Congress.

The Army Engineer Corps is already guaranteeing an economical and advantageous expenditure of the amounts appropriated, and recommending projects of undisputed worthiness, and Congress will assign the appropriations you desire just as soon as you convince Congress as a whole that such appropriations are not only desired but are urgently needed in the public interest.

Your congress, in connection with its affiliated local associations, has already aroused a strong public interest and opinion in the matter, but it still remains for you to furnish solid arguments and good reasons in tangible form for use in debates. What is needed from you is not mere opinions, but a solid array of facts as to existing products demanding transportation, as to factories demanding encouragement by better transportation, as to comparative rates of rail and water transportation in places needing help, as to the reasons why available existing water routes are not used, and suggestions how the terminal facilities now absent, though much needed, can be guaranteed to future shippers, and a multitude of related facts and suggestions of a business nature and of a political economical nature which can only be secured by the establishment on each river and harbor and at each large water-front town or city of a live, active commercial club devoted to business objects rather than to mere social pleasures. The existing enthusiasm of your association might easily work wonders in such directions if properly directed upon each individual's home city.

I call attention to the manifest purpose of the general to secure strong organizations in favor of appropriations from Congress. He speaks about arousing a strong public interest and opinion in favor of waterway improvement and "the transmission of such information to the Congressmen." Reference is made to affiliated local associations, and the organization which he is addressing is declared to have aroused in connection with its affiliated local associations "a strong public interest and opinion in the matter." It is to be noted that the general perceives that there are water routes that are not used, and it is apparent that he is eager for appropriations in order that they may be "developed." He calls attention to a fact that there are waterways that were once used but now abandoned, and urges that steps be taken to bring them back into use. He again emphasizes the necessity of having active commercial organizations in the various districts, and "existing enthusiasm is expected to easily work wonders (to secure appropriations) if properly directed upon each individual's home city." It is clear that this is an invitation for the National River and Harbor Congress to bring pressure, directly and indirectly, by organized effort or otherwise, upon each individual Congressman where there is a stream or creek that it is conceived may possibly be developed. It is not to be wondered at that, in view of the suggestions made by the Chief Engineer of the rivers and harbors, there is pressure brought upon Senators and Congressmen and demands made for appropriations to be expended within their districts and States. It would seem that there is an organized effort, boldly and openly declared, to influence Congress and to procure Federal appropriations. It is recognized that communities, left to themselves, would not conceive of the possibility of securing appropriations for insignificant streams and creeks rising and sometimes sinking within their districts; but, of course, with a campaign being carried on of the character suggested by the Chief of Engineers, local interest can be very quickly stimulated. The people of a local community can be made to appreciate that the expending of a few hundred thousand dollars upon a little creek will be of advantage to them. It will afford employment to a number of people and will furnish one or more customers to the merchants in the neighborhood. And so, Mr. President, projects find their way into the river and harbor bills through the devious course suggested in the address of the Chief Engineer.

Several years ago, by act of Congress, a National Waterways Commission was appointed consisting of seven Members of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives. This commission was required to investigate questions pertaining to water transportation and the improvement of waterways and to make recommendations to Congress. In January, 1910, it submitted a preliminary report which was included as a part of the final report presented to Congress in 1912. Among the questions considered by the commission was "the reasons for decline in inland waterway transportation." The commission recognized the imperfection of the plan under which Congress had made hundreds of millions of dollars of appropriations for the development of rivers and harbors, and in the report it refers to the "manifest decrease in water-borne traffic on the majority of the rivers and inland waterways of the country." Notwithstanding the enormous appropriations made for the purpose of stimulating commerce upon the inland waterways, the commission's report shows the absolute decrease upon many of the streams and a material falling off with respect to others. Among the streams referred to by the commission were the following:

Upper Mississippi, where the decrease in traffic between 1889 and 1906 was 85 per cent; the Illinois River, between the two periods, showed a decrease of 41 per cent; the Missouri River and other tributaries above St. Louis, 49 per cent; the lower Mississippi River system showed a decrease, between the periods referred to, of 59 per cent.

The commission referred to some of the important factors causing a decrease of the water-borne traffic and emphasized the advantages which railways have in competition with water routes. The fact was also pointed out that improvements upon inland waterways have been urged for the purpose of lowering railroad rates, and the commission states that the argument has frequently been made that even if the river channel should not be used at all it would be profitable to spend money solely for the effect upon rail rates. This view the commission regards as a transparent fallacy, and invites attention to the fact that railways do not constitute an uncontrollable monopoly which can not be reached by legislation and other orderly and legal methods, and condemn the theory that it is necessary in order to secure lower railroad rates that expenditures of large sums of money be made upon streams within our country which will thereafter remain wholly or partially unused. There is no question but what the many streams and creeks upon which millions and tens of millions of dollars have been squandered were selected for alleged waterway improvement, for purposes other than to be used in the interests of commerce; and the reason why so many of them never have been used and never will be used, notwithstanding the expenditures made upon them, is because they were never adapted for commerce and it was never expected that they should be employed for that purpose. The commission invites attention to the fact that there has been a lack of cooperation upon the part of business and local communities with the Federal Government in the development of waterways. One of the principal experts used by the commission was Mr. E. O. Merchant, and the commission inserts in their report as an appendix a paper submitted by him which discusses in a full and comprehensive way some of the problems of water transportation. In the concluding pages of this paper Mr. Merchant states that appropriations should not be made for promoting navigation unless they bear some relation to the benefits to be derived. He says:

It is unwise to make a $1,000,000 improvement where only a few thousand tons of traffic are in sight.

He urges that a classification of existing projects be made so that those whose improvement is most needed and will result in a prompt increase in traffic should be undertaken and completed first. He states that various plans have been suggested for the purpose of securing "the better administration and coordination of waterway improvements in this country" and refers to the fact that the commission recommended that a permanent commission be established for this purpose. Mr. Merchant condemns the policy of improving waterways not for the purpose of securing means of transportation but for the purpose of reducing railway rates.

Senators have heard, perhaps not in the debate upon this bill but upon many other occasions, that the Government should spend money upon its inland waterways for the purpose of securing better railway rates. Both the commission and Mr. Merchant denounce this view and state that experience has condemned it as fallacious and unsound.

Mr. Merchant states:

Experience has demonstrated that waterways can not be relied upon as the great cheapeners and regulators of railway rates which they once were supposed to be. The railways have demonstrated their ability to control or crush out water competition unless prevented by proper legislation. The reduction of railway rates at river points results in a maladjustment which is not beneficial to the country as a whole. No European country uses its waterways to control railway rates. That is accomplished by the proper administrative bureau of the Government, and the waterways are improved with the idea of securing additional means of transportation. Until we adopt the same policy in this country the money expended for the promotion of navigation will result in little benefit. The waterways can not be used at the same time as means of transportation and as a regulator of railway rates. One use necessarily eliminates the other. If railway rates are reduced, the waterways lose their traffic, the capital invested in shipping is withdrawn, the equipment is allowed to deteriorate, and the additional means of transportation is lost to the public when a congestion of traffic occurs and the rivers are especially needed for the movement of freight.

Mr. President, I have here the statements of many persons who have given attention to the development of our inland waterways as well as the harbors of our country, but I will not take the time of the Senate to read from them. It is sufficient to say that there is almost universal condemnation of the present plan of our Government in dealing with this important question. Attention is repeatedly called to the fact that some scientific and comprehensive plan must be adopted before there can be a proper development of the rivers and harbors of the United States. The present plan, it is contended, produces what the public denominate "pork-barrel" appropriation bills. Writers and speakers constantly associate river and harbor bills with the bills passed for post office and other public buildings. The manner in which public-building bills have been prepared has been a national scandal. It has offended honest and patriotic people in our country. Millions of dollars have been squandered in buildings not required by the Government. The term "log-rolling" and the word "trading" are frequently employed in the literature treating of river and harbor and public-building bills, and the charges are constantly reiterated that bills of this character are passed through Congress under circumstances and conditions that do not square with the ethics which should control honest and just legislation. Literature upon our waterways also refers to the "piecemeal" plan under which projects have been developed and completed. In view of the practically well-nigh universal disapproval, and indeed the condemnation of our Government's policy in dealing with rivers and harbors, I have been surprised at the tenacity with which Congress has adhered to a discredited, defective, and archaic plan. Efforts which have been made to secure reforms have proven abortive. It seems well-nigh impossible to effectuate legislative reforms. Senators will recall the words of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] which I quoted a few moments ago, wherein he stated, after showing the manner in which these appropriation bills are formed,

What can we do? * * * I think it would require almost supreme power to infuse a new spirit into Representatives and Senators as well as into the American people to bring about a reform.

For years Senators and Representatives as well as students of the water transportation problem have recognized the imperative necessity of a reform, of a change in developing and improving waterways, but it has been impossible to secure such reform. The denunciations of the press, the criticisms from all parts of the country, the commendation given to such successful efforts—all these have not been sufficiently potential to change the present system, condemned, discredited, and denounced.

Senator Newlands, in speaking of the method after condemning the present system and by way of reply or rather supplementing the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, said:

Why should the Senator from Minnesota be compelled to come here to Congress with this specific project and ask our assent? Why should any Senator or Representative be compelled to come here with reference to every project of this nature when by general legislation we can provide for cooperation between the Nation and the States and provide a fund under which that cooperation may be accomplished? Why should the time of the Congress of the United States be taken up in the constant discussion of individual projects here and there all over the United States, which may be multiplied indefinitely if we once enter upon the question, when by turning the matter over to a competent board, with ample funds, as we did the Panama Canal and the reclamatory work, we will secure not only more effective results but more speedy results?

Mr. President, from the huge pile of reports and documents which I have before me, I picked up at random a few moments ago a river and harbor bill approved March 4, 1915. From page 7 to page 15, inclusive, I notice several hundred new projects placed in the bill for examination and for the development of which doubtless it was hoped by Congressmen and Senators appropriations would be made.

Under the plan of preparing these bills a Senator or Representative doubtless received petitions from some district in their State or from some commercial organization or municipality asking an appropriation for the improvement of some little creek or stream. Thereupon a bill was introduced providing for an examination of the same and in some instances, as I understand, asking for an appropriation. The substantial feature of the bill found its way into the appropriation bill, and the engineers having the expenditure of the appropriations and charge of the rivers and harbors were to make an examination. Senators will recall the words I read from the message of President Roosevelt, wherein he stated that these engineers are "unsuited by their training and traditions to take the broad view and to gather and transmit to the Congress the commercial and industrial opinion and forecasts upon which waterway improvement must always so largely rest."

I submit that a careful examination of the thousands of projects favorably reported upon by the engineers justify in every respect the criticism by President Roosevelt.

I submit, further, that in too many instances local influences sway the judgment of those sent to make the examination and lead to egregious blunders and to the commission of positive wrongs against the Government. If I had time I could call attention to pages of testimony showing that engineers when they came to make examinations would be met by delegations, and they would be feted and banqueted. Of course, the purpose was to secure a favorable report upon some little stream or creek which it was hoped would receive immense appropriations from the Federal Treasury. It is human nature, of course, to present as strong a case as possible to the representatives of the Government. Accordingly the delegations and local representatives would depict in glowing terms the scenic beauties of the district, the enormous commerce that would be developed, the latent possibilities of the territory through which the little creek flowed, and indeed everything that the local Demosthenes could state with all of the embellishments that those seeking the appropriations could devise were urged in behalf of the appropriation sought.

It is needless to state that campaigns of this character too often become resistless, and any opposition is swept away as by a mighty rising tide; and so a recommendation would be made by the engineer and another so-called "project" would thus be added to the long, long list of rivers and harbors and creeks and rivulets and streams which we find in appropriation bills and which have taken from the Public Treasury nearly a billion dollars.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. KING. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have before me the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, appearing on page 2003 of the Engineer's report for 1918. That report shows that the bill to which you refer—the bill of March 14, 1915—contained orders for 219 surveys. Two hundred and three of the 219 had been reported on up to the 30th of last June. Forty of those were favorable and 163 were unfavorable. Nineteen and seven-tenths per cent of the whole were favorable. All the balance were turned down.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to learn that the engineers who made these examinations had the discriminating judgment to turn down the number which the Senator says——

Mr. RANSDELL. That is the official report.

Mr. KING. I am calling attention to the act of 1915 to show the method employed in framing these bills. I ask the Senator from Louisiana how these 219 items got in the river and harbor appropriation bill for 1915?

Mr. RANSDELL. I imagine they were put in on amendments introduced into the House and into the Senate by Representatives in Congress and Members of the Senate, and I imagine that those Senators and Representatives made very strong claims before their respective Houses, advocating the projects that they wanted to have surveyed. I have no doubt the constituents of the Senators and Representatives appealed to them and insisted that the project ought to be improved; and acting on the information furnished by their constituents they had the survey ordered. But in more than 80 per cent of the cases the constituents proved to be wrong, and the engineers in spite of all the banquets to which the Senator alludes, in spite of all the scenic beauties shown them, turned down over 80 per cent of these surveys.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator assure this body that they are not like Banquo's ghost and will not rise again?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is the custom in the Senate and in the House not to order a resurvey for at least six or eight years after one has been made. Of course conditions might change. We have a very rapidly growing country, and commerce might develop very rapidly in some neighborhoods, a great mine might be developed, or a tremendous lot of sawmill industries, or something of that kind, and a big commerce would probably be developed which would necessitate that they should make a resurvey inside of seven or eight years, but ordinarily we would wait a good while before we ordered another. That is the rule.

Mr. KING. The statement of my friend corroborates what I have stated, that the present system permits and indeed practically requires Senators and Congressmen responding, as my friend admits, to the importunities or petitions of constituents to introduce bills in their respective bodies calling for appropriations to be expended in the districts represented by the petitioners.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator criticizes that system, but I respectfully urge that he has not pointed out a better.

Mr. President, it is right hard to construct and very easy to pull down. The argument of the distinguished Senator from Utah reminds me of a story I once heard. I will illustrate it. The illustration will not be very long. I shall not take much time.

Mr. KING. My purpose is to conclude this discussion as soon as possible.

Mr. RANSDELL. A great author said that the argument of a number of people trying to pull down the Christian religion reminded him of the power of a 5-year-old boy armed with a sharp hatchet and placed on a ladder before a masterpiece of Michelangelo. It is the power of that baby to destroy. He, an infant only 5 years old, could cut it in pieces in five minutes and do absolutely nothing to replace the great masterpiece which money can not buy. There never was but one Michelangelo, there probably never will be another, but this little baby could completely destroy that wonderful masterpiece by being placed before it and given a hatchet.

Now, I say to the Senator that we have to do something to develop our waterways. We have got to develop our transportation system. We have had these waterways. The God of Hosts gave them to us. We used them for thousands of years before there were any railroads. They have been the cheapest of all known means of transportation and certainly the Senator would not argue that we ought not to use these waterways.

Now, as we ought to use them, and the Senator criticizes the present system, I submit in all fairness it is his duty to offer a better system. But he has not done that. We ought to get something better before we continue to criticize and destroy what we have. We have all done the best we could, I know. I see Senators around me who have been here for 15 or 20 years. They have been trying to get some things better and I believe gradually we are getting things better. If we could find a better method I for one would like to adopt it in this bill.

Mr. KING. The suggestion made by the Senator that if I become an iconoclast and attempt to destroy a system I should submit a better one is fair and legitimate argument and calls for a fair and honest reply, and before concluding my remarks I shall attempt to point out a better plan, although in what I have heretofore said I submit that this has already been done. I want to add, however, by way of parenthesis, in reply to the statement made by the Senator, that we have waterways and that "the God of Hosts gave them to us"; that he and the proponents of the present system of developing the streams of our country are trying to defy the Master Builder of whom he speaks. I beg that I shall not be considered sacrilegious in replying to the Senator's statement, but it is manifest that those who are attempting to convert little rivulets and insignificant creeks into streams to carry upon their bosoms the commerce of the land are ignoring all physical conditions and established and acknowledged laws limiting the activities and conduct of man. These efforts defy nature and can not result otherwise than in waste, willful and profligate. To expend huge sums in dredging and in constructing locks and dams and canals, as has been done in hundreds of cases, is wholly unjustifiable, and in my opinion can not be defended. Local communities in absorbing the money taken from the Treasury derive a temporary profit, but the interests of commerce are not subserved, and the taxpayers and the Government are robbed.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to my colleague that there may be only one great artist, as the one referred to by the Senator from Louisiana, but there will be more than one river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I will yield to the Senator from Florida in a moment. No matter how wonderful the river and harbor bill now under discussion may be, it can scarcely be said by its most enthusiastic supporters that it bears any resemblance to the immortal productions of Michelangelo. His genius has never been surpassed, and in sculpture and in painting he reached the highest levels of art and beauty. As long as men love the beautiful and the sublime, they will worship at the shrine of Michelangelo and glorify his immortal achievements. But the river and harbor bill, both this one and its predecessors, if the Senator will pardon me, seems to me to be wonderfully human, singularly finite, and manifest the multitudinous imperfections and frailties to which flesh is heir and human wisdom is subject.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, the Senator from Louisiana did not intimate that it was the work of Michelangelo, but he did try to show that even in a matter of that kind the man who destroys ought to offer something better. The man who wanted to pull down the beautiful Christian religion which gives so much happiness and comfort to people could do no more to replace it than the little baby of 5 could do to replace the beautiful masterpiece.

No, I am not pretending that this river and harbor bill is anything very magnificent. I think it is full of defects. I would like to see it better. I will say to the Senator, if I had my way I believe I could write a better bill. But I have not had my way. I have gone on with the restrictions of legislation to which all of us have to submit, and I have done the best I could, assisting in my humble way. Again, I submit the man who wants to destroy that which has grown up here in the last 40 or 50 years, the best system we could evolve in 40 or 50 years, ought to suggest something better.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator one question? Is it not a fact that the way he would improve the present bill would be by appropriating more money?

Mr. RANSDELL. I would appropriate perhaps more money now, but I would bring it to a close. I would take the Ohio River, for instance, and find out what an engineer, like Gen. Sibert, said would be enough to finish it, and I would apply to the Ohio River exactly the same system that we applied to the Panama Canal. We told the engineers, "Here, we have the Panama Canal. Go there and bring it to a close as quickly as possible under the most scientific method you can apply and send us the bill." That is what I would do. I would authorize these engineers when a great project was adopted to finish it, and be businesslike. It would take a great deal less money in the long run, I would say. But we are approaching that, let me repeat.

Now, take the Delaware River. It is a great project. It is connected with a great city. The engineers said they can not use advantageously more than the amount of money we are giving them in this bill. They had to their credit between four and five million dollars, and we are giving them an additional million dollars. The work on the Delaware River has to be done with dredges. It has to be done with human means. It takes a certain number of laborers and a certain number of very extensive mechanical appliances known as dredges to move the material out, and they can not use in the coming year more than the $5,000,000 which they have. Now, why give them any more?

I will say to the Senator we are approaching as near as possible this ideal condition which he and I both wish to reach. On the Ohio River they had $8,000,000, which they have, plus the $3,000,000 we are giving them in this bill, making a total of $11,000,000, which will be about all they can advantageously expend in one year, and as we are having annual river and harbor bills we will give them only what they can expend in a year. That is all they need. That is the process.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Florida rose, and I yield to him.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator suggested that Congressmen and Senators press upon Congress for appropriations for the projects he mentioned—201 bills, he said.

Mr. KING. The Senator will pardon me. I asked the Senator from Louisiana how those items got in the bill and, as I understood him, his reply was that Senators and Congressmen at the request of their respective cities and districts introduced bills and those bills found an outlet, if I may be permitted the expression, in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true, but the point I make, and the Senator from Louisiana is entirely correct about it, is that those bills do not call for an appropriation at all. They simply call for an investigation, that is all, and merely ask that the engineers may survey and investigate and make an examination into projects. They do not ask for an appropriation right out; they do not even recommend an appropriation; they simply provide that Congress shall authorize the engineers to make an investigation of the project.

Mr. KING. I am aware of that fact, not only because of this bill but I had read many of the reports that had been submitted with respect to these projects. But the point I was going to make when I invited attention to this bill was that it was difficult to emancipate ourselves from the traditions and the systems of the past. The old tradition was and is, and the old plan was and it is still adhered to, that Senators and Congressmen will introduce bills for the purpose of having some project examined, and under the present plan those projects, meritorious or otherwise, find some official recognition. They find their way into bills and examinations are made and engineers are sent to examine them, and they are amenable to whatever influences, whatever conditions, surround them when they reach the places where the examinations are to be made. The result is that there have found their way into appropriation bills hundreds of projects which experience has condemned as unworthy, as not possessing merit, and as not being necessary for the commercial needs of the people, either State or National.

Now let me call attention to some of these items in the 1915 bill. I admit, as the Senator said, that the majority of them did not finally receive appropriations, but it illustrates the method, the plan that has been pursued in the past, and this plan hangs upon us and binds us as with chains that can not be broken. The clammy hand of the old past rests upon us and we seem unable to remove it and adopt a rational, living, scientific plan, one that commends itself to the judgment of honest, intelligent, and fair-minded men.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator permit me to state just a little fact in connection with what he has there?

Mr. KING. I shall never get through if the Senator interrupts me so frenquently.

Mr. RANSDELL. I simply want to show in connection with this bill of 1915, to which you alluded, that it contained 219 projects. You were proceeding to discuss it, and I showed you the report indicated that 19.7 per cent of them were favorably reported. Gen. Taylor, the Assistant Chief of Engineers, tells me that out of 310 surveys acted on unfavorably under the bills of 1913 and 1915, the one which you have in your hand, I believe, and 1916, 255 went no further than a preliminary survey and a very slight preliminary examination; that over 82 per cent were reported on adversely upon the preliminary survey. I simply wanted the Senator to have that fact in discussing the matter.

Mr. KING. I remember the former statement made by the distinguished Senator, and I have no reason to challenge it; and, indeed, I would not when my friend states something as a fact, because I know he is especially buttressed with respect to whatever he states concerning rivers and harbors. But let me call attention to some of these great (?) streams that have been discovered and given life in the river and harbor bill.

The Coosa River; St. Lucie Inlet; mouth of the Cape Neddick River; Belfast Harbor; Indian Creek, Merrimac River; Mystic River—I will not pause to comment upon the name which is suggestive of many things; Point Judith Pond; Shetucket and Quinebaug Rivers; Tuxis Island; Quinnipiac River; Mill River; Morris Cove; and another Mystic River—and we will reach Mystery River pretty soon.

Mr. KENYON. Are there two Mystic Rivers?

Mr. KING. Apparently. One Mystic River is in Massachusetts, I think, and as to the other, I have not yet discovered just where it is.

Mr. KENYON. That is the mystery.

Mr. KING. The Sebethe River, from its mouth to a point at or near the city of Bristol, and a canal from a suitable point on the Sebethe River to New Britain, Conn; Farmington River; Harbor of Refuge at Duck Island; Rouse Point Harbor; Pugsley Creek; Newark Bay; Shrewsbury River; West Creek, N. J.; Adams Creek, N. J.; Forked River, N. J.; Dividing Creek, N. J.; Pensauken Creek, N. J.; Patapasco River; Smith Creek; Nanjemoy Creek; Knapp Narrows; Piscataway Creek; Pagan River—we will come to Heathen and Mythology Rivers soon; Little Wicomico River; Neuse River; Shallotte River; South Fork of Edisco River; cut between Bailey's cut of the Satilla River and the head of Dover Creek; and so on, page after page. Mr. President, of these unknown, many of them unknowable, creeks and rivulets and streams that were presented for consideration at the hands of the Senate of the United States and of the House of Representatives.

In this same bill I find that a number of projects upon which large sums of money were expended were recognized as so unnecessary that the engineers are directed to make reexaminations with a view to their abandonment. I have made some investigation, but have been unable to ascertain whether the reexaminations were made. Mr. President, it will be a difficult thing to throw off any of these unworthy and wasteful projects. They are like vicious and blood-sucking parasites. They will adhere to the Government, extracting from the Public Treasury until the public conscience is aroused to the folly and wrong of this indefensible system.

I invite attention to the river and harbor bill approved August 8, 1917. It contains several pages of new projects. I have not had time to count or examine them in detail, but from such a hasty examination as made, I believe I am safe in saying that there are considerable more than a hundred. I notice among them such mighty streams as Sterling Basin, Kill van Kull (New York), Harbor of Silver Lake, Ocracoke Island (North Carolina), Smiths Creek, Broad Creek, Queens Creek, Northeast River, Little River, all in North Carolina; Bohicket Creeks, Church Flats, and Lynchs River, S. C.; also Banana Creek, Indian and Halifax Rivers, Withlacoochee River, Lake Worth Inlet, Peace River, Braden River, Hillsboro River, Fla.; Bayou Tigre, also the construction of a waterway to connect Atchafalaya River and Bayous Courtableau, Teche, and Vermilion, Bayou Dorcheat, Bayou Terrebonne, Bayou Lacassine, Bayou Chene, Shallow Bayou, all in Louisiana.

The bill which is now being considered contains 70 new projects, and I make bold to predict that before it leaves the Senate others will be added by way of amendments. As I recall, the Army engineers, keeping in view the condition of the Treasury and what might be denominated the necessities of the war, asked for $12,000,000 only for the coming year. When the bill left the House it carried $26,939,344. Of this amount, $2,934,000 were for maintenance, $15,077,500 for continuing the improvement and maintenance; for surveys and contingencies, $150,000, and for new projects $8,768,844. The bill now comes to us from the Senate carrying appropriations amounting to $32,702,364. It will be seen that the Senate has increased the number of projects and has also increased the amount of the appropriation. I respectfully submit that the amount carried by the bill is not justified under the present conditions. I contend that there are many items in the bill wholly unworthy and that a large portion of the amount appropriated will prove of no advantage in developing our waterways and, indeed, will be wasted. The heavy drafts made upon the Treasury of our country by reason of the war are not taken into account. The spirit of economy which now, more than at any other time, should guide the conduct of the National Legislature is not reflected in any of the pages of this bill. I do not desire to harshly and unfairly criticize this bill and the many items therein, but I do most earnestly insist that we would be better serving the country if the appropriation carried in this bill was limited to $12,000,000. Senators will bear in mind that there are approximately $45,000,000 now in the hands of the Secretary of War for the purpose of being expended during the coming year in river and harbor improvements. This amount, together with the $12,000,000 which I have suggested, will be all that can be economically and prudently expended during the coming year.

I appreciate that any attempt to reduce the appropriation will fail. It would be a most remarkable thing—a course which would be deemed miraculous—if any item in a river and harbor bill were eliminated or reduced. I have made some examination, with a view of ascertaining whether there had ever been a reduction in the amount carried in a river and harbor appropriation bill after it had been reported to either the House or the Senate, and my recollection is that in every instance the bill left the House or the Senate calling for a larger appropriation than that provided when it first appeared in the House and when it first reached the Senate. Appeals for retrenchment and economy meet with deaf ears now, and the appropriation bills that we are considering carry sums so huge and amounts so enormous as to terrify every thoughtful American. If appeals are made for reductions they fall upon deaf ears. The wine of war is still in our veins, and the huge sums which the war demanded produced such intoxication that apparently we still suffer from its effects. I have upon a number of occasions appealed to the majority party in the Senate to live up to the traditional record of the party, and in the face of insistent demands for appropriations to resist the same and stand for economy in every branch of the public service.

If time permitted I should like to call attention to hundreds of the projects provided for in river and harbor bills to millions and tens of millions of dollars that have been expended, and to demonstrate from the official reports that the money expended has been wasted and that the streams upon which it was spent serve no useful purpose and carry no commerce; but, notwithstanding this record which rises up in condemnation of the plan we are pursuing, we still adhere to the same. Senator Newlands devoted his splendid talents to reform this discredited and archaic system under which we were operating. He hoped that under the amendment to the river and harbor bill approved August 1, 1917, a change in the plan might be effectuated. Senators will recall the amendment, which is as follows:

SEC. 18. That a commission, to be known as the Waterways Commission, consisting of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, at least one of whom shall be chosen from the active or retired list of the Engineer Corps of the Army, at least one of whom shall be an expert hydraulic engineer from civil life, and the remaining five of whom may each be selected either from civil life or the public service, is hereby created and authorized, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress that relate to study, development, or control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, or to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services in investigating, with respect to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, drainage, forestry, arid and swamp land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, storage, and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, to secure the necessary data, and to formulate and report to Congress, as early as practicable, a comprehensive plan or plans for the development of waterways and the water resources of the United States for the purposes of navigation and for every useful purpose, and recommendations for the modification or discontinuance of any project herein or heretofore adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the Newlands bill.

Mr. KING. As the Senator suggests, that is what is known as the Newlands amendment to the river and harbor bill of 1917. Senator Newlands had for years attempted to have a broad, scientific, and modern plan adopted of dealing with the harbors of our country as well as the streams over which Congress has jurisdiction. President Roosevelt had urged a "new type" of work for our rivers and harbors, "a new type of work and a new organization." He insisted that there should be a modern way of dealing with water transportation to meet the ways of a "modern nation." I think it is a matter of common knowledge that Senator Newlands had impressed upon President Roosevelt, as well as other leaders in public thought, that a change in dealing with the problem of water transportation was imperatively needed. Senator Newlands had repeatedly offered in Congress measures—broad, sweeping, and comprehensive in their terms—which would have brought about reforms. The amendment which I have just read, offered by Senator Newlands, was a preliminary step to the consummation of his masterful plan. Senators will recall that a number of commissions exist having to do with our rivers and harbors. There is a Mississippi River Commission, which was created by the act of Congress of June 28, 1879, which was charged by that act with the duty of completing the hydrographical survey of the river and its tributaries and to devise jetty and levee systems. The last report of the commission is dated July 24, 1918, and shows that it has expended more than $96,000,000.

In 1902 a Board of Engineers was created by Congress in the office of the Chief Engineer of the Army, and it had various duties to perform. By the act of March 3, 1909, its duties were extended to include the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities and develop the utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and so forth; and by the act of July 25, 1912, its powers were further amplified. The Secretary of War has control of the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and he exercises authority through the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers of the Army. Senators will observe that the Newlands amendment to the act of 1917 seeks to coordinate the activities of all commissions and contemplates the placing in the hands of the commission created by the amendment of all authority and the necessary power to deal with harbors and inland waterways and all cognate questions. I stated that this amendment was a preliminary step to the consummation of the broad plan which Senator Newlands had in view. As I understand, his plan contemplated that there should be appointed a board or commission which would have full and exclusive control under Congress of the harbors and of all streams subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government; that this commission should devise a plan to conserve the waters forming the streams of the country and their proper utilization for irrigation, navigation, and all proper purposes; that their plan should provide a scientific, rational, and comprehensive system for the improvement of such streams as were necessary in the interest of trade and commerce; that appropriations made by Congress should be expended by such commission, not as desired in the interest of any particular locality or district, but in consonance with the national, comprehensive, and modern plan worked out and approved and for the benefit of the people generally and in the interest of commerce.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if anything has been done by the President in the creation of the commission which this law authorizes.

Mr. KING. I regret to say that the President has not yet appointed the members of this commission. Of course, it is realized that the pressing responsibilities resting upon the Executive growing out of the war have occupied his time, and I have no doubt that he felt that this question, important though it may be, could be deferred until the war clouds had passed away, but I have no doubt but that in the near future a commission will be named.

I earnestly insist that the time has come when we should overthrow the archaic and wasteful plan which we have followed and adopt a wiser and a more rational one. I shall offer at the appropriate time an amendment to the pending bill which I sincerely hope will be adopted. The amendment is a substitute for the pending bill and is as follows:

That the sum of $12,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the fiscal year 1920, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended under the direction of the Waterways Commission created by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, for the necessary and proper construction, completion, repair, preservation, and maintenance of harbors, river channels, canals, embankments, levees, wharves, and water terminals, within the United States, its Territories and possessions.

SEC. 2. That the floating plant, consisting of dredges, barges, towboats, snag boats, and all other equipment under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, is hereby placed within the control, use, and possession of said Waterways Commission to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Mississippi River Commission created by the act approved June 28, 1879, and the Board of Engineers created by section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902, shall be abolished and terminated at the end of the present fiscal year, and that after the 30th day of June, 1919, said waterways commission shall become invested with all the powers and duties presently exercised by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, the Mississippi River Commission, and said Board of Engineers with respect to the maintenance and improvement of the harbors and waterways within the United States, its Territories and possessions.

Senators will observe that it calls for an appropriation of $12,000,000 only for the fiscal year 1920. This sum is to be placed in the hands of the commission created by the Newlands amendment and to be expended by it upon such waterways and harbors as may be deemed necessary. Of course, I would prefer to see a law enacted which would take the place of our existing statutes, but which would be framed upon the theory set forth in the Newlands amendment just referred to. This commission, however, can be made permanent and absorb all other organizations dealing with harbors and waterways and have its powers somewhat enlarged and its duties more clearly defined. I felt that it would be impossible to secure the passage of an act of the character referred to, but did hope there would be very strong support of the amendment which I have just read and which I shall offer as a substitute for the pending bill.

It seems so plain to me that our present system is defective that my amendment should receive the unanimous support of the Senate. If Senators do not think the amount of $12,000,000 is sufficient for the current year in order to carry on necessary improvements of our harbors and waterways, the amount could be increased; but I do insist that we should now inaugurate the reform which has been too long postponed. Whatever amount Congress shall consider necessary—imperatively necessary—for the current year should be placed in the hands of a commission consisting of men of the highest standing, integrity, and ability, with authority to expend the same wherever it would best serve the end in view and the needs of commerce. I can not conceive of any sufficient reason why this plan should be rejected. As stated, our present plan has proven defective. It has broken down and stands condemned before the public.

The Newlands amendment calls for the creation of a commission consisting of seven members, one of whom shall be of the Engineer Corps of the Army, at least one of whom shall be an expert hydraulic engineer from civil life, the remaining five of whom may be selected from civil life or the public service. This permits the President to select men of the highest standing and ability in the Nation. Under this authority a commission of really great men can and doubtless will be selected. They will be chosen because of their knowledge of the problem growing out of the development of our inland waterways, the conservation of our water supply, the improvement of our harbors, and the extension of our commerce. A commission of this character, invested with sufficient authority, would make a comprehensive survey of the United States, formulate a plan, modern, progressive, scientific, and national in scope and character, dealing with this great question. It would call, of course, for the expenditure, over a series of years, of a large sum. Streams and harbors would be selected for improvement not because of local interest or local appeals but as a part of a broad national program. The present and past method of selecting projects for development and improvement would thus be eliminated. The evils which have been condemned in the present system would not exist. Such a plan prepared by a commission of the character referred to would be submitted to Congress, and upon approval the necessary appropriations would be made for its execution. Under this plan whatever appropriations were made would be placed in the hands of the commission and expended by it in harmony with the plan and for the purpose of its development and ultimate completion.

If a great building is to be constructed competent architects are selected; it is planned in every detail; other buildings are examined; the sources of architectural knowledge are drawn upon, and plans commensurate with the magnitude of the undertaking are prepared and adopted. Then, and not till then, is the construction of the building entered upon. When entered upon the work is prosecuted in a proper and rational manner. There is coordination of all activities and uniformity in the work performed. We have been following a plan entirely different. We have had no plans and there has been no systematic, uniform, scientific development. A little of the foundation of the building has been dug, and then work abandoned. Material has been placed upon the ground before needed. Doors have been prepared for the building without determining what the size of the openings for the same would be; and so confusion and waste have resulted.

If the commission to which I have referred shall be created and a plan of waterway and harbor development formulated and adopted, then there will be real improvement of our waterways. Congress will not spend its time in receiving petitions for the "improvements" of unknown rivulets and creeks, and it will not be preparing appropriation bills carrying hundreds of items of appropriation for the same. There will be an annual appropriation made to the commission, to be expended in the manner the accepted and comprehensive plan calls for, in order that the work may go forward systematically, scientifically, and in a manner to secure a perfected and comprehensive system commensurate with the needs of the Nation.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to ask the Senator if he would be willing to vote for a lump-sum appropriation of an amount sufficient to improve all the rivers and harbors of the country and irrigate all the arid lands and improve or drain all the swamp lands and purify all the streams, as contemplated in the commission which was created under the terms of the Newlands bill?

I ask the question because the bill contemplates all of those things. Indeed, as the Senator will recall, it proposes to take the water when it falls from the clouds and utilize that water or follow it through all of its courses for the uses of human beings, in the rivers for navigation, in the arid lands for irrigation, in the cultivated fields for agriculture, and in forestry. It follows it, in fact, in every way, shape, form, and fashion; and the commission was to make a general report to Congress advising proper expenditures for all these purposes. Now, my question is, Does the Senator think he would be willing to vote that lump sum if this great commission should recommend it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator's question can not be answered in a word. As I have indicated, the commission created under the Newlands Act is rather for investigation and advisory purposes, and its duties and powers are not as extensive as should be possessed by a commission constituted to carry out the broad national plan and program for which I am contending. But, as I have stated, we find a law in existence providing for a commission with rather broad powers, though its chief purpose is rather that of investigation and recommendation than the execution of a proper and comprehensive plan of waterway development. If my amendment should be adopted I would expect at the next session of Congress the enactment of a law using this commission as the nucleus or basis, which law would increase the powers of the commission, enlarge its authority, define its duties, and give it permanency. But I think it very much wiser to commit to this commission the expenditure of any amount which we may now appropriate for rivers and harbors than to enact the measure now before us and perpetuate the present inefficient system.

The commission to be appointed by the President under the Newlands amendment could properly function for the economical and proper expenditure of any amount which Congress may appropriate under this or succeeding bills.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. But—if the Senator will pardon me for just one word further, then I will yield—I do believe that a commission that has power and is authorized to deal with the question of improving the waterways of the United States and that is authorized to deal with the conservation of the streams over which the United States has jurisdiction could secure better results than possibly could be obtained if a number of commissions were intrusted with such responsibilities and if the present plan is adhered to. I believe a single authority with broad powers would prevent duplications and conflicts. A single body or commission controlling the headwaters of the Mississippi and other interstate streams having authority to provide plans for their development for the purpose of commerce and the protection of their banks, to the end that contiguous property shall not be destroyed, with authority to execute such plans and to provide against floods and all other matters referred to in the Newlands amendment, would certainly be competent to expend any appropriation which this Congress will make for the improvement of the harbors and waterways of our country.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will state that the Senator from Nevada, Mr. Newlands, had in mind such a broad, comprehensive plan, which was to be worked out by his commission; but, let me say, it was an investigating commission. It was not intended to execute. It was to investigate all of these subjects and report to Congress, not intending to execute unless Congress authorized it so to do. We have a great many commissions on various things. For instance, the arid lands are under the control of the Interior Department. The Mississippi River Commission is in charge of flood control on that great river.

The work of improvement for navigation is under the control of the Engineer Corps of the Army. It is possible that we will reach an ideal stage at some time; and it was in the hope of reaching this ideal stage that Congress created this National Waterways Commission, which is commonly known as the Newlands Commission.

Personally I hope that the President of the United States will appoint the commission, and we will see whether or not this commission can get up some better system than we have operated under in the past. I will say to the Senator that I agree with him that we have not had the work carried on in a very wise way. I do not want to criticize, but I should like to remind him that the great ex-Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, whom he seems to laud so highly in many respects, was for a great many years chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, and by all odds the most influential man in either branch of Congress in creating and passing legislation to put us in shape to go ahead with these great works. We have gotten away from his ideas, to some extent, since he left the committee, in 1910, but we are doing the best we can. I think we are making very fair progress.

I will say that I should like to see much larger sums appropriated. I should be glad to see these works pushed very much more rapidly; and if the Senator would help us to pass these bills instead of opposing them, as he does, if he would be constructive in his policy rather than destructive, I believe that we would very much more rapidly get on the ideal plan that he seems to favor.

Mr. KING. I can not reply to my friend in the language of the Scripture. "Almost thou persuadest me," although the Senator from Louisiana makes now, as he always does, most earnest, eloquent, and persuasive arguments in support of propositions for which he is contending.

Mr. President, I deny that I am destructive because I oppose rivers and harbors bills which, in my opinion, after careful examination of reports, contain many items that ought not to receive attention at the hands of Congress. The Senator admits—not only now, but in the remarks which he made a short time ago—that the policy which we have adopted conduces to waste and that the work has "not been carried on in a wise way." He condemned, a few moments ago, the policy of piecemeal construction and confesses that the Newlands Commission was created for the purpose of reaching an "ideal" system. His position must be, therefore, that the plan that has been pursued by the Government is not an efficient, suitable, or scientific one. Is it destructive to oppose a system which the Senator himself concedes has not effectuated the best results and that everybody who has made a careful and disinterested examination of the subject concedes has resulted in waste, extravagance, and inadequate results?

The Senator refers to the fact that the former Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, though he was the chairman of the committee in the House for many years, did not elaborate a different plan. I do not know the reason why Senator Burton and those associated with him did not secure the passage of a broad, national, and scientific plan. However, it is well known that he and others severely criticized the present plan, and, as Senators know, in the report submitted by Senator Burton and others in 1912, known as "The National Waterways Commission Report," many recommendations were made for the purpose of improving the plan now in force.

However, Senators know the difficulty of securing legislative reforms. We often follow the line of least resistance. Those coming to the Senate and to the House find certain channels, and I was about to say certain ruts, well defined, along which so many illustrious ones have passed. We soon find ourselves within their banks and walls, and it requires almost superhuman strength to escape therefrom and to get upon other levels where a more commanding sweep and vision will be had. Reforms come gradually, and the most beneficent results are the product of evolutionary growth. The accretion of experience adds to the sum total of human knowledge, and upon the stepping-stones of the dead past and of the experience and struggles of those who have gone before we attain higher things and reach higher levels.

Mr. President, if my amendment is adopted I feel confident that this discredited system under which we are operating will come to an end. The commission, as soon as appointed, will enter upon the investigation of the questions committed to its charge. They will study in a scientific and national way the question of water transportation and the improvement of rivers and harbors, the impounding of waters in order to prevent floods destructive to the banks and channels of navigable and improved streams, and, generally, all allied and cognate matters. They will prepare a plan embodying their investigations and researches and submit it to Congress for consideration. Upon the approval of the plan in toto or in modified form the country will know what waterways are to be improved, the nature and extent of the same, and the appropriations required for such purpose. With this information Congress can act intelligently. It will know what annual appropriations will be required in order to complete the adopted plan and can meet the same free from the influences and unhampered by the importunities of local sections and communities.

Some further legislation will be required in order to confer upon the commission the authority and power necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose suggested; but I repeat that the adoption of the amendment which I have read is not only a step in the right direction, but it carries us a long way toward the goal for which all who desire the welfare of our country are striving. There is no doubt but what our Nation needs safe and commodious harbors, not only for our own ships but for the ships of other nations. We have an expanding domestic market, but we need foreign markets. It is important that every legitimate and proper step be now taken to increase our foreign trade and commerce. The nations of the world need our raw materials and many of them are calling for our finished products. It is a difficult task to readjust our industrial and economic system to the conditions which the immediate future demands. The products of field and mine and factory must be multiplied, and we must carry to the lands beyond the sea the products of which we must produce a surplus. The interests of labor must constantly be before our eyes and no opportunity must be ignored that will make for the prosperity and welfare of the toiling masses.

Those streams that can properly aid commerce should be improved. For these and other reasons I am urging a policy that will conduce to the development of commerce, the legitimate and proper improvement of rivers and harbors, and the general welfare of the people of our country. In this hour of readjustment of business, and when marked changes will be realized in our economic conditions, we should be quick to discard the discredited and outworn policies and to adopt in their stead measures which rest upon a sound and substantial base. I earnestly commend the plan embodied in my amendment to the favorable consideration of the Members of this body.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I only want to say a word.

If we had the system of waterway navigation that has been suggested by the Senator from Utah, if we had the plan already made, and if we had the system already constructed, under the condition existing in this country to-day it would be an absolute and a flat failure. So many millions of dollars have been expended on the Ohio River. It runs through the richest and most productive part of the country. There is as much water going down to the sea through that river as there has ever been. The towns have developed; the country has prospered; commerce has grown and increased rapidly; and what do you find? That after all this expenditure of money there is 50 per cent less commerce carried on the Ohio River now than there was 4 or 5 or 10 years ago.

What is the trouble? Is it because a competent engineer has not laid out this work, or because it has not been well constructed? No. Is it because the commerce is not there to carry? No. What is the trouble, and what is going to continue to be the trouble? If you had all the best engineers in the world to lay out one of these watercourses, and had all the improvements constructed as they ought to be constructed, with conditions existing as they now are, it would be a failure, so far as carrying commerce is concerned. Why? Because under the existing conditions there is a rate-making power for carrying and transporting the products and commodities and commerce of this country that is allowed absolutely to suppress and destroy any possibility of competition on the waterways; and so long as that unrestricted power exists, that long will your waterways be a failure in the United States, and that long will they not carry your commerce. You had better get to thinking about that a little while thinking about the other phases of the matter.

The great Creator, when He put us in this world, indicated that we were to be moved by but two incentives—the hope of reward and the fear of punishment. What incentive is there to carry commerce upon these rivers if nothing can be made out of it? If, because of the competition of these other carriers who control the carrying trade of the country, it must be done at so low a rate that nothing can be made out of the service, it will always be a failure. That is where the trouble lies. That is the condition you see now, and you might just as well get to thinking about it somewhat along that line. You would better put the control on where it needs to be put on. You would better put it on where it will be effectual and where it will provide relief.

They say we have started out and by piecemeal and installment we have constructed some of these improvements. That is true. We have a general system which, if followed and carried out, would improve the rivers to the point where they would carry this commerce that is there to be carried under such conditions, of course, as would be remunerative for the carrying. The people along these rivers have asked Congress to do this. What for? They do not, in fact, want water transportation. They want the possibility of water competition that will reduce freight rates to them, and they want their stuff carried on the railroads. That is about what the condition is in this country; and they have appealed to Congress for this relief, because the possibility that commerce will be put upon the water does bring relief to them.

That is about what is the matter with this country, so far as the improvement of our inland waterways is concerned. That is the reason why I insisted upon the Director of Railroads exercising authority, under this bill that he has, to improve the waterways while the railroads are under Government control, while the Government can say something about fixing the rates. I said: "Let these barges be put on the lower Mississippi River, and let the commerce there be developed under fair and equal conditions." It is there to be carried. The necessity exists for both forms of transportation.

Why do I say that? Because when the emergency arose the railroads were unequal to carrying the commerce of the country and the soldiers of the country, and we could not carry them on the water, because there were no facilities for doing so.

These improvements have been started. They will be beneficial if we can ever make the right sort of conditions along this other line. They have proved somewhat beneficial in giving the people down by these rivers the possible competition by water that did help them in the matter of freight rates. That is just about what is the matter with this country, so far as I can see; and that is the reason why you never are going to have successful inland-waterway transportation so long as the railroad companies are allowed to control the freight rates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 13, after the numerals at the end of line 1 and after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "for improvement of Sarasota Bay in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 844, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $92,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 4, after the words "in all," to strike out "$17,700" and insert "$109,700," so as to read:

In all, $109,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 9, to insert:

Carrabelle Bar and Harbor, Apalachicola, St. Joseph and St. Andrews Bays, Apalachicola and Chipola Rivers, and channel from Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, Fla.; Flint River, Ga.; and Chattahoochee River, Ga. and Ala.: For maintenance, $87,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 20, after the words "Ship Island Pass," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

Gulfport Harbor, Miss.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance of anchorage basin at Gulfport and channel therefrom to the anchorage or roadstead at Ship Island, and for the improvement and maintenance of channel at Ship Island Pass, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

Pascagoula, Wolf, Jordan, Pearl, and East Pearl Rivers, and Biloxi Harbor, Miss.: For maintenance, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 25, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$1,250,000," so as to make the clause read:

Passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $1,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 10, after the word "Louisiana," to insert "for maintenance, $7,000," so as to make the clause read:

Bayous Vermilion, Nezpique, des Cannes, Plaquemine Brule, and Queue de Tortue, Mermentau River, and Calcasieu River and Pass, La.: For maintenance, $7,000. The project for Mermentau River and tributaries is hereby extended to include Bayou des Cannes as far up as the Evangeline Bridge in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1398, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 18, after the word "navigation," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to make the clause read:

Removing the water hyacinths, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas: For the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable waters in the States named in so far as it is or may become an obstruction to navigation, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, before the word "improvement," to strike out "continuing" and insert "for maintenance, $25,000; continuing"; in line 24, after "$400,000," to insert "for improvement of Houston Ship Channel, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1632, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $950,000: Provided, That not more than $275,000 shall be expended in the construction of each of the dredges; in all, $1,375,000," so as to make the clause read:

Galveston Harbor, Galveston Channel, Port Bolivar Channel, Texas City Channel, and Houston Ship Channel, Tex.: For maintenance, $25,000; continuing improvement by construction of sea-wall extension to protect Galveston Channel, $400,000; for improvement of Houston Ship Channel, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1632, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $950,000: Provided, That not more than $275,000 shall be expended in the construction of each of the dredges; in all, $1,375,000. The unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of channel to Port Bolivar are hereby made available for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1122, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have already stated to the Senate that I am not going to spend any more of my breath or strength in trying to defeat items that have been inserted in the bill; but I know there are some Senators who desire some explanation of this remarkable item, and I had hoped that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] would give us some information with relation to it. The Senator from Texas is now in the Chamber.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, while the Senator from Texas is looking up his data I will state that this item is inserted in the bill on the recommendation of the engineers, and there is a very liberal contribution there. I think local interests put up one-half of the total cost. It was intended that provision should be made for the construction of two dredges, and this appropriation covers that. The committee added to the recommendation of the engineers the proviso that not more than $275,000 shall be expended in the construction of each of the dredges, so we put that limitation on it. If they find that these dredges are going to cost very much more than they would cost under ordinary conditions and in excess of $275,000 each, then they can not build the dredges; but we limited the expenditure for dredges in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not think for a moment that they are going to cost more than $275,000 apiece, does he? There was a provision for the purchase of a dredge in connection with the dredging of the channel of Brunswick Harbor, and it was stated then that the cost of the dredge would not exceed $220,000. I do not think there is any question but that these dredges can be purchased for $275,000 each.

Mr. FLETCHER. Two hundred and twenty thousand dollars? That is a different kind of dredge, I think.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that this limitation was put on in committee at my suggestion. Gen. Taylor stated that the dredges that they intended to build for this work would cost $350,000 each, and as the committee believed that we ought not at this time to go into such an undertaking at such a high cost Gen. Taylor finally said that the dredges could not be built at once, anyway, and that the department would be willing to cut that down, I think, 30 per cent, in round numbers, so that if these dredges are built it will be at a lower basis of cost than the estimate upon which this appropriation is based.

Mr. SMOOT. The dredge for Brunswick Harbor was a sea-going dredge. They had ordinary dredges that they could use, but they did not have a seagoing dredge; and the price of that dredge was to be $220,000.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; but these dredges, they stated, would have a very large capacity. I remember it very distinctly, because I suggested that with merely a limitation of $275,000 the money might be utilized to purchase one of the cheaper dredges, and I was assured that advantage would not be taken of the situation in that way.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have here the engineers' report, recommending——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait just a moment, until I can get the attention of the Senator from Florida, it may not be necessary even to refer to the report. I understood the Senator to say that the appropriations made here for the Galveston Channel and the Houston Ship Channel are to be augmented by a considerable amount from the people of Texas, or the local interests of Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The people of Houston are to provide one-half of the cost of the project. This will mean that they will contribute something over $1,100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Has this channel been used in the past?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has. I have here a statement of the tonnage.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me say also the people of Houston have already contributed over four million dollars in connection with the channel, the Government about four and a half millions. The present depth has proved insufficient for the vessels that must use the channel in order to transport the products of some 22 or 24 large industries that have already been established along the banks of the channel. The people of Houston have established on this channel probably the finest and most modern municipal warehouses and wharves in the country, equaled in efficiency of equipment only by similar facilities at the Panama Canal. Free wharfage is provided.

Mr. SMOOT. Why did the people of Houston contribute in this way? Do they know that every other project here is to be paid wholly by the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They regarded this project of such pressing importance that they announced their willingness to contribute.

Mr. SMOOT. Then do not let us wait one moment; let us give them every dollar they ask. If there are any people on earth who are so perfectly willing to put up a dollar in order to get a dollar out of the Treasury of the United States for the project of a canal, let us give it to them quickly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to hear the Senator give expression to that sentiment. I do not think any other people in the United States have shown such determination, such courage, and such vision in connection with a great waterway project as have the people of Houston in connection with this ship channel.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one other question. The maintenance charge here seems to be rather high. Why do not the people of Houston divide the maintenance charge with the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That particular feature was not suggested in the hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, if I know the situation down there—and I will admit that I am not very familiar with it—a maintenance charge for this canal is going to be very expensive. Am I correct in that, and can the Senator tell what the amount will be?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About $325,000 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, is an immense amount of money for just simply maintenance charges. I would like to ask the Senator if he will not accept an appropriation for maintenance of $25,000, providing that a similar amount shall be advanced by the people of Houston, Tex.?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In view of the fact that the people of Houston have already contributed one-half the original cost, I think it would be unfair to ask them to share the maintenance cost, inasmuch as the commerce of the whole country is benefited by the project.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, though, that there is no such maintenance anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This maintenance charge is due to the fact that the channel is some 50 miles long, a large part of it traversing Galveston Bay. This makes maintenance at times more difficult than would ordinarily be the case. I think you will find that it is not any more expensive than any project of a similar character in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is another one like it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Perhaps not; but——

Mr. SMOOT. Is the fact that the people of Houston are willing——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me call attention to the Delaware River. I say to the Senator the maintenance of the channel of the Delaware River from the sea to the harbor at Philadelphia, I am informed, is proportionately higher than will be the maintenance of this channel, and that it is the same way with the Mississippi to New Orleans. The same is probably true as to the channel in the Columbia River.

Mr. SMOOT. That is quite different.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not when you compare the size of the cities, the population supplied, the tonnage, actual and potential, involved.

Mr. SMOOT. I guess I had better quit saying anything or else they will put in a provision here that it shall all be paid by the Federal Government, and I do not want that to happen.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator ought to be content to leave the item as it is. That total charge for maintenance covers not only the present improvement but the whole channel.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is admitted, of course, that the maintenance charge will be $350,000 a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. I say that is a large maintenance charge.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is for the whole channel. Five million dollars has already been expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 21, to insert:

Brazos Island Harbor, Tex.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1710, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $66,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 7, after the word "document," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000"; in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$90,000" and insert "$115,000," so as to make the clause read:

Harbor at Sabine Pass and Port Arthur Canal, Sabine-Neches Canal, and Johnsons Bayou, La. and Tex.: For maintenance, $40,000; completing improvement of harbor at Beaumont in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 2033, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $75,000: Provided, That local interests shall furnish and maintain such protection works as in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers may be necessary for the safe passage of vessels through the lock in the Sabine-Neches Canal near Port Arthur, Tex., and the entrances thereto; in all, $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 15, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$35,000"; and in line 19, after the words "in all," to strike out "$315,000" and insert "$335,000," so as to make the clause read:

Red, Black, Ouachita, Tensas, Boeuf, and Saline Rivers, and Bayou Maçon, Bartholomew, D'Arbonne, and Corney, Ark. and La.: For maintenance, $35,000; continuing improvement of Ouachita River in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 7, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, $300,000; in all, $335,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to see all these appropriations on page 18 go through without at least making an objection to them. I shall take only a few moments of the time to refer in this connection to the amendment which follows the one now under consideration for the Ouachita River. I think, however, that is not an amendment by the committee.

As I said before, as long as the Oklawaha River has gone into the bill it is perfectly useless to try to keep anything out or get anything out of it, but I do want the RECORD to show something about the Ouachita River and these other minor streams.

It is very interesting to note that while we have appropriated $4,289,359 for the Ouachita River, which I think is a project that never was adopted by Congress and that has been partially condemned, at least by Army engineers, we still go merrily on and carry $300,000 in this bill for further work in locks and dams on the Ouachita River.

On page 2680 of part 2 of the report of the engineers for 1918 is some very interesting reading about this mighty stream. They report:

The U. S. snag boat Jos. E. Ransdell was laid up at Jonesville, La., from July 1 to August 27, 1917.

Some Senators are great enough to have cigars named after them and others to have snag boats, but this snag boat was a busy snag boat. This summary of the engineers shows the work done by this boat:

Snags pulled, 885; stumps pulled and destroyed, 327; shore snags cut, 15; logs removed from channel, 4; leaning trees cut, 14; cost per obstruction removed, $10.58.

That includes the snags and stumps in the bottom of this stream and the trees leaning over the side of the stream.

The U. S. steam derrick boat No. 2, which appears to be the name of no Member of Congress, was also laid up at Calion, Ark., from July 1 to August 28, 1917. On the latter date the boat began working upstream in Ouachita River, and after reaching Frenchport Shoals it returned and carried on its operations downstream. The work performed is shown in this summary.

Snags pulled and destroyed, 1,833—

Doing more work than the snag boat Jos. E. Ransdell— stumps pulled and destroyed, 428; shore snags cut, 834; logs removed from channel, 171; leaning trees cut, 970; side jams removed, 2; cost per obstruction, $1.51.

This derrick did vastly more work per obstruction removed than the other snag boats.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it laid off for a rest during any part of the season?

Mr. KENYON. It was laid up from July 1 to August 28.

Mr. SMOOT. It had quite a vacation?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. The commerce on this stream for that year, as reported by the engineers, was 178,136 tons, which sounds very large; but of that timber barged was 134,466 tons and timber rafted was 10,800 tons, so that there was, as a matter of fact, last year about 34,000 tons of freight carried on this stream for which we have appropriated $4,389,000 or thereabouts. That is the kind of proposition we are invited to go ahead and contribute $300,000 more of public money to.

I wonder just what the people are going to think when we go out to them on the next liberty-loan campaign and invite them to save and stint themselves and contribute in liberty bonds to such projects as this.

There was another snag boat down there—the T. W. Howell—but that was employed on the Black River.

The main business on these rivers seems to be pulling snags and stumps out of the bottom.

The other rivers that are included in this are the Bluff River, or the Boeuf River. I believe on that river last year there was a good deal of work. The amount of freight on the Bluff River was 2,649 short tons. We have appropriated over $100,000 on that river. According to the commercial statistics, the season of navigation for the calendar year 1917 between the month and Alto, La., opened January 1 and closed June 30. I have given the commercial statistics of 2,649 short tons, but, of course, it was hard to move commerce because of the situation of the snags and the location of the stumps:

Snags cut and destroyed, 163; stumps destroyed, 1; shore snags cut, 242; logs removed from channel, 108; leaning trees cut, 792; trees girdled, 84.

Then, on the Saline River, something of a salty proposition, "snags pulled, 14; stumps pulled, 42; cost of obstruction removed, $5.36." The only commerce there is rafted timber. We have appropriated $36,190, not a large sum on that river, and for the Black and the Red Rivers—the Red, a river distinguished, I believe, by the fact that near its banks was the birthplace of the Senator from Louisiana—the sum appropriated here is very small to carry on the work of these rivers outside of the Ouachita. It may be that has to be done. It will be going on when we are gone and our grandchildren are here. But how we can justify $300,000 on this Ouachita River is beyond my comprehension. All I have to say is I hope somewhere around the country by the quiet fireside the people may read some of these things about the mighty operations of these snag boats getting the stumps out of the bottoms of these wonderful rivers and arouse their enthusiasm for the cheerful way in which we vote away the people's money.

I am not going to make any motion as to this, because I know it is perfectly useless. I shall record my vote against the whole bill because of this class of appropriations that are in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer
Colt	Kendrick	Penrose	Sutherland
Cummins	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Dillingham	Knox	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	La Follette	Robinson	Vardaman
France	Lenroot	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gay	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Harding	McKellar	Sherman
Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Simmons
Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] because of sickness, and also the absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] because of sickness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators and Mr. KIRBY, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. KING, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. REED, and Mr. GRONNA answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, just one word of explanation. I shall not detain the Senate. I simply want to say that this item of $300,000 for the Ouachita River was included in the bill by the House of Representatives. It is intended practically to finish the great work of locks and dams on that river which was begun many years ago; it was begun in 1902 and carried on since then. There were originally nine locks and dams. Several of them have been cut out by modifications of the plan. The engineers have modified this plan as adopted by report numbered 7, which was sent to the House of Representatives on the 16th of October last. They reduced the original estimate from $1,224,000 to $362,000, which they say will finish the work and give 400 miles of slack-water navigation up to the city of Camden in the State of Arkansas.

The House of Representatives appropriated $300,000 of that $362,000, and that is the project we are voting upon. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the amendment now under consideration is the amendment on page 18, line 15, striking out "15,000" and inserting "35,000."

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Chair's pardon. That is for maintenance on several rivers—the Red, Black, Ouachita, the Tensas, Boeuf, and Saline Rivers, and Bayous Macon, Bartholomew, D'Arbonne, and Corney, Arkansas and Louisiana.

There is a very considerable commerce on those rivers. It aggregates, I should say, fully 250,000 tons annually, and is worth at least four or five million dollars. I have the items here, but I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read them. We are asking a maintenance item of $35,000 for these rivers.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the other House have this information when they provided for an appropriation of $15,000?

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir. The Senate raised the maintenance item.

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will pardon me, I will explain it. The Senate had additional information from several division engineers. It was reported to us by Gen. Taylor, assistant to the Chief of Engineers. We took his advice with regard to this and a number of other maintenance items which the Senator from Utah will see were raised. We had supplemental reports relative to the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in the confusion prevailing in the Chamber I did not quite hear the Senator's statement as to whether these are rivers or creeks.

Mr. RANSDELL. One of them is the Red River, sir, which is over a thousand miles long and which was formerly navigable for 1,000 miles. It once had a wonderful commerce on it, though it has not a great deal now. The other is the Ouachita River, which is navigable for 400 miles. Some of them are what we call creeks down in Louisiana—which are called "cricks," I believe, up in the Senator's part of the world—some of them are called bayous. I do not know what you call them, but they are sluggish streams that have more or less commerce on them.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, Mr. President, I am safe in making the statement that they are creeks in Louisiana, but are rivers in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir; a river that is navigable for 1,000 miles, like the Red River, would not be a creek even in Pennsylvania; a river that is navigable for 400 miles, like the Ouachita, would not be a creek even in Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to make one further query: What is the character of the materials carried over these magnificent streams?

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator wants to take the time of the Senate to have it reported, I shall be very glad to give it to him.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to delay the bill a moment.

Mr. RANSDELL. The commercial statistics here on——

Mr. PENROSE. Take the Red River or the Red Creek, whichever it is.

Mr. RANSDELL. The engineers' report, I will say to the Senator, will give him all that. If he will look on page 1095 of the engineers' report in reference to the Ouachita River he will find that the commerce on that river was 178,136 tons in 1917, valued at $4,981,000.

Mr. PENROSE. What kind of commerce?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am going to try to answer the Senator. The freight carried during the calendar year 1917 consisted of logs, farm products, and general merchandise. Recent large increases of tonnage are due to improved crops, general business, and inadequate railway service.

The Arkansas River, I will say, runs through a very rich region.

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator from Louisiana leaves the Ouachita River I do not want the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania to be under any misapprehension about the commerce which is carried on that river. While it is shown in the report that 178,000 tons of commerce were carried, I want to advise the Senator from Pennsylvania that in the same report it is also shown that 144,000 of that 178,000 tons consisted of timber, which was barged and rafted down the river.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, yes.

Mr. KENYON. Leaving something like 34,000 tons of real freight.

Mr. PENROSE. Then the river must really be improved for the accommodation of rafts more than for vessels?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think this whole business is not in good faith, but it is all for the purpose of killing time, and delay, and all that.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator may speak for himself on that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to say that the total item for maintenance on general projects, including five rivers, as put into the House bill, was $15,000 for one year. That is for the maintenance of all the rivers mentioned in this group. We have increased it by $20,000, so as to make the appropriation $35,000 for the maintenance for one year of this group of waterways. Now, what is the use of taking up any time talking about that item? We based our action on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, through Gen. Taylor, who said that, according to the latest data, that amount would be necessary for this purpose.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to say that if the Senator from Pennsylvania will consult the report of the engineers he will find that this money is necessary to take stumps out of the bottoms of these rivers.

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand—I hope I am not mistaken—this magnificent stream, full of stumps, practically carries no commerce except log rafts.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is mistaken about that. There is a very considerable tonnage of cotton and commodities of that kind. I will state to the Senator that, according to the report read by the Senator from Iowa, that commerce is valued at $4,981,000. That can not be all logs; but even if it were I will say to the Senator that logs constitute a very valuable commerce at times. I will say further to the Senator that the work on that river has never been finished. It is one of those incomplete lock-and-dam projects, the completion of which would give complete navigation up to the city of Camden; and when it is finished we hope to develop a large commerce; but we can not get the boats up there on uncompleted parts of the river. It is only the lower part of the river that is being used.

Mr. PENROSE. The evidence is that no boat ever goes up the river, and the only stuff that comes down is logs. What is the use of the Government expending millions of dollars to improve a stream that never will have anything go out of it except rafts? When the forests are destroyed or consumed the improvement will be useless.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is very much mistaken as to that.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the evidence.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is a very fine body of country on either side of the river, and there are many people living there. There is a railroad on the side of the stream, and there is a very considerable development in that entire territory for 400 miles on either side of the river. I have tried to explain to the Senator that the water is very low at certain seasons of the year, and a big commerce can not be developed there when the river can not be used to any very great extent; but when the work is completed it will be used.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will assure me that the shores of the Red River are equally prosperous, I will not inquire further. Does the Red River carry all this magnificent commerce also?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Red River has some commerce.

Mr. PENROSE. "Some?"

Mr. RANSDELL. It is a very rich country on both banks and has railroads on both banks.

Mr. PENROSE. It is not quite so strong a proposition as the other river.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Red River is not being improved by means of locks and dams as is the Ouachita. There is a great deal more railroad opposition, I will say, along the Red River, there being railroads on both banks of that stream, while there is only one on the banks of the Ouachita.

Mr. PENROSE. I am a little worried for fear the Red River has not received a large enough appropriation this year, but I will not delay the bill any further.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator wants to have the appropriation increased, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from Pennsylvania is entirely correct about it; the appropriation is not nearly large enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this entire debate discloses the fact, with which every intelligent American citizen is already acquainted, that there are two great things that the American Republic ought to reach out and grasp, if it can. One is a national budget to harmonize and synchronize expenditures and revenues. The other is a national board of public works, including rivers and harbors and public buildings, under a law whereby the Congress of the United States can say to the executive department of the United States, "We find that we can appropriate this amount of money to public works this year, including rivers and harbors and public buildings and whatever other public works there may be," and we will appoint, as the Republic of France does, a commission on public works or a board of public works, and they shall dispose of that appropriation independently of the Senator from Mississippi, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, and they shall take that amount of money and put it where it is most needed, and most immediately needed, for the purposes of commerce and the public business of the United States. Yet I dare say that if I offered an amendment to that effect at any time, perhaps the very first man to object to it would be the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]; perhaps the very first man to rise and say that Congressmen have certain rights, certain rights of logrolling and agreeing with one another about where the money shall go and whether part of it shall be devoted to improving navigation around Philadelphia and up the Delaware River and in other places in which the Senator is interested—perhaps the very first man in this body to arise and oppose that sort of a proposition would be the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am willing to say to the Senator now that I will vote for his proposition if he will introduce it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator's camouflage is so patent that even a stupid German airplane could not fail to discover it. He is merely trying to defeat the river and harbor bill. Four or five propositions have already been introduced with no other motive and no other expediency and no other hope. Now, the Senator expects to make of me a fool and a tool to do his work in this connection. I have been very frequently a good deal of a fool and sometimes unconsciously a tool, but I never was a fool for his speculation nor a tool for his operations, because his operations have always been too transparent or too translucent, at any rate.

Mr. President, until we do come to a national policy of public works, independent of legislative logrolling, we must continue to pass rivers and harbors bills according to the present system, for a good deal of the work must be done. I have stood at the other end of the Capitol and this end for over a quarter of a century, and I have frequently been compelled to vote for rivers and harbors projects that in some few particulars were, in my opinion, absolutely unworthy in order to get through great schemes that were vitally important to this Republic. I could name the Sacramento, in California; the Mississippi River, draining 22 States; I could name a canal that ought to be built from the Tennessee to the Mississippi, close to Memphis, Tenn., and cut off 600 miles of navigation; I could name an intracoastal canal that will avoid the wreckage around Cape Cod and Nantucket and around Hatteras, and that might possibly go through Florida and through the sounds of the Mexican Gulf to avoid the typhoons out in the Gulf itself. I could name a number of things if I could think of them on my feet on the spur of the moment, but I can not.

What is the ultimate right solution? What is the honest thing to do? Let us put the canals and rivers and harbors and public buildings under the control of a board of public works, and let Congress at each session say: "Here are so many thousands or millions or hundreds of thousands of dollars," whichever it may be, "that the Government can spare this year for that purpose, and this board must expend it, and it must determine priorities while expending it"—priorities of importance and of national necessity. Who would be the first man in this body to object to this? I imagine it would be the Senator from Pennsylvania, unless I offered it as an amendment right now for the purpose of defeating this bill. I imagine that the representatives of the great State of New York would be about the second to come in and oppose it. I imagine that the representatives of the great State of Illinois, with their great scheme of a canal from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi, would be next, for fear, in their opinion, that a board of public works might not think that was of vital importance.

Now, let us be honest with one another, and let us be honest with the people. There never was a rivers and harbors bill passed without some objectionable features upon it. There never was a public buildings bill passed without some objectionable features upon it. But just as long as you keep up the congressional system of controlling the expenditure of money for public works you will have that difficulty, and just the minute you stop the congressional control of those expenditures that difficulty will disappear. The moment you make these works absolutely national, with a big "N," and submit them to a board of engineers—hydraulic, electric, navigation, merchant marine, experts of every sort—qualified to deal with harbors along the seacoast, with inlets from the sea, with great national streams draining 22 States, as the Mississippi River does, that minute you will strike the right course and you will get rid of this so-called "pork-barrel" question.

I am tired of it, as far as I am concerned. I have been forced, year after year and year after year, to vote for inconsequential propositions in order to get a proper appropriation for the great Mississippi River Valley, and the Ohio River, and the Missouri River, and the Sacramento River, and a possible canal from the Lakes to the Mississippi and down to the mouth of the Mexican Gulf. I have been forced, in order to get that, to vote for a whole lot of things that I knew were not founded on any common sense. But when a fellow comes to me and says, under the present system, "If you do not agree to vote for Goose Creek I will not agree to vote for the Mississippi or the Sacramento or the canal," what would I have to do, as a man of ordinary common sense? I simply had to say, "All right; I will vote for Goose Creek," and I voted for it. Yet these gentlemen get up, like the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], with no rivers and no harbors, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], with no rivers and no harbors, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], with no rivers and no harbors, and they make the welkin ring with discords; and yet I dare say if we should organize a board of public works composed of expert engineers and leave them with large discretion, even the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Pennsylvania—who, by the way, is merely camouflaging—the other two of them, at any rate, would agree to let it go. They would say, "Here are so many millions a year that we will give to public works. That much we can spare; that much we can give to the progress and commerce of the American Republic; but we are not going to leave it to Congressman A from the State of B, and to Congressman C from the State of D, and to Congressman E from the State of F to logroll the final results."

But as long as you do leave it to them to logroll the final result I am going to logroll the Mississippi Valley's part of it, because it is the only way in the world of getting a proper appropriation for an important and vital public commercial purpose, and you know it as well as I do. You know that if you beat this bill to-day you would hurt the American Republic very much. You might kill a few undeserving projects upon it, and you would, but at the same time you would kill a whole lot of vital projects that are necessary, that ought to be passed by the will of every man who loves the American Republic and wants it to progress.

While I do not remember quite all the appropriations that the State of Pennsylvania has by political influence or otherwise procured on rivers and harbors bills from the day the American Republic was founded down to now—and I do not think I would be far wrong if I should say that she had gotten over 50 per cent of the money actually expended from the day George Washington was inaugurated down to now—I rather doubt—that might be offensive—I rather distrust—that also might be offensive—I rather do not believe that I know that the Senator from Pennsylvania really is in earnest. [Laughter.] That is not offensive.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, of course.

Mr. PENROSE. The only improvements that I recall that the State of Pennsylvania has ever had in a river and harbor bill are the improvement of the Delaware River and the port of Philadelphia—which is a national proposition, not local, and brings returns to the Government in increased customs revenue—and two or three dams in that part of the headwaters of the Ohio that are located in Pennsylvania. There is nothing else.

Mr. FLETCHER. How about the Allegheny?

Mr. PENROSE. I say, that is the headwaters of the Ohio, and happens to run into the Ohio. Further than that, it happens that Pennsylvania pays one-sixth of all the revenues of the country, and might very easily say that it is entitled to a little more.

As far as the Pennsylvania items in this bill are concerned, I would cheerfully leave them to this national board that the Senator from Mississippi describes. I have not asked for a dollar in the bill for my State, and I do not know that any of the Pennsylvania Congressmen have. They have not been called upon to defend the Pennsylvania items. They are the voluntary recommendations of the Engineer Department, and are in the bill on their merits. They are not logrolling, scandalous, improvident, ridiculous schemes, like digging out a river 3 feet deep in order to float logs down it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is one of the most peculiar products of God that ever was created by God's free will. The Senator from Pennsylvania tells me that neither he nor any of the Members of Congress from Pennsylvania have tried to put anything upon this bill, or upon past bills.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I said this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He tells me that they have been so pure and so chaste and so nice and so sweet that they have never asked anything of Congress for Pennsylvania. He tells me that whatever Pennsylvania has gotten has come by the free report of the Engineer Department. Well, everything that Mississippi has gotten has come by the free report of the Engineer Department. Mighty near everything that Louisiana has gotten has come that way—not all. Pretty nearly everything that Florida has gotten has come that way. All that Kentucky has gotten and all that Tennessee has gotten has come that way. Everything that California has gotten has come that way.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator to wait a minute.

Mr. PENROSE. I just wanted to say one word to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a minute. All that the Engineer Department has done has been to deal with the subject matters submitted to them, and they have recommended most of them; and even the Engineer Department is slightly controlled by the fear that a conglomeration of voices in the Senate and in the House, constituting the Congress of the United States, might overslaugh them if they did not recommend certain things. It is the idlest thing in the world to say that a State did not come up as a State to plead for this or that or the other thing against the engineers. Mississippi bears a considerable part of this appropriation—I do not know how much, but it is considerable for Mississippi, being as poor as we are—but I could say, with the Senator from Pennsylvania, that Mississippi has not asked for anything; that everything recommended for streams in Mississippi has been recommended by the engineers; but, back of all that, of course, Pennsylvania and Mississippi both were attempting to influence the engineers to some extent.

Now I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I only wanted to try to drive the Senator's logic into a better channel. It seemed to me it went off a little.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means a narrower channel.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that the Board of Engineers is enthusiastically recommending all of these projects. It simply reports the character of the commerce and the depth of the streams and the amount of work necessary. Certainly not one of them would survive before such an organization as the Senator has outlined—not one of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania—although I very seldom can find any mental room for agreement with him—that the Board of Engineers are not enthusiastic about any of these things. The Board of Engineers are mentally and mathematically and engineeringly equipped to see what the proposed projects are, and they recommend them, and enthusiasm is a psychological manifestation that does not accompany their reports. But the Board of Engineers have been no more psychologically enthusiastic about schemes for Mississippi than they have been about schemes for Pennsylvania. The truth is that the Board of Engineers was convinced by argument that certain schemes ought to be recommended. That is the first truth. The second truth is that the Board of Engineers, like any other ordinary human board, is fallible and sometimes makes mistakes, and a heap more mistakes in Pennsylvania than they ever made in Mississippi, from the beginning of this Government down to now.

There is no State in this Union which has gotten more out of the National Treasury for its own benefit than Pennsylvania, playing fast and loose from early in the history of this country, first Federalist and then Democratic, next Whig, and then Democratic, and fastening its policies entirely upon the proposition of sucking pap from the public teat. There is no State equal to it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one minute.

Mr. PENROSE. I am going to wait.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no State, from Virginia, the mother of States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Mississippi that the question of the course of the State of Pennsylvania may not properly be impugned in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the Chair's statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Mississippi that it is not in order to assail the course of the State of Pennsylvania or any other State under the rule of the Senate, and the Chair respectfully suggests to the Senator from Mississippi that in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair his remarks are of that character.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is the opinion of the Chair, I can not make any objection. I have the highest regard for the Chair, not only officially but personally. If the Chair thinks I said anything that was out of order, I will ask the reporter to strike it out, under the supervision of the Chair, if necessary.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not care to have it stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator from Pennsylvania had charged two or three Southwestern States with taking advantage of their position in order to draw "pap" from the Federal Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Pennsylvania make such a statement. If he made such a statement, the Chair holds that it was out of order.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Mississippi is absolutely wrong. I made no such statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You mean that you made no such statement?

Mr. PENROSE. I did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania did not make any such statement or any such insinuation, one or the other, then I am more lacking in mental perspicuity than I had even suspected myself of being, and I have suspected myself very frequently of being lacking in a great deal of mental perspicuity.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to suggest to the Senator that we come to a vote on this question now if he will permit us to vote on it and dispose of it. I hope we may dispose of the whole bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has an amendment that I think he wants to have passed on a little later, and we can probably reach that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather sacrifice my lingual appetite or anything in the world than to delay this river and harbor bill for five minutes. I will conclude my argument right now unless the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to continue it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I did not think that it was worth while for me to invoke the rule of the Senate about the unparliamentary practice of reflecting on any State represented on this floor. The imperial Commonwealth of Pennsylvania speaks for itself, especially during the last three years, when 40 per cent of the munitions of war were furnished from that Commonwealth, and more soldiers than any other State except New York, and it suffered more fatalities than all the Southern States put together, and is paying $1,000,000,000 into the Treasury under these enormous taxes.

But I will close with this observation: That these projects that I have referred to, limited, as far as my recollection goes, to the Delaware Harbor, which is a national affair, contributing as a port of importation revenue second or third to that of New York among all the ports of the country, and two or three dams on the Allegheny River, have all been assisted by appropriations from the State legislature, particularly the Delaware River. I do not have the figures available, but a very large proportion of this work that the Federal Government is aiding has been sustained and paid by the appropriation of millions of dollars not only by the legislature but by the city of Philadelphia, and I venture to say that the State of Louisiana or the city of New Orleans or the State of Mississippi have never contributed one dollar to help themselves on a project of this character.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend. The rule of the Senate touching this subject is well known:

> No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to any State of the Union.

The Senator from Mississippi, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, made remarks which referred offensively to the State of Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Pennsylvania in the remark last made by him, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, referred offensively to the State of Mississippi and other States. The Chair asks the Senators to proceed in order. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent, so far as I am concerned, that any remarks of mine which were in the opinion of the Chair reflective upon the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall be stricken from the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. PENROSE. Hold on, Mr. President. I do not know what the view of the Chair is, but I absolutely dispute the proposition that I referred offensively to any State. I stated a fact, and certainly the statement of a fact can not be a reflection. When I stated the fact that no local appropriation has been made for these projects I think I was well within my rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair it was a violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the present occupant of the chair——

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I insist on saying that the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania is not the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor and must proceed in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have offered to have stricken from the RECORD every word that in the opinion of the Chair was a reflection upon the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. I never intended it that way. I was merely attempting to counteract the camouflage of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The Senator from Pennsylvania has not requested to strike out what he said about the Commonwealth of Mississippi. Therefore I want to answer that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has just stated that in so far as river and harbor projects for the benefit of the State of Mississippi were concerned, Mississippi has never contributed a dollar. Do I understand the Senator as having said that or not?

Mr. PENROSE. Except to prevent floods and bank up the shores along the river. They may have spent money for that, but I refer to purposes of navigation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of the entire improvement of the Mississippi River in building levees along its shores——

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to increase the velocity of the stream and wipe out its bottom and create a greater commerce or room for commerce, the State of Mississippi along its shores has contributed two-thirds of the entire amount. I am right now a taxpayer in the delta of the river in the State of Mississippi paying 9 mills on the dollar for Mississippi River improvement work.

Mr. PENROSE. They are levees, are they not, along the shore to keep the river from overflowing the farms along the banks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. PENROSE. They do not have to do with commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Pennsylvania knew a thing at all about water engineering he would know this much at any rate, that when you confine a great and powerful stream between its banks it washes out its bottom and keeps it clean, and if you leave it to flow all over 100 miles on each side of the stream it fills up in the middle and after a while you have no stream at all.

If the Senator has any doubt about that he can learn about the work of Col. Eads, who built the Mississippi jetties down at the mouth of the river, and who made out of a 13-foot channel a thirty-odd foot channel, by merely confling the river to its banks.

The Senator discloses the most world-wonderful ignorance of hydrostatics. He does not seem to know that if you confine the body of a great river within certain limits and make it flow with greater velocity you increase the volume of the current and the increase of the volume of the current carries the sand and the loam down to the Gulf, or to the Atlantic, or to the Pacific, as in the case of the Sacramento River, because in the case of the Sacramento River we have done exactly the same thing.

One of the peculiarities about a Pennsylvania politician is this: That he sort of takes for granted somehow or other that he knows it all. He does not require any expert information to assert a proposition; he merely requires to say that he "comes from Pennsylvania, and then he says that next to New York Pennsylvania is the greatest State in the Union," and then, after that, he goes on a little while afterwards and says "Pennsylvania pays more taxes than anybody." Then the New York fellow gets up and says that New York pays even more taxes than Pennsylvania. When it comes to corporation taxes this similitude of truth is owing to the fact that the headquarters of the great corporations are in New York and Philadelphia, and when it comes to the whisky taxes, and the tobacco taxes, and things of that sort, the truth is that Pennsylvania and New York do not pay them at all. They merely put the product in the market and the consumer down in Mississippi, Kentucky, and Tennessee pays the taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me to submit a motion to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; because I do not think we ought to do that, but I will yield for a motion for almost any other purpose. I do not want to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

I think there has been a whole lot of filibustering over on your side and a little of it over here, some from some Western States, to defeat this river and harbor bill. I think a lot of you have been offering one proposition after another to displace the river and harbor bill with no hope of getting your propositions through but with the purpose of shelving the river and harbor bill. I think you are honest and agree with me about that. That is a fact. That is what you have been doing. Now, I am not going to agree to quit in order to allow anybody to offer that motion, but I am going to quit, because I believe I have sufficiently dealt with the Senator from Pennsylvania. If he is willing to quit, I am willing. So I will quit anyhow, without any agreement, without any negotiation, without any covenant, and without any league of peace. I will just quit.

Mr. PENROSE. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I merely want it understood that I object to anything going out of the RECORD relating to this debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection to what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania objected to striking from the RECORD any part of the debate. The present occupant of the chair wishes to state that in his opinion——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no view upon that one way or the other. I am merely adhering to the wishes of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair the Senator from Mississippi was transgressing the rule of the Senate which the Chair quoted a moment ago, and in his reply the Senator from Pennsylvania trespassed upon that rule. The Chair was merely calling the attention of Senators to the rule and requested that the rule be observed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have only one thing to say about that. I am willing for both to go out or neither; I care not which.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on which a division was demanded.

Mr. KENYON. A division or a yea-and-nay vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division was demanded.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. Making the same transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM[. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky. Has the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky. In the absence of that Senator, I transfer the general pair which I have with him to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Simmons

Mr. PENROSE. There is no quorum present, and I suggest to the Senator from Florida that he move to adjourn.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will direct the Secretary to call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. PENROSE. No; the Secretary will have to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kellogg	Poindexter	Smoot
Bankhead	Kirby	Pollock	Spencer
Curtis	Lenroot	Pomerene	Sutherland
Fletcher	McKellar	Ransdell	Swanson
France	Martin, Ky.	Reed	Trammell

Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of the absent Senators.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate adjourn, which motion takes precedence even of the motion of the Senator from Florida. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair which I have with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the former vote as to the transfer of my pair, and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. As that Senator is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Curtis	Lenroot	Smoot	Warren
France	New	Spencer
Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sterling
Kellogg	Poindexter	Wadsworth

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	King	Pollock	Smith, Ariz.

Dillingham	Kenyon	Phelan	Watson
Fall	Knox	Saulsbury	Weeks
Fernald	La Follette	Sherman
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Shields
Gerry	Lodge	Smith, Ga.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. FLETCHER. I renew my motion that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. GERRY and Mr. HARDING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. STERLING, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After a little delay, Mr. WOLCOTT entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

After further delay, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PAGE, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. CALDER, Mr. KING, and Mr. GORE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment of the committee is, on page 18, line 15, where it is proposed to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

Red, Black, Ouachita, Tensas, Boeuf, and Saline Rivers, and Bayous Macon, Bartholomew, D'Arbonne, and Corney, Ark. and La.: For maintenance, $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the amendment, and the Secretary will call the roll.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 18, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 17, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we bless and hallow Thy name for the deep and ever-abiding faith which through all the vicissitudes of life, its sorrows and disappointments, holds us close to Thee, inspires to pure ideals, and leads on to victory.

Increase our faith that we may be true to ourselves and follow the dictates of conscience, until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday, February 15, and of Sunday, February 16, 1919, were read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the National Security League investigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to extend his remarks on the subject of the Security League investigation. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. KING. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is this to my request?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. WALSH. I am waiting until the gentleman makes his point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. KING. The point of order is that the request was put.

The SPEAKER. The rules have to be construed liberally. It is not too late.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether he is to publish any part of the proceedings of the committee or to comment upon the investigation in any way? It would seem to me it might well be deferred until after the committee has reported.

Mr. KING. I desire simply to print my own statement before the committee, principally for distribution in my own district.

Mr. WALSH. That has been printed by the committee, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. KING. In the form of hearings.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. But I can not get enough of them from the committee.

Mr. WALSH. If that is all the extension consists of, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman a member of the committee on investigation?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is a member that the league sought to put out of business.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, under the rules governing printing, can not the gentleman take the extract from that hearing and have it printed and sent into his district without having it put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. KING. It is possible that might be done.

Mr. GARNER. Would not that answer the same purpose?

Mr. KING. I do not think it would.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman wants the record to show it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The gentleman would prefer to have it go in that way?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARD. Further reserving the right to object, does the gentleman want to print the statement he made before the committee himself?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; as a witness.

Mr. GARD. And not any comment on the action of the committee? I do not think that should be done, as the committee has not reported it.

Mr. KING. It contains no comment of that kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5580. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Martin and Bertie, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River at or near Williamston, N. C.; and

S. 5478. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Fall Branch Coal Co. to construct a bridge across Tug River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 32.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 14,100 copies of the proceedings and the eulogies delivered in Congress on Theodore Roosevelt, late a President of the United States, with illustration, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senators and Representatives of the State of New York, and 100 copies, bound in full morocco, for the use of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt: Provided, That there shall be included in such document the proclamation of the President and the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States on the death of Mr. Roosevelt, an account of the funeral services, and other matters as may be deemed appropriate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8625. An act to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12863. An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—GERLING AGAINST DUNN.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report (No. 1074) from Election Committee No. 1 for printing, under the rules, in the contested-election case of Jacob Gerling against Thomas B. Dunn, from the thirty-eighth congressional district, State of New York, and I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report from Committee on Elections No. 1 on the contested-election case of Jacob Gerling v. Thomas B. Dunn, from the thirty-eighth congressional district of the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. If it is a unanimous report and nobody wishes to discuss it, I think we might dispose of it now.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I will say for the benefit of the House that the contestant does not claim in his petition that he was elected.

The SPEAKER. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 585.

Your committee therefore recommends to the House the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That THOMAS B. DUNN was duly elected a Representative in this Congress from the thirty-eighth congressional district of the State of New York and is entitled to retain a seat herein."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the subject of the condition of the Thirty-sixth Division in France.

The SPEAKER. Could not the gentleman put it off until to-morrow? This is unanimous-consent day and suspension day, and the last one that there will be.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Speaker prefers——

The SPEAKER. Yes.

CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10587) granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

MINAM NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10394) to add certain lands to the Minam National Forest, Oreg.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon moves that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following described lands be, and the same are hereby, included in and made a part of the Minam National Forest, subject to all prior valid adverse rights, and that said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests: Sections 34 and 35, the north half of section 36, township 7 south, range 43 east, and sections 2 and 3, township 8 south, range 43 east, all of Willamette meridian, in Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SANITARIUMS BY FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 249) to authorize the Secretary having jurisdiction of the same to set aside certain public lands to be used as national sanitariums by fraternal or benevolent organizations, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. They have got to get consent to consider it first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is there anyone here to look after the bill? I do not see the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] here.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally, in the absence of the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally. Is there objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object to that. There are too many bills on the calendar to do that.

Mr. BURNETT. That would carry it to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All right. I ask that it be placed at the foot of the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I have requested the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to withdraw his objection for the time being to the consideration of the bill H. R. 10587, the San Diego water bill, on account of the absence of Mr. KETTNER, and he has consented.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker; I merely have no objection to having the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be placed at the foot of the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO FRANCIS ASBURY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 107) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Francis Asbury.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I will object to the resolution in its present form to give authority to locate a monument or memorial, or whatever it is, on almost any available public ground in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit me, I was the author of a similar resolution, which was a House joint resolution. It unanimously passed the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on the Library, and received the unanimous support of that committee. This is similar to another bill introduced about the same time, authorizing a memorial of the same character to be erected in memory of a distinguished Catholic prelate. That was passed some time ago by the House. I would like to know what objection the gentleman has to the form of this resolution.

Mr. MANN. This is to erect a monument on any public ground, practically, that is owned by the Government in the District of Columbia. There have been a lot of monuments erected where they ought not to be. Everybody who has that right wants to grab the best place that is left, regardless of anything else, and when I have been here in recent years I have objected, unless we could know something about where it was proposed to erect these monuments and what they were to be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Methodist denomination has for a number of years been undertaking the collection of a fund for the purpose of erecting a monument or memorial suitable to commemorate the life and character of Bishop Francis Asbury in the city of Washington. They have at last secured, by private contributions from members of the Methodist denomination, a fund to erect a monument commensurate with the value and eminence of his life as a missionary and evangelist. It is not the intention, as I understand it, to select a prominent site down here in the immediate city, but, as was suggested by the chairman of the Committee on the Library, Mr. SLAYDEN—who, I regret, is not present at this moment, because I am certain he could give that information—the intention was to locate it in a more remote and probably suburban site. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to it. It is a matter that has been pending here ever since the beginning of the Sixty-fifth Congress. I think it is in the form of the usual resolution.

Mr. MANN. It is in the form, possibly, of the usual resolution. It is in the form that usually used to be agreed to, and the result has been that there have been a lot of monuments located in Washington in places where they ought not to be, wholly inappropriate. I have no objection to the erection of a monument or memorial of some sort to Bishop Asbury, but I am not willing to give the right to anybody who is desirous and ambitious to erect a monument in the most conspicuous place in Washington without any control by Congress of those memorials. We have got one illustration down here of the Grant Monument, located where it ought not to be. It was not located by Congress, as suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming. It was located in spite of a vote in this House which did not quite equal two-thirds, but was much more than a majority, protesting against that location under general language previously used in such bills or resolutions. Now, if they want to find some place and specify it, it is just as easy to specify it, to begin with, as to leave it unspecified and unknown.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Illinois will recognize that that has not been the procedure heretofore with reference to resolutions of this character. The bill I referred to a moment ago, that was passed here at a former session, was in the identical form of this. I forget who was the ecclesiastical dignitary who was honored on that occasion.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I presume I was not here. The last one that was considered when I was here—and I do not know that that was finally disposed of—was for President Buchanan. I objected to that until we knew where it was to be located.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Always.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What suggestion would the gentleman make that would allow me to have this matter considered by the House?

Mr. MANN. I do not know where the monument ought to be located, but I think they ought to find out where they want to locate it, and then ask Congress for permission to locate it there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that suggestion had been made heretofore to those interested in the construction of this monument, for which the funds have been provided and the resolution for which has already passed the Senate and has been unanimously recommended by the Library Committee of the House, it would have given them a reasonable opportunity to have met that contingency and the objection of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I have objected at various times to just such things that did not specify the place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the resolution will go off the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the resolution going to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that it may remain on the calendar without prejudice—that it may go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13440) transferring jurisdiction and control over Battle Mountain Sanitarium of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National House for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes for the period covered by the exigencies growing out of the present war.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill, which is No. 250 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to send this bill to the foot of the calendar. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

PATENTS TO CERTAIN PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in going over this report I found one claim in which the Milwaukee Lumber Co.—whoever they are—are interested. The report of the Secretary of the Interior as to that claim was adverse. That is the Elizabeth Davis claim, which is found on page 4. The report says that if we should pass the bill authorizing the issuance of a patent to Elizabeth Davis it would jeopardize the rights of the Government in a suit now pending for the recovery of some $4,000 for some timber on this tract——

Mr. GANDY. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it was the intention of the committee and of the Department of the Interior to pass title only to the land and not to the money for the timber heretofore sold. That was the intention of the Public Lands Committee. An amendment has been submitted by the Department of Agriculture, and at the proper time I will offer it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman read, for information, the amendment that he suggests?

Mr. GANDY. The amendment I propose to offer reads as follows:

Provided, That the issuance of a patent shall not release the Milwaukee Lumber Co. from its obligation to pay the United States for the value of the timber cut upon this land.

Personally I did not think that was necessary, because the provision in the bill makes no reference to a former homestead entry. It simply patents the land. I do not think the issuance of a patent would affect the previous sale of the timber.

Mr. STAFFORD. That removes one objection to that claim. Now, there is a further objection that the department offered to it. If my memory serves me, the department says that it is necessary for the Government to have some right of way over this tract of land.

Mr. GANDY. I went over this item with the officials of the Forest Service after the bill had been reported, and the amendment which I have read is the only amendment they suggested. They were perfectly willing that with that amendment the bill should be passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will direct the attention of the gentleman who is sponsor for this claim to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior has made a report on this case, and I direct his attention to this language:

If it be deemed advisable also, in view of the suggested need of a highway across the land, it might be provided that such patent should be subject to an easement across said land for roadway purposes and for any other purposes which the interest of the United States may require.

Would the gentleman have any objection to incorporating in this paragraph the following:

The reservation to the Government of the United States of an easement across said land for roadway or other purposes which the interests of the United States may require.

Mr. GANDY. I have no objection to that except this—I want to be entirely frank with the gentleman—I have opposed to the best of my ability that sort of a reservation in any patent, which clouds the title forever. A person who has that sort of a patent does not know at what time some officer of the Government is going to step in and ask him to move his buildings or ask to put a road through a cultivated field, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Government never released its right to the timber on this land, and if it granted a full patent to the land the Government would have no right to reach the timber. This person, whoever she may be, has no absolute claim to this tract of land, otherwise she would not come to Congress for a special act.

Mr. GANDY. I will accept the amendment in this particular case. I was saying that as a general proposition I think it is a bad policy to cloud a title with this sort of a reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is another claim called to my attention by a Member of the House who is not present. That is the so-called Markley claim. I have gone over it carefully and I do not think it should be included in this bill. I can not see why that claimant has any claim in equity.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say in regard to the Markley claim that my understanding is Markley contested the homestead entry of some one whose name has slipped my memory on the supposition that the same practice prevailed there that prevails in the other public-land States. If he had contested a homestead entry in South Dakota or in Wyoming he would have acquired a preference right and could have filed on the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, this entry was made under special conditions that the land should be open under sealed bids to the highest bidder, and a special law provided for the sale of such lands when for any reason the land is not taken.

Mr. GANDY. I was coming to that feature of it. It transpired after Markley had won his contest that the conditions under which this land was opened were such that he did not acquire a preferential right and could not file on the land as they do in other public-land States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The hearings show that the entry was canceled without any hearing.

Mr. GANDY. That simply means that the homesteader defaulted.

Mr. STAFFORD. After making a payment of one-fifth of the purchase price of $1,800 he did not go ahead.

Mr. GANDY. Under the general practice that would have given Markley a preferential right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but not under the law applicable to these lands.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say that if the gentleman feels keenly about the Markley claim I am willing to strike it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the request of a Member of the House who has asked me to object—and I think the facts warrant me in doing so—to the Markley claim, I will object. On the assurance that this item will be stricken out and that the other amendment will be carried, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. GANDY. I accept the gentleman's proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment, as follows:

Elizabeth Davis, for the east half of the northwest quarter, northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 28, township 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, lying within the Coeur d'Alene National Forest, in the State of Idaho.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: Page 4, line 14, after the word "Idaho," strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following paragraph:

Provided, That the issuance of a patent shall not release the Milwaukee Lumber Co. from its obligations to pay to the United States the value of the timber cut from this land.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert "with the reservation in the Government of the United States of an easement across said land for a roadway or other purposes which the interest of the United States may require."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 17, insert:
"Alexander F. McCollam, of Yankee Jims, Placer County, Cal., for the lands described in homestead entry No. 07349, Sacramento series, being homestead entry survey No. 147, in section 28, township 14 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in Sacramento land district, in Placer County, Cal., and containing 1.16 acres, according to official plat of homestead entry survey No. 147, in the Tahoe National Forest, made July 19, 1915.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 2, add a paragraph, as follows:
"Francis Stewart, for the southwest quarter, section 33, township 28 south, range 7 west, New Mexico meridian, Las Cruces land district, New Mexico, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre within six months after approval of this act."

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to explain that amendment, and if there is any objection to it I will drop it out. The Francis Stewart case is on all fours with the Alma Harris claim carried in this bill and which passed this House as a separate bill. Stewart was a homesteader right close to Columbus, N. Mex., and upon orders of the military commander at the time of the Mexican border trouble he was compelled to leave his homestead and stay away such a length of time as made it impossible for him to offer acceptable proof. The item is offered upon the initiative of the Secretary of the Interior, and he sends with it a statement that he thinks the equities in the case are the same as those in the case of Alma Harris, and that favorable action ought to be had.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that heretofore the House passed this bill—this Congress?

Mr. GANDY. This Congress heretofore passed the Alma Harris item as an individual bill.

Mr. MANN. Is that this item?

Mr. GANDY. No; this is one on all fours, having the same state of facts.

Mr. MANN. This man was taken into the Army service?

Mr. GANDY. No; but because of the unsettled condition of the border near Columbus, N. Mex., at the time they had the border raids, the military commander directed certain people to leave their ranches, and this man was directed not to remain on this homestead because he might be subject to raids from bandits from across the border.

Mr. MANN. And this is to give him that land?

Mr. GANDY. This is to give him that particular land. He was not able to make an acceptable proof because of that absence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, following line 3, insert the following as new paragraphs:

"Homestead entry of Frank D. Ovesen, No. 031912, made March 1, 1916, for the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, section 9, and the west half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, section 4, township 34 north, range 19 east, Montana meridian.

"Homestead entry, Bismarck, N. Dak., No. 019577, made by Peter Andersen on October 13, 1916, for the west half, section 24, township 129 north, range 81 west, fifth principal meridian.

"Homestead entry No. 011395, made by Lizzie G. Garin for the west half of southeast quarter, section 3, west half of northeast quarter, section 10, township 35 north, range 3 east, Montana principal meridian."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, following line 14, insert the following as new paragraphs:

"Homestead application 032086, Rapid City series, of Frank Walsh, for the southwest quarter section 2, township 6 south, range 1 east, Black Hills meridian.

"Homestead application 014702, Belle Fourche series, of Fred F. Fuller, for northeast quarter section 27, and west half of northeast quarter and west half of southeast quarter section 22, township 16 north, range 8 east, Black Hills meridian.

"Homestead application 037708, Rapid City series, of Otto F. Schroeder, for north half of northwest quarter of northwest quarter, northeast quarter of northwest quarter, north half of southeast quarter of northwest quarter, and north half of northeast quarter of section 2, township 1 north, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian.

"Homestead application 016665, Belle Fourche series, of Clyde M. Giddings, for the west half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 9 north, range 4 east, Black Hills meridian.

"Additional homestead application, Glasgow, Mont., No. 049920, filed by Peter W. Hockert, for the north half of the south half, section 25, township 26 north, range 32 east, Montana meridian."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, strike out the following:

"SEC. 6. That the patent heretofore issued to George E. Windecker for the east half, section 21, township 34 north, range 14 east, Montana meridian, in the State of Montana, be, and the same is hereby, validated."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment ought not to be adopted. On pages 36 and 37 of the report is to be found the statement of the Secretary of the Interior. This young man made an application for a homestead entry and then made final proof and has used and cultivated the land. The Secretary of the Interior reports as follows:

It would therefore appear that, aside from the misstatements as to his age, the patentee complied with the homestead laws as to improvement and cultivation and made good use of the land. In view of this fact and of the fact that the entryman is now over the age of 21 years and still in possession of the land, this department will not interpose any objection to the validating measure if, under the circumstances, Congress deems such relief equitable and proper.

Senator MYERS, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, appeared before the House committee and presented this case very fully, as well as did Mr. EVANS, a Member of the House. My recollection is, it was thought advisable, without any real contest of any kind, to eliminate the matter from the bill. This young man evidently made a mistake as to his age, and the question is now pending to show that there was no fraud in the matter. The matter was submitted after an examination by a special agent to the Secretary of the Interior, and the record submitted to the Attorney General's Office to cancel the patent. Of course, that is the only way it can be done. The boy has his patent and is in possession, cultivating and using the land. The case is one of those where there was no wrong contemplated. The Attorney General's Office has not commenced an action to cancel the patent, but is awaiting the action of Congress.

That is the same way with the other departments, and from the record as referred to it seems to me when the matter was before the committee and now that the House ought to allow this young man to receive his patent to his land under all of the facts of the case, particularly on the ground, as the Secretary says, that he complied with the improvement and complied with the cultivation. He made good use of the land. He is an American citizen. He is of age. He is now in possession of the land, using it, and because of his indiscretion in trying to get the land too early, if this amendment is adopted, the young man will lose his land. An effort has been made a number of times to allow boys 18 years of age to obtain patents.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I just want to say that it was the opinion of the committee in considering this that this young man undoubtedly now could refile on this land, inasmuch as he has become of age. If the young man had gone out there alone and filed on this land on some erroneous advice, I would not feel keenly about it; but he went there with his parents, and there is no question in the world that his father and mother knew he was not of age when he swore that he was, and they lived with him on this land.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield except for a question. On page 36 of the report we find the following language in regard to the statement:

I am further advised that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by his letter of February 7, 1917, to the Chief of Field Division, instructed him to demand of patentee a reconveyance to the United States of the patented premises, and that the General Land Office could give patentee no assurance whatever that he would be allowed to make a second entry of the patented land if it was reconveyed; that if such an application should be tendered it would be considered upon its legal merits as they then existed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. There is no reassurance. That was the contention made before, that he refile; but suppose the boy did go there with his father and mother, and suppose his father and mother did know that his age was not what he stated, that is but natural. There can be no doubt about that, but it is the case of the boy, the young man. You say that you will cancel his patent by a proceeding in court, a judicial proceeding commenced by the United States Government, and then, after it is canceled, give him a right to refile on the land. What benefit is that to him? No injustice has been done. He is not a criminal at heart; he is a good American citizen; and from the facts presented why should not his claim be validated instead of having the patent canceled by judicial proceeding?

I do not believe that the fact that the father and mother knew should be charged up to the young man. I believe that the committee would be doing justice——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is it the position of the gentleman that the young man did not know how old he was?

Mr. RAKER. There is nothing strong on that—there is nothing strong in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. I asked the gentleman's position. I have been listening to all that he said.

Mr. RAKER. I find nothing from the record——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman seems to put it on the parents. Is it the gentleman's position that the young man did not know how old he was?

Mr. RAKER. He did not say.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, like the young man.

Mr. RAKER. That is nothing against a young man or a young woman that they can not give their exact age. Lots of them can not give the exact age. That is nothing against the boy and his rights. He has done everything that any other man would have done if he had not been in error as to his age——

Mr. MANN. Including one thing that the others would have done; that is, give the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Thomas M. Gray, of Brocket, N. Dak., to make homestead entry for the east half of the southeast quarter, southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, section 14, township 29 north, range 7 east, Montana meridian, hereby restored to entry from withdrawals in connection with the St. Mary Canal and Milk River project: Provided, That said Gray tender a proper application therefor within 90 days from receipt of notice from the register and receiver that the land is subject thereto.

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 7, strike out the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Alfred St. Michell to make homestead entry for the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 10, township 21 north, range 24 west, Montana meridian: Provided, That he file a proper application for the land and pay the appraised price therefor within 60 days from receipt of notice from the register and receiver that the land has been opened to entry.

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 19, strike out the figure "8" and insert the figure "9."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Dorothea V. Stillman to make homestead entry for the east half of the northwest quarter, section 32, township 21 north, range 19 west, Montana meridian: Provided, That she file a proper application for the land and pay the appraised price therefor within 60 days from the receipt of notice from the register and receiver that the land has been opened to entry.

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 3, strike out the figure "9" and insert the figure "8."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That John McW. Ford, of Shreveport, La., be, and hereby is, authorized to enter, at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, lot No. 7, of section 14, township 18 north, range 14 west, Louisiana meridian, Caddo Parish, La., in virtue of his long settlement, bona fide title and possession, and valuable improvements thereon.

Committee amendment: Page 13, strike out lines 11 to 17, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to Christian Frederickson, of Ray, N. Dak., upon homestead entry No. 01209, made at Williston, N. Dak., on October 27, 1908, for the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 32, in township 157 north, of range 96 west, of the fifth principal meridian, upon which satisfactory proof of compliance with law has been filed, provided he shall have paid the price of fifteen and seventeen one-hundredths acres at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 18, strike out the figure "11" and insert the figure "9."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow Lloyd B. Barley, of Barley, Mont., to make individual selection, within one year from the date of the approval of this act, of 160 acres of unappropriated surveyed nonmineral public land, upon his filing formal relinquishment of all right and claim to the former entry and reconveyance of same to the United States: Provided, That the right of selection hereby granted shall not be assignable but must be exercised by the said Lloyd B. Barley in person, or in case of his death, by or in behalf of the decedent's heirs: Provided further, That the land selected shall be of similar general character to that in the original homestead, but if selection is made of land designated or subject to designation, under the enlarged homestead act, double the area of the selection authorized in the foregoing paragraph may be selected: Provided further, That the selection hereby authorized may be made subject to existing laws relating to surface entry, with reservation of minerals to the United States.

Committee amendment: Page 14, line 5, strike out the figure "12" and insert the figure "10."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and patent to Laura E. Graves, of Columbia, La., lots 3, 5, 6, 9, and 10, and southwest quarter of southeast quarter; west half of southwest quarter and lots 7 and 8; and northwest quarter of section 36, township 14 north, range 4 east, Louisiana meridian, situated in Caldwell Parish, La., at $1.25 per acre, lands which she and her grantors have occupied, under claim and color of title from the State of Louisiana, ever since November 4, 1854: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tracts, under this authorization, be filed at the United States land office in Baton Rouge, La., within 60 days from the passage of this act.

Committee amendment: Page 14, strike out lines 24 and 25, and page 25, lines 1 to 12, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in reference to the amendment just agreed to. The House committee reported against that item for the reason that in the report of the Secretary of the Interior he said if it should appear to the satisfaction of Congress these folks have been in undisputed possession of this land through all the years—I think it dates back to 1858—he believed this bill should be enacted, and no evidence was introduced on that subject. Since the bill was reported that evidence has come in—one of the Louisiana Members has it—and I understand it will be presented to the conferees. I have not had an opportunity to go over it, but in order that the House may understand why that was stricken out and one other which is on all fours left in I make this statement. The evidence was submitted in connection with the item on pages 16 and 17, but was not submitted on the item just passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, after line 12, insert the following as new sections:

"SEC. 11. That the homestead entry numbered 037153, made by the heirs of Victoria A. Thomson, deceased, for the northeast quarter section 4, township 8 north, range 14 east, Montana principal meridian, be, and the same is hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent thereon upon the submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the laws under which the entry was allowed.

"SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to issue patent to C. R. Shaw, Allen Shaw, and Robert Shaw for the lands described as lot 1 of section 13 and lot 1 of section 14, in township 1 south, range 16 west of the Huntsville meridian, containing 24 19/100ths acres, according to the official plat of survey now on file, known as State Line Island, situated in Lauderdale County, Ala., on the payment of $1.25 per acre.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent conveying all the right, title, and interest of the United States to the southeast quarter of section 28, township 12 north, range 12 east, Columbia County, Wis., to H. B. Rogers, upon the payment by him to the United States of the sum of $1.25 per acre."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 16, after line 12, insert the following as a new section:

"SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to sell to S. S. Markley, within a period of 90 days from and after the passage of this act, at the original purchase price of $1,800, the southeast quarter of section 2, township 3 south, range 12 west, Indian meridian, Cotton County, Okla., and issue to him a patent therefor."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I suppose there will be no contest after the understanding had with the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know what the understanding was. What is the objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman was on the floor when we had the understanding.

Mr. FERRIS. I was here, but did not hear what was said. What is the objection to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. This matter was called to my attention some months ago by a Member who is not present. I looked over the private bill that this relates to and examined the report on this item. It seems that back in 1907 entry was made by one Ross when this pasture reserve of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservation was opened to settlement. The entry was under the act of June 5, 1906. Under that act it was provided that the land should be opened to entry at certain specified bids. Mr. Ross bid $1,800 for the land. Thereafter one Snell S. Markley, who now seeks to get the land, made a contest. Seven years afterwards, in 1914, the contest was abandoned——

Mr. FERRIS. Not abandoned; the contest was decided in favor of him. The law did not allow him a preference right to enter even though he won it in the contest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Later Mr. Ross made default, and the entry was canceled without any hearing by the General Land Office on February 7, 1914.

Mr. FERRIS. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. The mere fact that Markley filed a contest gave him no right whatsoever to this land.

Mr. FERRIS. It could be contested, but the contestant did not acquire the preference right to enter that is usually accorded a successful contestant.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because under the law opening the land to entry——

Mr. FERRIS. It was subject to contest, but the contestant did not get anything. He did not get any preference right.

Mr. STAFFORD. The contestant did not get anything.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. The entryman paid one-fifth of the $1,800 and forfeited it. Seven years afterward this man Markley, because he happened to enter a contest with the entryman, wishes to gain title to this land.

Mr. FERRIS. By paying the highest bid for it?

Mr. STAFFORD. The highest bid that is named, but not the highest bid which may now be obtained for it. This land is sold under the law and offered as unsold tracts to the highest bidder. Now, I suppose this land—I do not know—may be worth several thousand dollars. Markley wants to come in here and lay claim to it; but he has no right to it whatsoever, no superior right, just because he made a contest against the original entryman.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman is exacting an agreement here that this item go out or he will kill all these omnibus bills. Of course, I do not want to kill all of these 50 odd bills just to save mine.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have gone over these items.

Mr. FERRIS. So have I, and the gentleman has probably singled out the only little bill I have had for four or five years and eliminated it, and because I was not on the job he has entered an agreement to strike this out of the bill. It seems to me the gentleman might have called it to my attention.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman, to justify my views, that if I had known it was the gentleman's bill I would certainly have called it to his attention. The gentleman was on the floor with other members of the Oklahoma delegation, and no protest was made at all.

Mr. FERRIS. I was sitting over there with some other gentlemen. Somebody said the gentleman from Wisconsin was knocking one of my bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this matter had not been called to my attention by a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs——

Mr. FERRIS. What member?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say on my responsibility that a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs asked me to object to this bill when it came up on the Private Calendar. I have no further interest in the matter.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to be heard a moment here. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior sent this little relief bill down with a large number of other bills and asked that it be enacted, urging that there were strong equities and that it had been before the department a long time, and he hoped that Congress would enact them. When I was out home sick with influenza the Committee on Public Lands put this in the omnibus bill for minor unimportant bills. At another time it was reported as a private bill that I introduced. The facts are all in the reports from the Secretary. I hope the gentleman will tell me who objects to this bill, because I think there is no valid objection to it. He has allowed page after page of these small bills to go through where they pay nothing for the land, and this gentleman provided for here has to pay $1,800 and get a piece of bald prairie land, and the gentleman singles that out and puts a condition precedent that he will not allow this omnibus claim bill to be presented unless they strike this provision out. He allows all the others to go without any payment for the land whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The contestant was not to blame for the fact that it took seven years to have the case decided?

Mr. FERRIS. No; and my information is the poor fellow has been living on the land and making a home on it, a piece of land that the original occupant paid one-fifth for and moved away. It was abandoned. The original purchaser did not want it. He never even came back.

Mr. MONDELL. If the contest had been decided immediately there would have been no question raised by anyone about the value of the land?

Mr. STAFFORD. Even then he would not have had a right to enter the land.

Mr. MONDELL. He says a mistake is made there.

Mr. FERRIS. We have a very peculiar law on this land, that you can contest and cancel a claim, but you do not get anything as a result of it. They are merely performing a task for the Government. This man did not know it. He prosecuted the claim up to the last resort, spending his own money. This man Markley, I am told, had been living on this piece of land and making a home on it. The gentleman, by knocking this amendment out, will cause the piece of land to be put up at auction and sold out from under him and give it to somebody probably for a few more dollars. I was in hopes to save a home for him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House, if he knows the facts, what is the value of the land?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know what the value is. It is prairie land, without a stick of timber on it, and located in the "Big Pasture." It is away north of the oil field and has no value whatever for oil. I never saw Markley. I never saw the land, but I know the general character of all that land down there. I do not know him, or anything of the kind, but the gentleman is doing the man who has a piece of land, and is willing to pay $1,800 for it, a great injustice. If the gentleman is doing that in order to hurt me, I will say that it does not hurt me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want the chairman of the committee to have any such thought. I did not know that the gentleman from Oklahoma—and I say that in all sincerity—was interested in the bill. A gentleman who is a member of the committee asked me two months ago that if that bill was called up, to oppose it. He told me to look into it. I did not make any promise. I have no personal interest in the matter. I wish, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma thinks it a personal matter, to withdraw any reservation I made when this bill was under consideration. I do not think it was fair for the gentleman to think it is personal to him. I have no personal interest in the matter, even though the gentleman from Oklahoma has been chairman of the Democratic congressional committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request. Let us get along. Then the gentleman will start something else.

Mr. FERRIS. No. I want to help some. I do not want to have a controversy with the gentleman. I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, I do not want the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and myself to misunderstand each other about this matter. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Wisconsin has obtained some information from somewhere that was not right. If the gentleman will tell me, I will take it up with him personally and publicly and debate it with him. Here is a case where a man is compelled to pay all that the land is worth, and probably more. He is singled out and not even permitted to pay full value for the land and acquire it.

Mr. STAFFORD. In justice to myself, I want to say that I have gone over these claims. There was a Davis claim, where the Milwaukee Lumber Co. was interested, and in that case I asked that the interests of the Government be protected against the interests of the Milwaukee Lumber Co. I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma had any right to make the reflection on me that he has made in this discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand from the vote that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think we ought to agree to the amendment after the gentlemen have made an agreement. I do not want any agreements violated. I am merely sorry the agreement was made. I think it will do a very poor man an injustice, but I have hastily presented the matter as best I could.

Mr. MANN. A number of gentlemen voted for it, and a greater number voted against it, as I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue and patent to Ella Oliver Richardson and Edmund Richardson the west fractional half of southwest fractional quarter of section 2, 27.24 acres; all fractional section 11, 320 acres; all that part of northeast quarter of northwest quarter section 13 lying west of the eastern boundary of what was formerly section 40, approximately 24.84 acres; northwest quarter of northwest quarter section 27, 39.95 acres; south half of northeast quarter and northwest quarter of northeast quarter section 28, 106.91 acres; all situated in township 18 north, range 10 east, Louisiana meridian, being approximately 518.93 acres in East Carroll and Madison Parishes, La., upon payment to the Government the sum of $1.25 per acre, lands which they and their grantors have occupied under claim and color of title and open and notorious possession for upward of 50 years: Provided, That proper application for the purchase of these lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months from the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially on record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a typographical error in this amendment. Without objection, the Clerk will be instructed to correct it.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the location No. 33 in township 6 north, range 9 west, second principal meridian, Indiana, which has been surveyed in the name of William Watson, as appears from the field notes of survey on file in the General Land Office, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the said William Watson, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue his certificate as register ex officio and cause a patent to be issued for said claim to William Watson, his heirs, assigns, and legal representatives: Provided, That this act and the patent which may be granted in pursuance of the same shall only operate as a relinquishment on the part of the United States, and shall in no way prejudice any valid adverse right, if such exist, to the said land; the intent being that title shall inure to the true owners of the land under the laws of Indiana, including laws of limitation and prescription, as though patent had issued during the lifetime of said William Watson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the homestead entry No. 06376 made by James Parmeter on February 10, 1914, for the west half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter, section 15, township 5 south, range 30 west, fifth principal meridian, on which proof of compliance of law has been made, be, and the same is hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That the additional homestead application No. 027498, filed by Andrew J. Brasswell on July 16, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, validated and allowed as to the west half of the southeast quarter, section 32, township 14 south, range 36 east, New Mexico principal meridian, effective as of the date filed, and that the State of New Mexico, through its proper officers, be, and it is hereby, authorized to select 80 acres of surveyed, nonmineral, unappropriated, and unreserved public land in lieu of the above described tract.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That upon the tender of a valid and sufficient soldiers' additional right, within a period to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, in support of the pending application of Hugh L. Shafer, known as Great Falls serial No. 045534, to enter the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32, township 22 north, range 12 east, Montana meridian, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent for the land herein described to George Van Voast, in whose interest said application was submitted, notwithstanding the intervention of any claim to the land not lawfully initiated prior to the filing of said application by Hugh L. Shafer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to permit Nathan L. Seamon to make a second homestead entry: Provided, That in perfecting title to any homestead entry made under the provisions hereof said Seamon shall be entitled to claim credit for all residence, cultivation, and improvements shown in connection with his former entry, known as Denver serial 011928, and, if such entry is commuted, shall be entitled to credit for the $200 paid in connection with said Denver entry: Provided, That Seamon first reconvey to the Government the land embraced in said former entry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That Clarence Hazelbaker is hereby granted right of selection of 80 acres of unappropriated nonmineral, unreserved public lands of the United States in lieu of lands described as follows: The west half of the northeast quarter of section 15, township 31 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, for which patent was issued him upon his final homestead certificate, but which it subsequently appeared was included in the land patented to Me-yone-yah, under Indian allotment No. 1287, in the Nez Perces Indian Reservation: Provided, That the land selected shall be of similar general character to that in the original homestead, but if selection is made of land designated or subject to designation under the enlarged homestead act, then selection may be in double the area of the original selecttion, and if selection is made under lands available for entry under the stock-raising homestead law, then selection may be made in area equal to four times the area of the selection authorized heretofore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GANDY offers the following amendment: Page 21, at the end of the bill, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 22. That Rebecca C. Pepper is hereby permitted and given the right to select from lands subject to homestead entry in the United States 80 acres of such land, and upon selection being made the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to execute proper conveyance of title to such land to said Rebecca C. Pepper without requiring her to comply with any of the usual homestead provisions as to residence on or improvement of such land: Provided, That the land selected shall be of similar general character to that in the original homestead, but if selection is made of land designated or subject to designation under the enlarged homestead act, then selection may be in double the area of the original selection, and if selection is made under lands available for entry under the stock-raising homestead law, then selection may be made in area equal to four times the area of the selection authorized heretofore."

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think some explanation should be given. I would like to inquire whether it is the purpose of the members of the committee to keep on adding private claims to this omnibus claims bill. This is really a private claim bill, which had no right on the Public Calendar or on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] has the floor.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, this is the only amendment I have. It is a bill that is on the calendar, and it is on all fours with other bills on the calendar. I yield to my colleague [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this is a bill which by oversight was not called to the attention of the committee when they were making up this omnibus measure. It is a bill introduced by my colleague Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, which passed the Senate in the Sixty-third Congress, and which was favorably reported to this House but failed to get action. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Public Lands in this Congress since the omnibus bill was reported, is on the Private Calendar, and therefore is not eligible to go on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is a bill to give Rebecca C. Pepper the right to make a substitution. On September 28, 1908, she was allowed to make a homestead entry of certain lands, the same, according to the Federal land office records at Marquette, Mich., being open to entry. She went on the land, and several years later, after she had spent about $2,500 on it, it was discovered that the lands were not subject to entry because of an old military bounty land warrant issued in 1866. And having been misled by the books of the land office, and having made these improvements, which she has lost, this bill merely proposes that she may have an opportunity to enter without residence an equal amount of other land in the State of Michigan open to entry; or, if it is of inferior value, that she may be allowed to enter 160 acres instead of 80; and as to all of that the Department of the Interior, both in 1913 and again in January of this year, has made favorable reports, which have been put into the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, it is very apparent that if the latest decision of the Chair with relation to section 14 is to stand, these sections will have to be renumbered; and I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], with whom I had an agreement with relation to section 14, from which he so graciously released me, if now, inasmuch as these sections would have to be renumbered, and inasmuch as there was a misunderstanding as to just what that vote was and how Members should vote on the amendment, he would have any objection at this time to returning to section 14 and taking the vote over again?

Mr. WALSH. I would object to it. We can not be voting on these things twice.

Mr. GANDY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the numbers of the sections be corrected.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk will properly number the sections.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENCH. Insert the following as a new section:

"SEC. 23. That Oliver P. Pring, of Lewiston, Idaho, is hereby granted right of selection of 160 acres of nonmineral unreserved public lands of the United States in lieu of lands purchased by the said Oliver P. Pring, for which patent was issued to Ulysses S. Bartlett upon his final homestead certificate No. 5689, but which it subsequently appeared was partly included in the land patented to Hattie Moody under Indian allotment No. 1711, embracing the following-described land: The east half of lot 4, section 35, township 36 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian: Provided, That the land selected shall be of similar general character to that in the original homestead; but if selection is made of land designated or subject to designation under the enlarged homestead act, then selection may be in double the area of the original selection, and if selection is made under lands available to entry under the stock-raising homestead law, then selection may be made in area equal to four times the area of the selection authorized heretofore."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the House is entitled to an explanation of just what this amendment proposes to do. It proposes to grant to Oliver P. Pring the right to acquire a homestead of 160 acres of the lands described, or in lieu of not being able to acquire a homestead of 160 acres of land available under the general homestead laws, then double that amount under the 320-acre homestead law, or four times that amount under the stock-raising homestead law.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me make my statement first. The facts are these: In 1897 the Government of the United States issued an Indian allotment to one Hattie Moody, which allotment included this particular land, amounting to 5 acres. Through some inaccuracy in keeping the records no notation was made in the matter, and several years later, or about 1908, Ulysses S. Bartlett was permitted to acquire the land under the homestead law, and a patent was issued. Bartlett sold the land. It passed through the hands of one or two innocent purchasers, and finally Mr. Pring acquired it. After Mr. Pring acquired the land and possibly had sold it—I am not sure on that point—it was discovered that there was a conflict as to the land, and that the land that had been patented to Bartlett had been allotted and patented in part to Hattie Moody. Subsequently in the United States district court the patent was canceled, so far as it involved the land in question. This tract of land is down on the river bottom, where it is very valuable. Before the matter was disposed of by the court, Pring went to the Indian woman and offered her $500 an acre for it. In order that you may know how valuable it is, I call your attention to the fact that he offered her $500 an acre for this particular tract. It was refused by her. Apparently there was nothing for the court to do except to cancel the patent. Of course Mr. Pring is the loser. I have his affidavit here showing that he has lost something like $3,500. Now, there seems to be an objection to this bill, because we can not get it out of our heads that an acre of land is a unit of value and a medium of exchange. Gentlemen, if we still lived in an age when we kept books by cutting notches on sticks, there would be reason in that logic, but we have passed by those times. Case after case has been reported in this bill where the land did not involve as great a value and where we have permitted the person who was injured to go and acquire other lands. The last case on the bill is the Hazelbaker case. I suppose that the loss there to the original entryman is not nearly equal to the loss of Mr. Pring, yet, because we could measure it in approximately the same number of acres, no question was made, and we reported favorably on a bill to grant relief to that man. Yet here is a case where the land is valuable, worth $500 an acre nearly 10 years ago, and worth more than that now, but because it does not approximate in area 80 acres or 160 acres we say, "Why, we can not report any relief for him." I can not get any relief from the Claims Committee; I can not get any relief from the Indian Committee; I can not get any relief from the department. There is no place where this man can go for relief except here.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the claimant is not a qualified homestead entryman?

Mr. FRENCH. No; he is not.

Mr. MONDELL. And all you are doing is proposing to make him a qualified homestead entryman?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and let him take a homestead and let him be granted this land in lieu of the land that was erroneously patented to the Indian woman.

Mr. MONDELL. You do not grant him any particular tract?

Mr. FRENCH. No; we grant him the right to acquire a tract.

Mr. MONDELL. All you do is to make this claimant a qualified homestead entryman?

Mr. FRENCH. No; the language is practically the same as the Hazelbaker case, where it is granted to Hazelbaker the right to acquire land in lieu of land erroneously patented to Hazelbaker. Here we grant 160 acres in lieu of 5 acres, and if Pring can not find such land under the general law——

Mr. MONDELL. That is exactly what he could do if you make him a qualified entryman.

Mr. FRENCH. Then he would have to live on the land, prove up, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. MONDELL. All you do is to allow the man to make the entry?

Mr. FRENCH. No; we let him do what we have done in the Hazelbaker case—permit him to acquire land in lieu of it.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. This was not considered by the committee?

Mr. FRENCH. It was considered by the subcommittee and was turned down.

Mr. FERRIS. This provides that the land can be had by the entryman without the payment of any money?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Has the bill ever been reported by any committee?

Mr. FRENCH. I have had it before the committee; the committee did not report it, but turned it down, and the Department of the Interior reported adversely on it.

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman is asking the House to put on an amendment rejected by the committee of the House and reported upon adversely by the Interior Department. What are the particular facts why this amendment ought to be put in the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I suppose, if I have done nothing else I have at least focused attention on the absurd system under which we are working when a claimant having a legitimate claim against the Government has no place to go for relief.

I have introduced a bill that the department may have the power over small claims to adjudicate them, and that in certain cases they may be taken to the Court of Claims on appeal, and in case of large claims they may be taken to the Congress. What are we going to do? The Government was at fault in this case; it issued a patent of the land to an Indian woman and later permitted a homesteader to acquire the same land, which, when Mr. Pring owned it, was worth $500 an acre, and to save himself he was willing to pay the Indian woman $500 an acre and wipe out her claim. We are asking that he may not be allowed to lose the value of the land on account of the blunders of the Government, and there ought to be some way in which to find relief.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state the grounds on which the committee refused to report the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. I think the grounds are the ones that I have indicated, that the amount of the land is only 5 acres. There is one other point, and that is one relied upon in part by the department, that Mr. Pring knew that the land was Indian land before he bought it. He swears positively that he did not. More than that, it is clearly within the land purchased by Pring, according to the description of the patent, and it required action in the Federal court to set aside the title.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What the gentleman says indicates that this case is similar to the one I had.

Mr. FRENCH. With this exception: That this only involves 5 acres of land which are of great value, and in the gentleman's case he had a larger area—80 or 160 acres, I forget which—that could be taken care of by an even exchange. In this case we have only 5 acres, and it is worth more than 160 acres of any other land referred to in the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman and what he is trying to do. There ought to be some way in which the department of the Government that makes serious mistakes involving land can correct these mistakes and make good the loss. In my case there was a schoolteacher of my district who undertook to get a patent on 80 acres of land. It was found to be subject to patent, and she located on it, put improvements on it, and expended $2,500.

Mr. FRENCH. I think we have taken care of that case in this bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When she applied for a patent she was told that it had previously been patented to another party. She asked for redress, and the officials told her that the deed given by the Government is only a quitclaim and that there is no liability whatever on the Government. The only way for us was to come to Congress and ask for relief, and when we do so we are put off for years, as we are in this case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman has had how much time?

Mr. FRENCH. Ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. There are a lot of other cases on the calendar. Does not the gentleman think he has had a fair chance to make his statement?

Mr. FRENCH. When it comes to that, I have occupied little time of the House, but I am willing to recognize the fact that other Members are much interested in other bills, and I think, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I need to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add a new section, as follows:

"That I. N. Ellis be permitted to purchase from the United States at the price of $1.25 per acre, lots 6 and 7 of section 3, and lots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 of section 10, township 8 north, range 21 west, of the St. Stephens meridian survey, in Lawrence County, Miss., containing 234.82 acres: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to deprive Mack and John P. Sutton of any rights they may have under their pending application to make entry of portions of said lands under the homestead laws: Provided further, That application for the purchase must be filed within six months from the passage of this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, this is a measure that has been duly considered by the Public Lands Committee and afterwards referred to a special committee, and a hearing was had on the same. The special committee found that the bill should be enacted into law and reported it back to the Public Lands Committee with a favorable report. The bill is now on the Private Calendar. This is a case in which a party named Ellis and those through whom he received title from have had undisputed possession of the property for a period of 50 years. In 1916 the Government made a new survey, and in this new survey they found that this land that this man had been paying taxes on for a period of 50 years was not included in that which he originally obtained, and so the Public Lands Committee and the subcommittee, after considering the merits of the matter, reported this bill favorably to the House. It is on the Private Calendar and for that reason I wish to have it added to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin make the point of order?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. It has been duly considered by one of the large committees in the House and has been considered by a special committee. The Secretary of the Interior has reported favorably upon it. There is no controversy about it, and even the attorneys——

Mr. STAFFORD. Which committee reported favorably upon it?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The Public Lands Committee. And even the attorneys representing the two contending parties have agreed that the bill should be enacted into law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, after the House has adopted an amendment which the committee did not favorably report I do not think that it is consistent to make the point of order on one upon which it did favorably report. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GANDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, eight of the items included in the bill just passed are on the Private Calendar as individual bills, and I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the table, the bills being H. R. 4239, H. R. 1672, H. R. 13109, H. R. 3786, H. R. 12122, H. R. 10403, H. R. 11919, and H. R. 6052.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bills be enumerated on the Private Calendar, which have been incorporated within the bill just passed as amendments, do lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the bill passed and upon my services in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, ALLEGHENY COUNTY, PA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13427) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River, at or near the borough of Wilson, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of nagivation, at or near the borough of Wilson, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

CANAL CONNECTING LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11579) to authorize the appointment of a board of engineers to make a preliminary location, survey, and plans for a canal connecting the waters of Lake Erie and the Ohio River on the line of the Miami and Erie Canal from Toledo to Cincinnati, Ohio, and from a point near Defiance, Ohio, to a point in the southerly end of Lake Michigan, and to estimate the cost thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice and be placed at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice to go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVIL RIGHTS OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13185) to amend paragraph 1 of section 200 of article 2 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would explain the necessity for this now.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, it is recommended by the Attorney General's Department, and until the war is actually ended there is some necessity for it, according to his statement. Technically the war is not over and probably will not be for several months, and perhaps more than that.

Mr. MANN. We have gotten along without it until the war was actually over, and what is the necessity for it now?

Mr. STEELE. The only change made by this amendment is to protect the rights of the United States so that they shall not be compelled to give an indemnifying bond. That is the only purpose of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 1 of section 200 of article 2 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 200. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest, and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require as a condition before judgment is entered that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act: Provided, That in cases in which the United States is the plaintiff no indemnity bond shall be required, and court fees incurred by attorneys appointed to protect the interests of absent defendants, together with such attorneys' fees as the court may direct, shall be paid by the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out "together with such attorneys' fees as the court may direct."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there obejction to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Committee amendment: Page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out "together with such attorneys' fees as the court may direct."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13034) to validate and confirm certain erroneously allowed entries in the State of Minnesota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where Chippewa Indian lands in Minnesota, ceded under the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642), were assessed under the State drainage laws prior to the opening of the lands to entry, where the lands were subsequently opened to entry and were thereafter sold under the said drainage laws, and where cash entries for the lands were subsequently made as though authorized by the act of Congress approved May 20, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 169), such erroneously allowed entries, if otherwise regular, be, and the same are hereby, validated and confirmed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAR WORKERS OF AMERICA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13072) to incorporate the War Workers of America.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object to this bill. There is another of similar tenor on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, TEXAS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13629) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly, I will withhold my objection.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a very brief statement to the Members of the House with regard to this bill. Judge Meeks, who is the presiding judge of this district, is now in a sanitarium in California. He has been out of the district much of the time for the past two years. His health began to fail about 10 years ago, and since that time his health has been in a precarious condition. Last fall he had a stroke, and under the advice of his physician left the district. He was unconscious for a while and his physician states that he will not be able to return for at least a year and a half, and when he does return he will not be able to do the heavy work of the district. There is now pending in that district about a thousand cases. There has not been tried in that district but one civil case since last summer. The district is composed of about 99 counties, something in the neighborhood of 70,000 square miles of territory. It embraces the cities of Dallas and Fort Worth, 32 miles apart, which have a total population of more than a quarter of a million people. There is in this district about a million and a quarter of people. Now, to add to the difficulties of that situation, the judge of the eastern district, which is an adjoining district, is in a sanitarium now at El Paso. This bill was prepared by the Department of Justice and was introduced at the request of the Attorney General. The Attorney General came before the Committee on the Judiciary, having this bill in charge, and urged upon us that the situation obtaining in that district amounts practically to a denial of justice. Now, I am going to read a very brief statement which indicates some of the difficulties we are up against——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman would yield—I do not want to interrupt any statement the gentleman desires to make—but in view of the very unhealthy climate of Texas in reference to Federal judges I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SUMNERS. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, pending that request, I desire to ask the Chair with reference to a parliamentary matter. A bill identical in purpose but very slightly different in language, has passed the Senate and is now on the Speaker's table. I desire to have the Senate bill substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent——

Mr. WALSH. What is the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. MANN. We do not know it is to be considered at all if the request is granted. The gentleman, I understood, asked unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of considering the House bill.

Mr. SUMNERS. That was the request I desired to make.

Mr. MANN. Is the Senate bill at the desk?

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes; I have sent it up. It has passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request the gentleman makes is that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. The Committee of the Whole can not substitute one bill for another. The House might do so.

Mr. SUMNERS. What I desire is that we may now consider the Senate bill, which is identical in purpose with the House bill.

Mr. MANN. It is not identical, but——

Mr. SUMNERS. And I desire to submit that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the Senate bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5342) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas, who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation and allowance as the present judge of said district.

SEC. 2 That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the northern district of Texas senior in commission, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill of similar tenor will lie on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. SUMNERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 5342) was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, JANESVILLE, WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5192) for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near South Jackson Street, in the city of Janesville, Wis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Janesville, in the State of Wisconsin, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the point where South Jackson Street, in said city of Janesville, connects with said Rock River, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAFAYETTE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4957) to establish the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, personally I have no objection to creating the Mount Desert Park or the Sieur de Monts National Monument, situated on Mount Desert Island, as a national park, but I question the propriety of giving the name of Lafayette to a small monument such as this, rather than having Lafayette's name attached to some large national park which might more fittingly express the obligation of our Government to that great revolutionary patriot.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, if there were any larger park which the gentleman desired to have honored by this name, I can see force in his objection, but there is none, and there are many reasons why this is an appropriate name. This land which is the subject of this bill and is of about 5,000 acres in area now, and is to be increased by gifts to the Government to 10,000 or 20,000 acres, has very interesting historical relations with the French, having been discovered by Champlain in the very early part of the seventeenth century.

The people interested in this measure desired to change the name to Lafayette National Park. While I personally believe that the name of Mount Desert National Park might be more appropriate and more distinctly local, I deferred in my judgment to that of others interested in this matter. For that reason I hope the gentleman will not insist on his suggestion that the name be changed by amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. It should also be noted in the statement of Secretary Lane that this proposed park is now the third among all national-park areas in the number of people visiting it annually, something like 50,000.

Mr. PETERS. I think it is the second, if the gentleman will permit me, in the number of people visiting it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this should be named "Lafayette National Park" will you guarantee it will not be used by suffragettes for burning various things, which might cause a great forest fire?

Mr. PETERS. I wish to say that our suffragettes are not of the incendiary variety, and besides Maine voted 2 to 1 against suffrage about a year ago. So I do not think there is any danger along that line.

Mr. MANN. But Lafayette Park is used for that purpose almost daily, and everybody now knows where Lafayette Park is.

Mr. DALLINGER. You ought to change the name of the latter park to some other.

Mr. MANN. When Lafayette Park is mentioned—and nobody will say Lafayette National Park—there will occur to the mind of everybody in the country the front of the White House, where the suffragettes are engaged in burning some kind of a proclamation, trying to annoy President Wilson, or doing something else.

Mr. PETERS. As soon as we get suffrage all those objections will disappear entirely.

Mr. MANN. It will still be known as "Lafayette Park."

Mr. PETERS. But the value of the objection will cease.

Mr. MANN. Here is the name of a well-known park fronting the White House, across the Avenue from the President's Mansion, and now they want to name a park up in Maine and call it "Lafayette National Park." The word "National" will not be used, except officially, and no one will take the trouble to hunt it up and locate it. Everybody will think of Lafayette Park down here in Washington.

Mr. CRAMTON. I know, as the gentleman has stated, that it is called down here "Lafayette Park," but on the books is it not called Jackson Park?

Mr. MANN. I think that may be so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman will find that that is so.

Mr. PETERS. I think there will be no confusion in the minds of people visiting the area in question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I agree with the mover of the bill that the name "Mount Desert" would be more appropriate.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

Mr. STAFFORD. All of us know the location of Mount Desert, and I am not going to enter an objection to the consideration of the bill just because I think the name of Lafayette is not fittingly connected with this small island park.
